That Lieut. George S. Dyer, United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a decoration of a Knight Companion of the Royal Order of Kalakaua, conferred upon him by the King of the Hawaiian Islands on December 5, 1890, in recognition of his services to the King upon the occasion of his visit to California;

That Frank Laviere, of the U. S. S. Charleston, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a medal of honor conferred upon him by the Queen of the Hawaiian Islands, in recognition of his services to the late King;

That Capt. George C. Remey, United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a decoration of a Knight Commander of the Royal Order of Kalakaua, conferred upon him by the King of the Hawaiian Islands on December 5, 1890, in recognition of his services to the King upon the occasion of his visit to California;

That Medical Inspector George W. Woods, United States Navy, be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept a decoration of the Royal Order of Kalakaua, conferred upon him by the Queen of the Hawaiian Islands in recognition of his services to the late King.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ENGROSSMENT AND ENROLLMENT OF BILLS.

Mr. DALZELL submitted a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That during the last six days of the present session of Congress the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions by printing, as provided by act of Congress approved March 2, 1895, may be suspended, and said bills and joint resolutions may be written by hand.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the law provides for this proceeding, and that it is necessary for the transaction of business.

The resolution was agreed to.

MEMORIAL BUILDING, DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

Mr. MORSE. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10023) setting apart a plot of public ground in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for memorial purposes, under the auspices of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Be it enacted, etc., That there be set apart for the permanent use of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, for the erection of a memorial building thereon, a portion of the reservation or public ground owned by the United States, in the city of Washington, D. C., described as follows, namely: A plot 200 feet square at the intersection of Fourteenth street and B street, bounded on the north by B street and on the east by Fourteenth street. Said land shall be used only for the purposes of a memorial building to commemorate the services and perpetuate the memory of the heroes of the Revolutionary war, to be erected and owned by the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, and when it ceases to be used for that purpose it shall revert to the United States and all rights hereby granted shall determine and cease.

Mr. MORSE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the plans and specifications for such building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury before the construction thereof shall be commenced, and that said building shall be completed within ten years from the passage of this act.

Mr. BLUE. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. MORSE. I ask that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. BLUE. I object.

Mr. MORSE and Mr. BLUE were appointed tellers; and the question being taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, it was seconded; there being—ayes 131, noes 8.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill with the amendment.

Mr. MORSE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. This identical bill, without the amendment, has passed the Senate. Is it in order now to move to substitute the Senate bill with the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the gentleman presented a Senate bill.

Mr. MORSE. No, sir. The two bills are identical; but I presented the House bill with an amendment which has been deemed necessary to meet the objections of certain gentlemen.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] if he has offered the amendment proposed by the committee of this House?

Mr. MORSE. Not exactly, but substantially.

Mr. HEPBURN. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman that there is a very material difference.

Mr. MORSE. The bill as reported to the House came from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. That was the bill that was under consideration by the House. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, if that is necessary, to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill as amended.

Mr. BLUE. I object.

Mr. MORSE. Then I ask a vote on the House bill as amended.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. BLUE. I desire to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that a House bill identical, I think, with that of the Senate was introduced and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. They reported the bill back, recommending its passage, with a very important amendment, an amendment differing very materially from the one proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE].

Mr. MORSE. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to correct him. The Senate bill was not referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEPBURN. Well, I may have been mistaken about the committee; but the point I want to make is that a committee of this House thought that the bill ought to be guarded, and they have proposed an amendment. The gentleman has not seen fit to adopt that amendment or to offer it.

Again, I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this organization is not the original Daughters of the Revolution. This is an offshoot from that, a sort of rebellion against it, which has not succeeded as was expected. It is not the great order that we are familiar with, but it is a sort of side show growing out of it. The real society is the Daughters of the Revolution. Three or four years ago certain ladies, as I am informed, who were dissatisfied with a certain election, saw fit to bolt the society and established this society. Now, this is a lingering, sickly institution, and I think if we are going to recognize a society of the Daughters of the Revolution, a very proper one, perhaps, to be recognized in this way, we ought to take the real society and not the bogus one, and we ought, if we make a grant, to make it with proper limitations, such as the committee of this House felt to be necessary.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield for a question and a statement? I think my colleague is mistaken as to the relative standing of the societies. The society asking this has some 18,000 membership, while the one he refers to has but 2,000.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. HULL. I am not mistaken. I am stating what I know.

Mr. HEPBURN. The society that was in session here a few days ago was the Society of the Daughters of the Revolution.

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. There were 2,000 people here in attendance upon that.

Mr. HULL. And they are the ones who are asking this.

Mr. HEPBURN. I beg your pardon.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] is correct about that. They are the ones who are asking this.

Mr. HULL. They are the ones who are asking this.

Mr. HEPBURN. This society which is asking this donation from the House is an offshoot from the other.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Whatever it may be, it is the one just in session in this city.

Mr. HULL. It is the one now in session, which overshadows all the others.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield back the time granted to me by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I should like to ask a question, to determine my vote on this bill. Is it the Society of the Daughters of the Revolution that has just been in session in this city that is referred to by this bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. That is not my understanding.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; it is.

Mr. SPALDING. Yes; it is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that I was personally waited upon by a committee of the society of ladies that was recently in session in this city, and which may be still in session. I do not know anything about this title of either society, but this society in session in Washington is the society intended to be covered by this bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I may be in error about it. This is the point I am making. This society here is an offshoot, or the bolters, as we would say if they were men in connection with a political party. They have set up a new society of their own.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I say to the gentleman——

Mr. POWERS. May I ask the gentleman if it is not true that these two organizations have practically come together and settled their differences?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know.

Mr. POWERS. I am told so by some of the members who are present in the city at this time.

Mr. HEPBURN. They should let us know before we make this national grant.

Mr. POWERS. I would say to the gentleman that the general organization now holding its sessions in this city is very far from being a sickly organization. It has a strong, large delegation of ladies from all over this country, and if he could see those ladies as I have in the last few days where I reside, he would come to the conclusion that they were far from being sickly.

Mr. MORSE. I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Mr. Speaker, I introduced this bill, and consequently have some knowledge as to the parties for whose benefit it was introduced. The bill was introduced in behalf of the Daughters of the American Revolution, an organization the continental congress of which, the general congress of which, met in this city about a week ago, and which is still in session. It is an organization comprising 16,000 to 18,000 members, scattered throughout every State in this Union, with a subordinate organization in every State and Territory except Alaska. It has a national charter granted by the Congress of the United States; and one of the duties imposed upon it is that it shall report to the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution such matters as he may deem proper for publication. This may be an offshoot of some other organization, but if so it has far outgrown it. The child is far stronger than its mother.

Mr. HULL. Swallowed it up.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. And has practically swallowed it up. I understand, as the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POWERS] has stated, that negotiations have been in progress for some time, and that they are practically consummated, leading to the merging or union of the two societies, the Daughters of the Revolution and the Daughters of the American Revolution. There are two societies of Sons of the American Revolution, and the relative strength of these two organizations is entirely different from the relative strength of the two organizations of ladies.

Now, this organization is one of great strength, and has got a fund already raised for this building. It has a national charter, granted by Congress, and the obligation is imposed upon it to report to a national officer, and it simply asks that this little piece of land, not occupied for anything else, may be set apart for their use, while they use it, for memorial purposes; simply that they may erect their building, of colonial architecture, of proper design, intended as a museum, where they may preserve those things that illustrate the character and manner of life of the Revolutionary period. They desire in this city of Washington, full of memorials of the late war, to build one single memorial building, without a cent of money from the Government, simply to perpetuate the memory of the fathers of the Revolution. They ask no title; they simply ask the privilege of occupying this unoccupied land just so long as they occupy it for memorial purposes and no longer.

Mr. MORSE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, just one minute. If my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will notice, this is the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution. My understanding is that there are two societies—the Daughters of the Revolution and Daughters of the American Revolution. The latter, an offshoot, perhaps, of the former, has grown about ten times the size of the original parent. Now, their differences have been adjusted, and now they have agreed upon formation into a united society, making a new membership of both of the old societies. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the name?

Mr. SHERMAN. The National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman is satisfied as to the facts in regard to this union of the societies?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am; certainly.

Mr. MORSE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON].

Mr. WASHINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to take any of the time of the House, except simply to corroborate the statement made by my good friend from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE] who preceded me, and to add that the differences that have existed between these two societies, one being the parent and the other the daughter, are rapidly approaching adjustment. And I might further add, in order to satisfy some little objection I have heard upon the floor, that this land is now public property, and the agreement with this patriotic organization in the bill is so guarded that if it ceases to be used for the purposes intended by this bill the ground and the improvements thereon revert to the Government. I hope there will be no objection to the passage of this meritorious measure.

Mr. MORSE. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he is willing, instead of the amendment he has offered, to substitute for that the amendment of the committee. If he will do that, after the statement made by the gentleman from New York, I have no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I would simply say that I have conferred with some gentlemen on this floor, and it was found that the amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia were so drastic that practically they would destroy the bill. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] would see if he had time to read the report.

Now, this building is to cost $100,000; and it has to be completed within a year. Gentlemen would not agree to that; that is unreasonable. They have raised a large amount of this money, but still have a large amount to raise. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHARLES W. STONE] has just told us that this fund is now in readiness.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Oh, no. I said that $25,000 was in hand.

Mr. MORSE. If the gentleman from Iowa will look into the matter, he will be satisfied that the amendment I have offered covers all his objections. I ask that that amendment be read one more.

The SPEAKER. The amendment may be read in the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That the plans and specifications for such building shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury before the construction thereof can be commenced, and the said building shall be completed within ten years from the passage of this act.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the amendment proposed by the committee of this House.

Mr. BLUE. It may be read in my time, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia was read, as follows:

Provided, That before the construction of any such building upon said land shall be commenced pursuant to the right herein conferred the plans and specifications therefor shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided also, That the cost of said building shall not be less than $300,000, and also that said society shall furnish to the Secretary of the Treasury satisfactory proof of its ability to complete said building in accordance therewith: And provided, That the construction of said building shall be commenced within one year from the passage of this act and completed within five years.

Mr. BLUE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this measure, not because this is a patriotic society; nor because I object to the erection of such a building or to the establishment of such institutions. But the capital city of this nation has been laid out on a general plan, with a parking system equal to that of any city in the world, and the chief beauty and glory of the capital of the Republic of the United States in coming time will be the adornment of the breathing places that are a part of this great plan. That plan ought not to be marred. This is merely furnishing a precedent for other encroachments which will eventually follow, and if this patriotic institution is to be permitted to appropriate a portion of one of the public parks, worth perhaps $150,000, other institutions, equally deserving, equally patriotic, will in time insist upon the same privilege. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, if this Government is to be compelled to donate a site for this building, I would very much prefer to vote an appropriation for the purchase of a suitable lot upon which the building could be erected than appropriate a part of one of the parks and thus mar the beauty of this splendid and glorious capital. I am against the bill for that reason.

I am against the bill as it now stands for a further reason. There is no good ground for the opposition which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] makes to the amendments proposed by the committee. If a portion of this public park, within the shadow of the Smithsonian Institution, in a beautiful portion of this great city, is to be occupied by a building belonging to this society, is it not wise to vest some executive officer of this Government with authority to pass upon the suitableness of the plans and specifications, so that the marring of the public grounds shall be as slight as possible?

Mr. MORSE. That is in my amendment.

Mr. BLUE. I did not so understand it.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. Yes; it is in the amendment.

Mr. BLUE. I think the gentleman is mistaken, and that he will find on examination of the amendment that it is not clearly stated; but if it is there, that disposes of so much of the objection. But, Mr. Speaker, what objection can there be to requiring this society to make a showing of its ability to construct this building? What objection can there be to fixing some reasonable limit of time for the commencement of this building? Is the Government to be required to turn over to this society for a period of ten years the exclusive right to use a portion of a public park under an option? Further than that, it has been disclosed in the discussion of this question that this society which seeks this donation was, at one time at least, divided into two rival branches.

Now, there is no assurance that this temporary coalition is to last, and perhaps long before the ten years have expired there will be two adverse wings of the society, each claiming the rights which this bill is intended to confer. Gentlemen say that the bill provides only for the "use" of this public square. Ah, but it is a perpetual use, and that means, in substance, that whatever may be the wording, however it may be explained that we give a mere "use," it really is equivalent to the conveyance of a fee simple, subject to forfeiture only when the society ceases to use the land for the particular purpose named in the bill. Mr. Speaker, I trust that this House will look into the matter well before voting a portion of one of the public parks of this city for this purpose without any sufficient restriction as to the time within which the building shall be constructed and without any sufficient regulation as to the character of the building that is to be erected there. But, if it is the sense of this House to pass this bill, then I trust that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] will give an opportunity for reasonable amendment before the vote is taken.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MORSE. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN].

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Speaker, I heartily agree with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] in his general proposition. I have always opposed taking public parks for public buildings. I believe that much of the beauty of this city consists in its beautiful parks. Distributed as they are all over the city, these small parks are more useful in the beautification of the city than if the same amount of land were aggregated in one location, which would be less convenient for the mass of the people.

But, Mr. Speaker, this is not a proposition to erect a public building for the use of the Government. We place in the public parks equestrian statues; we place there monuments to commemorate the great dead of our country, who gave their lives for its salvation. This building is to be a monument to the men of the Revolution, the men who for seven years fought to establish the Government under whose protecting shield we live to-day, and not only to establish free government, but to establish a home and a fortress for freedom upon the face of the globe.

If I had time, it would, of course, be easy to picture the great services and sacrifices and the heroic achievements of those men that have cast luster upon this great nation. Now, a patriotic society formed of patriotic women of this country are raising a fund (a part of which has been raised) to erect a building which shall be a monument to commemorate the achievements of the Revolution and which shall stimulate the patriotism of the younger generation that is growing up to-day and generations to come.

Why, sir, it is no new thing to do this. Every civilized nation on the globe has taken some means to commemorate the great achievements of those who have deserved well of their country. Greece did it; Rome followed her example. The people of those nations were not willing that the achievements of their great men should be recorded only in musty volumes upon the shelves of the student. They wanted those achievements brought before the eyes of the people in brass and stone, so that they might be reminded of the virtues of their great men and emulate their example.

While I agree with the gentleman from Kansas that as a general principle the parks should be preserved, I look upon the present proposition not as one to erect a building for public use, but rather a measure for erecting a building which shall serve as a monument and adorn any park of this city rather than mar it.

It is proposed to erect this building at the corner of Fourteenth street, immediately behind those shabby old buildings now there; and I have the hope that if we should put there such a monument as this building will be, it will have some influence in finally causing the removal of those old buildings, so that we may more conveniently have access to those public grounds.

My friend from Kansas [Mr. BLUE] wants to limit very strictly the time within which this building shall be erected. Why, sir, if gentlemen will look into the history of our public buildings, they will find that it would be very unreasonable to limit the time to less than ten years. How long has the post-office building down here been in course of construction? Why, sir, almost as long ago as I can remember, I was somewhat conspicuous in getting a bill passed by this House appropriating money to erect that post-office building. It has been growing and growing—not so fast as a hop vine in summer, but we hope that in the course of this generation it will be completed. My venerable friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW], who occupied a distinguished position in this body almost a generation ago, reminds me of the fact that we were thirty years building the Washington Monument. And now, when a patriotic society of the women of this country, asking nothing of the Government in the form of money, propose to expend the contributions raised by themselves upon a monument to the men of the Revolution, you want to restrict them as to the time within which the building should be completed. You want to compel them to commence the building within one year. Why, sir, it was two years after the bill passed this House appropriating money for the post-office building in this city before the first blow was struck.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MORSE to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

EVENING SESSION DISPENSED WITH.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the session for this evening be dispensed with, and that the present session continue until the House determines to adjourn.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

COMMON CARRIERS AND THEIR EMPLOYEES.

Mr. ERDMAN moved to suspend the rules and pass, with the amendment of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill (H. R. 268) concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of this act shall apply to any common carrier or carriers and their officers, agents, and employees, except masters of vessels and seamen, as defined in section 4612, Revised Statutes of the United States, engaged in the transportation of passengers or property wholly by railroad, or partly by railroad and partly by water, when both are used under a common control, management, or arrangement, for a continuous carriage or shipment from one State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, to any other State or Territory of the United States, or the District of Columbia, or from any place in the United States to an adjacent foreign country, or from any place in the United States through a foreign country to any other place in the United States.

The term "railroad" as used in this act shall include all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease; and the term "transportation" shall include all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage.

The term "employees" as used in this act shall include all persons actually engaged in any capacity in train operation or car service of any description, and notwithstanding that the cars upon or in which they are employed may be held and operated by the carrier under lease or other contract. In every such case the carrier shall be responsible for the acts and defaults of such employees in the same manner and to the same extent as if said cars were owned by it and said employees directly employed by it, and any provisions to the contrary of any such lease or other contract shall be binding only as between the parties thereto and shall not affect the obligations of said carrier, either to the public or to the private parties concerned.

The wages paid by carriers subject to this act for any service rendered or to be rendered in the transportation aforesaid, or in connection therewith, or for the receiving, delivering, storage, and handling of such property, and the rules and regulations governing such employees, shall be reasonable and just. This provision shall not affect the right to make contracts for such wages not in contravention of any of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That whenever a controversy concerning wages, hours of labor, or conditions of employment shall arise between a carrier subject to this act and the employees of such carrier, seriously interrupting or threatening to interrupt the business of said carrier, the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Commissioner of Labor shall, upon the request of either party to the controversy with all practicable expedition, put themselves in communication with the parties to such controversy and shall use their best efforts, by mediation and conciliation, to amicably settle the same; and if such efforts shall be unsuccessful shall at once endeavor to bring about an arbitration of said controversy in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That whenever a controversy shall arise between a carrier subject to this act and the employees of such carrier which can not be settled by mediation and conciliation in the manner provided in the preceding section, said controversy may be submitted to the arbitration of a board of three persons, who shall be chosen in the manner following: One shall be named by the carrier or employer directly interested; the other shall be named by the labor organization to which the employees directly interested belong, or, if they belong to more than one, by that one of them which specially represents employees of the same grade and class and engaged in services of the same nature as said employees so directly interested: Provided, however, That when a controversy involves and affects the interests of two or more classes and grades of employees belonging to different labor organizations, such arbitrator shall be agreed upon and designated by the concurrent action of all such labor organizations. The two thus chosen shall select the third commissioner of arbitration; but, in the event of their failure to name such arbitrator within forty-eight hours after their first meeting, the third arbitrator shall be named by the commissioners named in the preceding section. The submission shall be in writing, shall be signed by the employer and by the labor organization representing the employees, shall state the questions to be decided, and shall contain appropriate provisions by which the respective parties shall stipulate, as follows:

First. That pending the arbitration the status existing immediately prior to the dispute shall not be changed.

Second. That the award shall be filed in the clerk's office of the circuit court of the United States for any district wherein the employer carries on business, and shall be final and conclusive upon both parties, unless set aside for error of law apparent on the record.

Third. That the respective parties to the award will each faithfully execute the same, and that the same may be specifically enforced in equity so far as the powers of a court of equity permit, except that no person shall be punished for his failure to comply with the award as for contempt of court.

Fourth. That employees dissatisfied with the award shall not by reason of such dissatisfaction quit the service of the employer before the expiration of three months from and after the making of such award, without giving thirty days' notice in writing of their intention so to quit. Nor shall the employer dissatisfied with such award dismiss any employee or employees on account of such dissatisfaction before the expiration of three months from and after the making of such award, without giving thirty days' notice in writing of his intention so to discharge.

Fifth. That said award shall continue in force as between the parties thereto for the period of one year after the same shall go into practical operation, and no new arbitration upon the same subject between the same employer and the same class of employees shall be had until the expiration of said one year if the award is not set aside as provided in section 4.

SEC. 4. That the award being filed in the clerk's office of a circuit court of the United States as hereinbefore provided shall go into practical operation, and judgment shall be entered thereon accordingly; at the expiration of ten days from such filing, unless within such ten days either party shall file exceptions thereto for matter of law apparent upon the record, in which case said award shall go into practical operation and judgment be entered accordingly when such exceptions shall have been finally disposed of either by said circuit court or on appeal therefrom.

At the expiration of ten days from the decision of the circuit court upon exceptions taken to said award, as aforesaid, judgment shall be entered in accordance with said decision unless during ten days either party shall appeal therefrom to the circuit court of appeals. In such case only such portion of the record shall be transmitted to the appellate court as is necessary to the proper understanding and consideration of the questions of law presented by said exceptions and to be decided.

The determination of said circuit court of appeals upon said questions shall be final, and, being certified by the clerk thereof to said circuit court, judgment pursuant thereto shall thereupon be entered by said circuit court.

If exceptions to an award are finally sustained, judgment shall be entered setting aside the award. But in such case the parties may agree upon a judgment to be entered disposing of the subject-matter of the controversy, which judgment, when entered, shall have the same force and effect as judgment entered upon an award.

SEC. 5. That every agreement of arbitration under this act shall be acknowledged by the parties before a notary public or clerk of a district or circuit court of the United States, and when so acknowledged shall be delivered to the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, who shall at once cause a notice in writing to be served upon the arbitrators fixing a time and place for a meeting of the arbitrators.

If an agreement of arbitration shall be entered into conforming to this act, except that it shall be executed by employees individually instead of by a labor organization as their representative, the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Commissioner of Labor shall decline to call a meeting of arbitrators thereunder unless, upon evidence satisfactory to them, it be shown that the employees signing the submission represent or include a majority of all employees in the service of the same employer and of the same grade and class, and that an award pursuant to said submission can justly be regarded as binding upon all such employees.

SEC. 6. That during the pendency of arbitration under this act it shall not be lawful for the employer, party to such arbitration, to discharge the employees, parties thereto, except for inefficiency, violation of law, or neglect of duty; nor for the organization representing such employees to order, nor for the employees to unite in, aid, or abet strikes or boycotts against said employer; nor, during a period of three months after an award under such an arbitration, for such employer to discharge any such employees, except for the causes aforesaid, without giving thirty days' written notice of an intent so to discharge; nor for any of such employees, during a like period, to quit the service of said employer without just cause, or without giving to said employer thirty days' written notice of an intent so to do; nor for such organization representing such employees to order, counsel, or advise otherwise. Any violation of this section shall subject the offending party to liability for damages.

SEC. 7. That in every incorporation under the provisions of chapter 567 of the United States Statutes of 1885 and 1886 it must be provided in the articles of incorporation and in the constitution, rules, and by-laws that a member shall cease to be such by participating in or by instigating force or violence against persons or property during strikes, lockouts, or boycotts, or by seeking to prevent others from working through violence, threats, or intimidations; but members of such incorporations shall not be personally liable for the acts, debts, or obligations of the corporations, nor shall such corporations be liable for the acts of members or others in violation of the provisions of this section; and such corporations may appear by designated representatives before the board created by this act, or in any suits or proceedings for or against such corporations or their members in any of the Federal courts.

SEC. 8. That whenever receivers appointed by Federal courts are in the possession and control of railroads, the employees upon such railroads shall have the right to be heard in such courts upon all questions affecting the terms and conditions of their employment, though the officers and representatives of their associations, whether incorporated or unincorporated, and no reduction of wages shall be made by such receivers without the authority of the court therefor after due notice to such employees.

SEC. 9. That any employer subject to the provisions of this act and any officer, agent, or receiver of such employer who shall require any employee, or any person seeking employment, as a condition of such employment, to enter into an agreement, either written or verbal, not to become or remain a member of any labor corporation, association, or organization; or shall threaten any employee with loss of employment, or shall unjustly discriminate against any employee because of his membership in such a labor corporation, association, or organization; or who shall require any employee or any person seeking employment, as a condition of such employment, to enter into a contract whereby such employee or applicant for employment shall agree to contribute to any fund for charitable, social, or beneficial purposes; to release such employer from legal liability for any personal injury by reason of any benefit received from such fund beyond the proportion of the benefit arising from the employer's contribution to such fund; or who shall, after having discharged an employee, unlawfully attempt or conspire to prevent such employee from obtaining other employment, is hereby declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in the district in which such offense was committed, shall be punished for each offense by a fine of not less than $100 and not more than $1,000.

SEC. 10. That a sufficient sum of money to pay the traveling and other necessary and proper expenses of the arbitrators appointed and serving under this act, and to pay all other necessary and proper expenses of any conciliation or arbitration had hereunder, to be audited and allowed by the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, is hereby appropriated, for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1895, and June 30, 1896, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 11. That the act to create boards of arbitration or commission for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations and other common carriers engaged in interstate or territorial transportation of property or persons and their employees, approved October 1, 1888, and the provision contained in section 7 of an act approved June 13, 1888, "directing the Commissioner of Labor to investigate the causes of and facts relating to all controversies and disputes between employers and employees as they may occur, and which may interfere with the welfare of the people of the different States," are hereby repealed.

Mr. DOCKERY. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. ERDMAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER. There are now forty minutes for debate, of which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] will control twenty and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ERDMAN] twenty.

Mr. ERDMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill providing for the adjustment of labor difficulties arising between interstate carriers of commerce and their employees. It provides, in the first place, that it shall affect only those who are interested in carrying interstate commerce. It is a bill that passed the House in the Fifty-third Congress unanimously. It was agreed upon by the chiefs of the labor organizations and by representatives of railroad organizations, or persons who had supervised railroad organizations, and is understood to be satisfactory to all parties concerned. It is the same principle that is contained in the St. Louis and Chicago platforms.

It provides that in all difficulties between railroad carriers and their employees the Commissioner of Labor and the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall endeavor by mediation and conciliation to procure an adjustment, and if they can not do it, then it provides for the voluntary arbitration of the difference. The purpose is to have arbitration before violence, before a blow is struck. After that, it has been found usually too late to arbitrate. It provides that the railroad people may designate one arbitrator, and that the employees may designate the other, the third to be chosen by the two, and if they fail to agree, then by the Commissioner of Labor and the Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It provides that these arbitrators may hear and determine the dispute, and when they have submitted to this agreement, pending that, that the railroad company will not discharge, and that the railroad employees will not quit work. The purpose is to prevent strikes, and to have by mediation and conciliation at first, or in the event of the failure of that, then by arbitration, a determination of the dispute between them. It is not compulsory in any sense. It is not selling the freedom of the men, as some who have opposed the bill have thought.

The Commissioner of Labor, Mr. Carroll D. Wright, recently addressed a letter to a gentleman, in which he says of this bill:

Instead of contemplating involuntary servitude, the bill, it seems to me, places labor and capital on an equality as to the enforcement of contracts; and furthermore—and I am willing to admit that this is the chief reason for my liking the bill—it gives labor organizations an opportunity to dignify their bodies in ways that have not been open to them heretofore. It gives them the right to be heard in courts upon all questions affecting the conditions and terms of their employment through the officers and representatives of their associations, whether incorporated or unincorporated. It was upon this point that the Dallas matter turned. The judge did not follow the suggestions of the Attorney-General, however. The bill provides that no reduction of wages shall be made by receivers without the authority of the courts therefor after due notice to such employees. Practically, this is a bill of rights that the workingmen, so far as railways are concerned, can not claim at present. The bill, further, is a new charter for workingmen, for it restrains employers subject to its provisions from requiring employees as a condition of employment to enter into obnoxious agreements, such as not to become members of labor associations or organizations. Nor can members of organizations be discriminated against because of their membership, and it leaves men to exercise their own free will as to charitable, social, or beneficial auxiliaries of railway corporations, and it furthermore restrains employers from attempting to injure employees through black lists. All these things, it seems to me, commend the bill, not only to the members of the great railway organizations, but to organized and unorganized labor everywhere, and instead of subjecting them to any kind of servitude, whether voluntary or involuntary, it gives them rights which are questioned, at least, at the present time.

I am, sincerely yours, CARROLL D. WRIGHT.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second on this bill in order that the gentleman in charge of it [Mr. ERDMAN] might make an explanation to the House. I know nothing myself as to the provisions of the bill. I now yield such time to the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE] as he may desire.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill because I see in it the beginning of a most dangerous surrender of the individual liberty of all American laborers. To-day we invade the liberty of laborers employed or to be employed, either directly or indirectly, in interstate commerce. To-morrow the principle and the restriction will be applied to other classes, and so it will proceed by stages until all laborers will be included in judicial serfdom. This bill extends to other occupations the form of involuntary servitude now enforced in the occupation of seamanship. It extends the principle of industrial slavery now prevailing in the merchant marine to interstate (inland) commerce.

It is said by the author of the bill that arbitration under the bill is to be purely voluntary. So it is nominally, but the power exists in every railroad corporation in this country, immediately on the passage of this bill, to compel every man employed at manual labor, in connection with interstate commerce, to subject himself to a judgment such as is provided for in the bill and to the penalties provided for its disobedience.

Mr. ERDMAN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ERDMAN. Will the gentleman point to one section of the bill that permits that?

Mr. MAGUIRE. There is no such provision in the bill. The provision for making the arbitration provided for universal and compulsory is not in the bill, but in the conditions that environ laborers of all classes, and which will enable employing corporations to force them to accept employment under the penalties and limitations of the arbitration law. The very conditions that drive these laborers to seek this legislation will drive them to slavery under its provisions.

I do not hope to prevent the passage of this bill, but in the utmost kindness and sincerity I warn the laborers who are urging its passage that it is dangerous legislation and will be a sad disappointment to them. A similar act applying to seamen engaged in the coastwise trade of this country, passed in 1890, was as voluntary in its letter as this is, but the shipowners determined that it was best that they should employ all their men under the provisions of that act, and they soon contrived by combination to compel every man whose necessities drove him to seek employment in that service to come in under the provisions of the act. So with this bill. Any railroad company in this country can, within twenty-four hours after the passage of this act, provoke a controversy with its men which will compel them either to enter upon the evils, wastefulness, and injury of a strike or to accept the temporary expedient of submitting to all the terms of this enslaving arbitration. When they submit to arbitration, the status quo, the condition prevailing just before the controversy, is to be maintained without limit of time until the arbitrators shall reach a decision—perhaps for two or three years. The men are bound to continue in the employment of employers whom, perhaps, they do not want to serve. They will be compelled to continue in an employment the conditions of which may have become distasteful and oppressive to them; but under the bill they must continue in that employment under conditions amounting to involuntary servitude.

When the award is made, they are bound again, pursuant to the award and regardless of their own wishes, to continue in the employment for another year. They are bound to remain in the employment of their judicially imposed masters, no matter how obnoxious the employment may have become, unless they have a right to seek discharge from the obligation upon grounds that are made exceptions by the terms of the bill.

Another thing. The individuality of the employee is lost under the bill. The bill provides that a majority of a railway laborers' organization may bind the others, not only to submit to arbitration, but to all the terms and penalties of the law. I very much doubt the constitutionality of that provision—nay, I know it is not constitutional.

It is my opinion and the opinion of the attorneys consulted by the representatives of the American Federation of Labor that the terms of the bill will apply to all mechanics and laborers engaged in the building and repairing of locomotives and cars, for they are incidentally employed in railroad operation, and may be held in certain cases to be employed in interstate commerce. A majority of any organization of laborers so employed can, under the provisions of this bill, compel the minority, without their consent or contract, against their will, against their protest, to submit to the arbitration and to the award. They are, equally with those who consent, to be compelled to submit to all the conditions of the law during the whole period of the arbitration and for a year afterwards. Some of the penalties, criminal penalties, that were originally provided for in the arbitration scheme and made part of the bill when first introduced have been stricken out; but I say to you that when the principle has been established, and the domination of railroad companies over their employees has been secured under this bill, the battle will then commence for extending the pains and penalties by which the partially enslaved laborers of this great department of human labor will be submerged and oppressed with all the severities that were originally proposed.

The gentleman says that all of the labor organizations, so far as he knows, favor this bill.

I am not authorized to speak for any labor organization in this matter. I speak only for my own principles, but I know that the American Federation of Labor regards this measure as a serious menace to the liberties and to the best interests of American laborers. It opposes the bill because it knows that the rights of labor are to be secured only through liberty and not through the permanent surrender of the liberties of the laborer for apparent temporary gain.

I yield back the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. ERDMAN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. The only purpose for which I desire time is to ask three or four questions of the gentleman in charge of the bill. Is it not true that the five great orders of railway employees are a unit through their properly constituted officers in asking for the passage of this bill?

Mr. ERDMAN. They ask for it; and they are here to-day pressing for it.

Mr. HEPBURN. These organizations are the organization of engineers, the organization of firemen, the organization of switchmen, and the organization of brakemen. These organizations are the ones affected by the bill.

Mr. ERDMAN. They are; and they are pressing for it here; and not a single member of the American Federation of Labor is affected by it. If the gentleman who has just concluded spoke for them, he spoke for some one who has no interest in it, not more than the snap of my finger; and he, I understand, can not afford to have the principle of arbitration in dispute go forward in this country. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I have been detained from the House most of the day on matters of vital importance to my district. I returned but a short time ago and found that a vote on the international monetary conference had been taken during my enforced absence. My views on that subject are possibly known to some members of the House; but I feel it but right to state that if present I should have been compelled by conscience and duty to vote "nay."

Mr. ERDMAN. I yield one minute to my colleague [Mr. PHILLIPS].

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to confirm what has been said by my colleague, Mr. ERDMAN, in regard to the various labor organizations connected with the railroad service, whose representative men have approved the measure. It has not been opposed by railroad owners or officials, but, so far as the Committee on Labor has been informed, it has met their approval.

This bill has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Labor. It has heard the representatives of labor fully, both in the last Congress and in this.

The importance of the railroad service to our people can not be overstated. Their daily needs are largely supplied by it, in fact; fuel, food, all the commodities of life. A strike which would involve our railroad systems would be appalling. This bill is designed to obviate such disaster by settling all disputes in a peaceful way. The principle of arbitration was indorsed by the Republican platform at St. Louis, and, in fact, by all political parties. It is in harmony with the most advanced thought of the age, and should obtain.

Of all bills before our committee this has had most careful and thorough consideration. It passed unanimously in the Fifty-third Congress, and I hope that a vote will be immediately taken and that the measure may pass this Congress.

Mr. ERDMAN. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House I desire to state I am in receipt of a very short letter on the subject that I will read:

THREE BRANCH LODGE, No. 304,
BROTHERHOOD OF LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN,
Argenta, Ark., February 18, 1897.

DEAR SIR: The inclosed circular will explain to you what is required, and is the unanimous voice of this lodge. You are respectfully requested to use your influence and utmost endeavors to have those bills passed.

Yours, for justice,
JAMES McCARTHY, Master.
A. H. ANDREWS, Secretary.

HON. WM. L. TERRY.

This is from the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen. Included in the list of bills is the Hill contempt bill, the Erdman arbitration bill, and the Phillips commission bill. This labor organization states that they are in favor of all these bills. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I demanded a second in order to get an explanation of the bill, and in the light of the discussion I shall support the measure.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Speaker, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

UNWHOLESOME TEAS, ETC.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill No. 3725. The original bill is on the Speaker's table, and I wish the Clerk would read from the original Senate bill, as I think there are one or two minor amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after May 1, 1897, it shall be unlawful for any person or persons or corporation to import or bring into the United States any merchandise as tea which is inferior in purity, quality, and fitness for consumption to the standards provided in section 3 of this act, and the importation of all such merchandise is hereby prohibited.

SEC. 2. That immediately after the passage of this act, and on or before February 15 of each year thereafter, the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint a board, to consist of seven members, each of whom shall be an expert in teas, and who shall prepare and submit to him standard samples of tea; that the persons so appointed shall be at all times subject to removal by the said Secretary, and shall serve for the term of one year; that vacancies in the said board occurring by removal, death, resignation, or any other cause shall be forthwith filled by the Secretary of the Treasury by appointment, such appointee to hold for the unexpired term; that said board shall appoint a presiding officer, who shall be the medium of all communications to or from such board; that each member of said board shall receive as compensation the sum of $50 per annum, which, together with all necessary expenses while engaged upon the duty herein provided, shall be paid out of the appropriation for "expenses of collecting the revenue from customs."

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the said board, shall fix and establish uniform standards of purity, quality, and fitness for consumption of all kinds of teas imported into the United States, and shall procure and deposit in the custom-houses of the ports of New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and such other ports as he may determine, duplicate samples of such standards; that said Secretary shall procure a sufficient number of other duplicate samples of such standards to supply the importers and dealers in tea at all ports desiring the same at cost. All teas, or merchandise described as tea, of inferior purity, quality, and fitness for consumption to such standards shall be deemed within the prohibition of the first section hereof.

SEC. 4. That on making entry at the custom-house of all teas, or merchandise described as tea, imported into the United States, the importer or consignee shall give a bond to the collector of the port that such merchandise shall not be removed from the warehouse until released by the collector, after it shall have been duly examined with reference to its purity, quality, and fitness for consumption; that for the purpose of such examination samples of each line in every invoice of tea shall be submitted by the importer or consignee to the examiner, together with the sworn statement of such importer or consignee that such samples represent the true quality of each and every part of the invoice and accord with the specifications therein contained; or in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, such samples shall be obtained by the examiner and compared by him with the standards established by this act; and in cases where said tea, or merchandise described as tea, is entered at ports where there is no qualified examiner as provided in section 7, the consignee or importer shall in the manner aforesaid furnish under oath a sample of each line of tea to the collector or other revenue officer to whom is committed the collection of duties, and said officer shall also draw or cause to be drawn samples of each line in every invoice and shall forward the same to a duly qualified examiner as provided in section 7: Provided, however, That the bond above required shall also be conditioned for the payment of all custom-house charges which may attach to such merchandise prior to its being released or destroyed (as the case may be) under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. That if, after an examination as provided in section 4, the tea is found by the examiner to be equal in purity, quality, and fitness for consumption to the standards hereinbefore provided, and no reexamination shall be demanded by the collector as provided in section 6, a permit shall at once be granted to the importer or consignee declaring the tea free from the control of the customs authorities; but if on examination such tea, or merchandise described as tea, is found, in the opinion of the examiner, to be inferior in purity, quality, and fitness for consumption to the said standards the importer or consignee shall be immediately notified, and the tea, or merchandise described as tea, shall not be released by the custom-house unless on a reexamination called for by the importer or consignee the finding of the examiner shall be found to be erroneous: Provided, That should a portion of the invoice be passed by the examiner, a permit shall be granted for that portion and the remainder held for further examination, as provided in section 6.

SEC. 6. That in case the collector, importer, or consignee shall protest against the finding of the examiner, the matter in dispute shall be referred for decision to a board of three United States general appraisers, to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and if such board shall, after due examination, find the tea in question to be equal in purity, quality, and fitness for consumption to the proper standards, a permit shall be issued by the collector for its release and delivery to the importer; but if upon such final reexamination by such board the tea shall be found to be inferior in purity, quality, and fitness for consumption to the said standards, the importer or consignee shall give a bond, with security satisfactory to the collector, to export said tea, or merchandise described as tea, out of the limits of the United States within a period of six months after such final reexamination; and if the same shall not have been exported within the time specified, the collector, at the expiration of that time, shall cause the same to be destroyed.

SEC. 7. That the examination herein provided for shall be made by a duly qualified examiner at a port where standard samples are established, and where the merchandise is entered at ports where there is no qualified examiner the examination shall be made at that one of said ports which is nearest the port of entry, and that for this purpose samples of the merchandise, obtained in the manner prescribed by section 4 of this act, shall be forwarded to the proper port by the collector or chief officer at the port of entry; that in all cases of examination or reexamination of teas, or merchandise described as tea, by examiners or boards of United States general appraisers under the provisions of this act, the purity, quality, and fitness for consumption of the same shall be tested according to the usages and customs of the tea trade, including the testing of an infusion of the same in boiling water, and, if necessary, chemical analysis.

SEC. 8. That in cases of reexamination of teas, or merchandise described as teas, by a board of United States general appraisers in pursuance of the provisions hereof, samples of the tea, or merchandise described as tea, in dispute, for transmission to such board for its decision, shall be put up and sealed by the examiner in the presence of the importer or consignee, if he so desires, and transmitted to such board, together with a copy of the finding of the examiner, setting forth the cause of condemnation and the claim or ground of the protest of the importer relating to the same, such samples, and the papers therewith, to be distinguished by such mark that the same may be identified; that the decision of such board shall be in writing, signed by them, and transmitted, together with the record and samples, within three days after the rendition thereof, to the collector, who shall forthwith furnish the examiner and the importer or consignee with a copy of said decision or finding. The board of United States general appraisers herein provided for shall be authorized to obtain the advice, when necessary, of persons skilled in the examination of teas, who shall each receive for his services in any particular case a compensation not exceeding $5.

SEC. 9. That no imported teas which have been rejected by a customs examiner or by a board of United States general appraisers, and exported under the provisions of this act, shall be reimported into the United States under the penalty of forfeiture for a violation of this prohibition.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power to enforce the provisions of this act by appropriate regulations.

SEC. 11. That teas actually on shipboard for shipment to the United States at the time of the passage of this act shall not be subject to the prohibition hereof, but the provisions of the act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas," approved March 2, 1883, shall be applicable thereto.

SEC. 12. That the act entitled "An act to prevent the importation of adulterated and spurious teas," approved March 2, 1883, is hereby repealed, such repeal to take effect on the date on which this act goes into effect.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second. I would like to hear something about this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. COX. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MILNES] will act as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 1.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MILNES] will control the time.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, in 1883 Congress passed an act to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea, or tea harmful to health. We tried then to make as good a law as we knew how; but notwithstanding the stringency of that law, which provided for the reexportation of all teas which did not come up to the standard, we find that to-day more poor, unwholesome tea, more tea sweepings and drug teas, are thrown upon the American market than upon all the other markets of the world. Our people consume more bad tea than all other countries. This is a subject about which we have heard a good deal for several years past in the Committee on Ways and Means. People interested in the tea trade, and interested in having only pure, wholesome teas imported into the United States, have appeared before that committee and set forth their various grievances and the difficulty of enforcing the old law. That law provided for inspectors to be appointed from men who were importers. Of course it was only human nature for those merchants to favor each other sometimes, and to favor themselves always in their decisions, and there was no appeal except to this board of merchants. The consequence is that the importation of poor teas into this country has increased.

This bill is the result of the united efforts of the people engaged in the tea trade, the people anxious for wholesome food, the Treasury Department, the Senate of the United States, and the Committee on Ways and Means. A bill nearly identical in language and entirely identical in character was recommended by the Ways and Means Committee some days ago, and reported unanimously from that committee to the House. This particular bill was introduced into the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Commerce there, was unanimously reported to the Senate by that committee, and was passed by the Senate and sent over here this morning. In brief, the bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall appoint seven inspectors of tea in the United States, to be chosen from those who are experts in tea. These seven men are to receive each a salary of $50 a year, to be paid out of the moneys appropriated for customs expenses. They are to meet upon the passage of the bill, and every year thereafter——

Mr. COX. Did the gentleman say $50 a year?

Mr. PAYNE. Fifty dollars a year each. They are to meet every year and establish uniform standards of purity and fitness for consumption, which standards are to be embodied in samples. Those samples are to be duplicated. There will be one at New York, one at Chicago, one at San Francisco, and the others are to be at such other places of import as the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate, and with those samples all importations of teas are to be compared. If the importation comes up to the samples, it can come in free of duty for consumption in the United States. If the importation does not come up to the standard, it is to be reexported and excluded from consumption here.

Mr. LACEY. How is the comparison to be made?

Mr. PAYNE. It may be by pouring hot water on the tea and making drawings of it, and comparing it with the sample in that way, or it may be done by chemical analysis, if necessary. The provisions for making the comparison are ample.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Does the gentleman expect to get an honest performance of duty on the part of these inspectors at a salary of $50 per annum each? I wish you would explain how that can be done.

Mr. PAYNE. In the first place, the bulk of the inspection will be made by the customs officers, and these special inspectors will be called upon only where it is found necessary. I do not think there will be any difficulty about it. The Secretary of the Treasury thought the salary was ample and that he could secure the best talent for that amount, and gentlemen familiar with the business give assurances to the same effect.

Mr. COX. Are these offices under the civil service? [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. The bill does not extend the civil-service rules to these inspectors. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. All the honest tea importers are in favor of this bill, and will cooperate with the custom-house officers.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, every one of them in the United States.

Mr. MILNES. The gentleman says that this bill has been asked for by the tea dealers?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, sir; by the tea trade.

Mr. MILNES. By the importers?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; and by others engaged in the business.

Mr. MILNES. Has the bill been approved or asked for by the trade journals of the country?

Mr. PAYNE. I have not read the trade journals, and can not answer that question; but I know that some of those journals have advocated very earnestly the passage of this bill, or of a similar bill which was proposed some time ago.

Mr. MILNES. Have the medical journals made any complaint as to the impurity of the teas imported?

Mr. PAYNE. I am unable to say. I am not in the habit of reading the medical journals.

Mr. MILNES. I have asked these questions because I want to know the reasons for the passage of the bill. I want to find out whether anybody outside of the tea importers are asking for its passage. If the people of the country who consume tea are not complaining of its impurity, if the trade journals are making no complaint, and if the medical journals are not urging the passage of the bill as promotive of the public health, I can see no reason for its passage. It seems to me that if the importers are the only persons asking for it, they must have some object of their own in view, and I should like to know what it is.

Mr. PAYNE. Because I do not happen to know what may be in the trade journals or the medical journals, it does not follow that those journals are not in favor of this bill. I do know that there has been a universal demand from all classes for some legislation which will secure to the people pure tea. This demand has gone so far that there have been applications time and again to the Committee on Ways and Means to impose such a duty upon tea as will exclude all poor tea. Various modes of relief have been devised. Everyone interested has seemed to be anxious for the passage of some such bill as this.

Mr. CLARDY. Who are to be the judges whether the samples provided by these commissioners compare favorably with the samples imported? The custom-house officers?

Mr. PAYNE. First, the custom-house officers; and if they can not tell, then the inspectors themselves. The inspector can be sent for, or the samples can be sent to the inspector. In the meantime the tea is held in the custom-house. If the decision is that the article is not fit for consumption, then the owner must give bond and remove it from the United States within six months. From the action of the inspectors an appeal may be taken to a board of three appraisers designated by the Secretary of the Treasury from the general appraisers of the United States. These appraisers, in determining the appeal, can call in any expert on the subject of tea to aid them in the determination of the question.

Mr. NORTHWAY. If this bill be passed, and rigidly enforced, what will be the effect upon the price of tea?

Mr. PAYNE. I do not think it will affect the price of good tea at all. Nor do I think it will affect the price of poor tea, if it be genuine. The habit is to collect this spurious stuff—the sweepings, the tea dust, the old tea leaves that have been allowed to remain so long on the tea plant that a large amount of tannin has developed in the leaf—and to mix these with a small quantity of pure tea, and then sell this spurious article throughout the country by means of various devices, such as the offering of chromos and gifts of various kinds. So far as regards any decent article of tea, I do not think this measure can increase the price. The universal opinion of the tea trade is that it will give to the public a sound article of tea at the same retail price for which good tea is selling to-day.

Mr. QUIGG. Will my colleague allow the point to be enforced that there is no other machinery in the bill for carrying out its provisions, especially as to judging of the tea, than the ordinary machinery now in use in the case of all importations?

Mr. PAYNE. That is true except as to these seven inspectors at $50 a year each. That is the entire additional expense to be incurred.

Mr. QUIGG. The purpose that they serve is simply to provide samples?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILNES. As I understand, probably 90 per cent or more of all the tea coming into the United States comes to the port of New York or San Francisco?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, there is Chicago.

Mr. MILNES. The Chicago teas, I presume, all come from San Francisco.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no. Chicago is a port of entry; much of the tea coming there never sees San Francisco at all.

Mr. MILNES. Then it comes to the port of New York originally, does it not?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. MILNES. Does this demand for the passage of the bill come from importers in different sections of the country?

Mr. PAYNE. It does.

Mr. MILNES. It is not confined to importers at New York City?

Mr. PAYNE. It is not. The importers throughout the country are united upon the measure.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. There is a general demand for it.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PAYNE to suspend the rules and pass the bill, it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 27, 1897.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. QUAY, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

SUPPLEMENTAL SCHEDULES OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 24th instant, supplemental schedules of claims amounting to $21,419.27, allowed by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted, etc.; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS AGAINST THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, submitting estimates of appropriation of $484.25 to pay certain judgments against the District of Columbia; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MARTIN T. M'MAHON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, in response to a resolution of the 24th instant, calling for a list of judgments rendered against the United States by the circuit and district courts of the United States under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States, transmitting an additional judgment in favor of Martin T. McMahon, for which an appropriation of $3,629.70 is required; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS IN INDIAN DEPREDATION CASES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th instant, a list of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims in favor of claimants in Indian depredation cases not heretofore reported; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON, ALEXANDRIA AND MOUNT VERNON RAILWAY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon Railway Company, of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3725) to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3547) to provide for the representation of the United States by commissioners at any international monetary conference hereafter to be called, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 268) concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees; and

A bill (H. R. 10023) setting apart a plot of public ground in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for memorial purposes, under the auspices of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 1708) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the appointment of receivers of national banks, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1876, as amended by an act approved August 3, 1892;

A bill (H. R. 3292) granting an honorable discharge to Seth Porter Church, alias Samuel Church;

A bill (H. R. 5472) concerning delivery of letters in towns, villages, and other places where no free delivery exists;

A bill (H. R. 5898) granting a pension to Amanda M. Way as army nurse; and

A bill (H. R. 6792) granting a pension to Hannah R. Quint.

ST. LOUIS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3690) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894, as amended by an act approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin."

Mr. VILAS. I hope the Senator will not press that motion this morning.

Mr. QUAY. It must be pressed now or never.

Mr. VILAS. Well, it would consume a great deal of time if that bill were taken up for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state that the motion can not be entertained. The Chair will submit the request, but until the morning business is concluded, or until one hour has elapsed, under the rule which the Chair had read the other morning, a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill on the Calendar can not be entertained. The Chair submits to the Senate the question, Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. VILAS. I am sorry to be obliged to say that I am not ready to consider that bill yet.

Mr. QUAY. I should be glad to have the Senator from Wisconsin state when he will be ready to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. VILAS. I shall be ready just as soon as I receive the memorial of the legislature of Wisconsin, which I have not yet received.

Mr. QUAY. The mails seem to be very slow between here and Madison, Mr. President.

Mr. VILAS. It is only two days, I believe, since the Senator informed us that the memorial was to be sent to the governor for his approval.

Mr. QUAY. It was passed on the 19th.

Mr. VILAS. It has hardly had time to get here yet.

Mr. QUAY. It was to be presented to the governor on Wednesday, the 24th.

Mr. VILAS. Very well.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. CULLOM. I present the credentials of Charles W. Fairbanks, chosen by the legislature of Indiana a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1897; which I ask may be read and printed in the RECORD.

The credentials were read, and ordered to be placed on file, as follows:

In the name and by the authority of the State of Indiana.

To all who shall see these presents, greeting:

I, James A. Mount, governor of the State of Indiana, do hereby certify that on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization of the general assembly of the State of Indiana, on, to wit, the 19th day of January, 1897, each house openly and by viva voce vote cast a majority of the whole number of votes for Charles W. Fairbanks, an inhabitant of said State and of the age of 30 years and upwards, and who has been nine years a citizen of the United States, for Senator, to represent the State of Indiana in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years commencing on the 4th day of March, 1897. At 12 o'clock meridian on the following day, the two houses convened in joint assembly, and the journal of each house having been read, showing that said Charles W. Fairbanks had received a majority of all the votes cast in each house, he, the said Charles W. Fairbanks, was declared duly elected Senator to represent the State of Indiana in the United States Senate for the term of six years commencing March 4, 1897.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the seal of the State at the city of Indianapolis, this 21st day of January, in the year of our Lord 1897, the eighty-first year of the State, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-first.

JAMES A. MOUNT.

By the governor:
[SEAL.]

WILLIAM D. OWEN,
Secretary of State.

He also presented the petition of George B. Troub, of Hicksville, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the O. E. Bell Company, of the Cincinnati Silver Company, of the Carlisle-Osborne Company, and of the Tiffany Jewelry Company, all of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation providing 1-cent letter postage; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petitions of Charles Meis & Co., of A. & A. W. Sommerfield & Co., of the W. B. Carpenter Company, Albert Mayer & Bro., Goldman, Beckman & Co., the Clemen Toy and Stationery Company, Henry Gershofer & Co., Frederick Silberberg & Co., George H. Dean and Kibe Bros., the Cincinnati Woolen Company, and of G. Sturn & Sons, all of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the passage of the Torrey bankruptcy bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Lodge & Shipley Machine Tool Company, of Cincinnati; of Oscar Onken & Co., of Cincinnati; of the Kennard Shoe Company, of Cleveland; Sherwin-Williams Company, of Cleveland; the M. H. Alexander Company, of Cincinnati; A. J. Wenham's Sons, of Cleveland; the Nicola & Stone Lumber Company, of Cleveland; the L. H. Whitcomb Company, of Cleveland; the Citizens' National Bank, of Akron; the Pliny Watson Company, of Toledo; the Merchants and Manufacturers' Exchange Company, of Cleveland; the Diebold Safe and Lock Company, of Canton, and of McGowan Bros., of Steubenville, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GRAY presented the memorial of Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the Reform Bureau of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against holding the proposed Sunday session of the Senate; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. THURSTON. I present a telegram in the nature of a memorial, remonstrating against carrying into execution the recent Executive order for the extension of the forest reservations. This is an important matter, and I ask to have the memorial incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OMAHA, NEBR., February 26, 1897.

JOHN M. THURSTON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

At a meeting of the Commercial Club of the City of Omaha, held at Omaha on the 26th day of February, A. D. 1897, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"The Commercial Club of the City of Omaha, interested in the growth and development of the transmissouri country, and particularly of the State of Nebraska, is greatly alarmed at the promulgation of an executive order by the President of the United States by which 21,000,000 acres of public lands in the Northwest are reserved from exploration, settlement, mineral development and filing, and railroad construction. Of these 21,000,000 acres of land, which, added to the 17,000,000 acres heretofore reserved, makes nearly 40,000,000 acres of the public domain, 3,000,000 are in the State of Wyoming and the Black Hills of South Dakota, which country is directly tributary to the State of Nebraska, and is one of the sections largely supplied by agricultural products of this State. In view of the alarming and disastrous results to flow from this executive order, it is

"Resolved, That while in sympathy with any legitimate effort to protect the forests of the public domain, we believe that this sweeping order will have no such result, but by making the so-called timber country an uninhabited waste, will increase the danger of the destruction of forests by fire, and in view of the fact that large sections of these proposed reservations are now settled by agriculturists and miners, whose industries must cease if this executive order shall continue in operation, we call upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress by proper legislation to annul the said order, believing that the present stringent laws are sufficient, if enforced, to fully protect timber on the public domain.

"Resolved, That these resolutions be telegraphed to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Nebraska, to be by them presented to the two Houses of Congress."

J. E. UTT,
Secretary Commercial Club.

Mr. TURPIE presented a memorial of the Irish-American Club of Indianapolis, Ind., remonstrating against the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of E. C. Atkins & Co., of Indianapolis, Ind., and a petition of Dean Bros., of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BATE presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Nashville, Tenn., praying that an appropriation be made for the Cumberland River improvements in that State; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry lumber manufacturers of Nashville, Tenn., praying that a duty be placed on foreign logs and lumber; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Prescott F. Hall, secretary of the Immigration Restriction League, praying for the adoption of the report of the committee of conference on the so-called immigration bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petitions of R. B. Currey, grand regent Royal Arcanum, and sundry other citizens of Nashville; of S. S. Finley, grand vice-regent Royal Arcanum, of Tennessee; of L. David and sundry other citizens of Knoxville; of the United Order of the Golden Cross, Grand Commandery of Tennessee, and of

S. Rosenthal, past grand regent, and sundry other citizens of Chattanooga, all in the State of Tennessee, praying for the enactment of legislation regulating beneficiary societies, orders, and associations; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petitions of E. L. Wilson and sundry other citizens of Columbia, of H. B. Norwood and sundry other citizens of Pikesville, of J. A. Cotton and sundry other citizens of Waverly, of L. P. Lowrie and sundry other citizens of Monteagle, of Ed. McElhinney and sundry other citizens of Tennessee City, of W. C. Wert and sundry other citizens of Kingston Springs, of V. A. Rushing and sundry other citizens of Box, of William Owen and sundry other citizens of Sequachee, and of Post C, Travelers' Protective Association, of Knoxville, all in the State of Tennessee, praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorials of J. D. Cox and sundry other citizens of Jonesboro, Tenn.; of the Tribune Printing Company, of Knoxville, Tenn.; of J. W. Case and sundry citizens of Johnson City, Tenn., and of Houghton, Mifflin & Co., publishers, of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Spurlock-Neal Company, of Nashville; of Jo. I. Ivins, publisher of the Post, of Athens; of George W. Ochs, publisher of the Times and manager of the Tradesman, of Chattanooga; of J. E. & S. F. Brading, publishers of the Staff, of Johnson City, all in the State of Tennessee; of Thomas R. Cree, of New York, and of W. R. Tucker, secretary of the National Board of Trade, praying for the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the officers of the Baptist church of Saunderstown, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the officers of the Baptist church of Saunderstown, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of consent to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of sundry churches and societies of Rhode Island, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting interstate gambling by telegraph, telephone, or otherwise; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Rhode Island Historical Society, praying for the passage of the joint resolution (S. R. 195) providing for the printing of the names of heads of families and other detailed information as shown by the First Federal Census; which was referred to the Committee on the Census.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of sundry citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Stephen Salisbury and sundry other citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the petition of Rev. J. D. Murphy, of Sedalia, Mo., and a petition of the St. Louis (Mo.) Exposition and Music Hall Association, praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9704) to authorize the Washington and Glen Echo Railroad Company to obtain a right of way and construct tracks into the District of Columbia 600 feet, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PLATT. I am directed by the Committee on Patents to report the bill (H. R. 10202) defining the jurisdiction of the United States circuit courts in cases brought for the infringement of letters patent, without amendment. I had supposed that I had reported it before, but I fail to find it on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, with amendments, and submit a report thereon. I give notice that I shall call it up at an early day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Meanwhile the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. BLANCHARD on the 23d instant, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. PROCTOR on the 26th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER (for Mr. PROCTOR), from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10331) to authorize the reassessment of water-main taxes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10178) for the relief of Francisco Perna, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

DANIEL DRAWBAUGH.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to move the recommitment to the Committee on Patents of the bill (S. 1453) for the relief of Daniel Drawbaugh. A member of the majority of the committee has asked me to have the bill recommitted.

Mr. BERRY. I did not hear the statement of the Senator from Connecticut. What is the proposition? I failed to hear it.

Mr. PLATT. I asked to have the bill recommitted to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. BERRY. For what reason? Will the Senator state the reason?

Mr. PLATT. The bill was reported by a bare majority of the committee, and one of the committee who was in favor of the report has requested me to have it recommitted to the committee.

Mr. BERRY. If a majority of the committee desire to recommit it, of course I can make no objection. I did not know anything about it. My attention had not been called to it. I was one of the majority.

Mr. PLATT. Indeed, two of the members who were in favor of reporting the bill favorably have requested me to have it recommitted.

Mr. BERRY. That being true, I will make no contest about the matter. I had not had any information in regard to it, however, and I was one of the majority who agreed to report the bill favorably.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Patents.

PAY OF STENOGRAPHERS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES of Nevada, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom were referred the following resolutions, reported them severally without amendment; and each was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, in carrying on the investigation into the issue of patents for the lands embraced in the Perrine grant in Florida, be authorized to employ a stenographer, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report the hearing before the Committee on the Library, February 13, 1897, in relation to the bill (S. 3087) to incorporate the National Society of Colonial Dames of America, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the stenographer reporting the hearings on the Loud bill, before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, on January 16, 23, and 30, 1897, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the stenographers employed to report the hearings before the Committee on the Judiciary, relating to the nomination of Henry E. Davis to be attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia, be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

TARIFF HEARINGS.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the two Houses of Congress 10,000 copies of the tariff hearings of the Committee on Ways and Means during the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, of which 3,250 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 6,750 copies for the use of the House.

SPECIAL EDITION OF CONGRESSIONAL DIRECTORY.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and it is hereby, directed to prepare and have issued a special edition of the Congressional Directory for the use of the extraordinary session, should one be called, and that said edition be ready on the first day of the session; and that the same compensation be allowed for the compiling and editing of said edition as is authorized by law for the regular editions, the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3731) to punish obstruction of the exercise of constitutional power by either House of Congress; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to have the bill read in full.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any Senator or Representative who shall willfully and without reasonable cause, for the purpose of preventing action by the House of Congress to which he belongs, absent himself therefrom; or any member-elect to either House of Congress who shall willfully and without reasonable cause refuse or neglect to take or subscribe the oath or affirmation required to qualify himself for membership therein for such purpose shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000.

SEC. 2. The office of Senator or Representative in Congress may be resigned by filing a written resignation with the Secretary of the Senate or Clerk of the House of the person resigning as a member or by the willful refusal to attend the sessions thereof for the purpose set forth in the first section, proved by a conviction in pursuance of the provisions thereof. The failure of a member-elect of either House of Congress to qualify, for the purpose of preventing its organization or its action as aforesaid, shall, after conviction, be deemed and taken to be a refusal to accept the office, which shall thereupon become vacant, and the proper proceedings shall be had for choosing a person to fill the vacancy according to law.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it is needless to say that I do not expect to get action on this bill at the short remainder of the present session. But I introduce it now because it does not relate to a danger especially affecting the proceedings of Congress or of either House, although it is one which is very likely to arise some time in the future here. I hope, however, the bill may be enacted at a time when the matter is not practically a danger, and that it may, perhaps, afford to the States a suggestion which will save the country from what now is one of its most imminent perils affecting the integrity of our institutions.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if there are any facts in existence, if there is any neglect of duty on the part of Members of the House or Senators, warranting the introduction of a bill of this kind?

Mr. HOAR. The very reason why I introduce it now is because there is no such fact likely to divide parties or to excite passion.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not know but that there was some present danger.

Mr. HOAR. Not in either House of Congress that I am aware of. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALTHALL introduced a bill (S. 3732) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PUGH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF STENOGRAPHERS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PETTIGREW submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the compensation of the stenographer employed to report the hearing by the Committee on Indian Affairs in relation to the removal of the Lower Brule Band of Sioux Indians from their homes south of White River, South Dakota, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed to report a statement before the Committee on Naval Affairs relative to torpedo-boat destroyers be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

ARBOR DAY.

Mr. PROCTOR submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 12,000 additional copies of Arbor Day: Its History and Observance, of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

INVESTIGATION OF BOND SALES.

Mr. PEFFER. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask that it may be read and lie over.

The resolution was read and ordered to lie over, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, instructed to report to the Senate during the present session of Congress what action the said committee has taken in the matter of the investigation under the resolution adopted at the last session of Congress directing an investigation of bond sales by the Secretary of the Treasury.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 26th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2923) for the better improvement of the Government reservation at the city of Fort Smith, in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes;

An act (S. 3614) to provide for closing the crevasse in Pass a Loutre, one of the outlets of the Mississippi River; and

An act (S. 3718) to authorize the Montgomery, Hayneville and Camden Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River between Lower Peachtree and Prairie Bluff, Alabama.

FUNDING OF TERRITORIAL INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday passed the bill (H. R. 10271) authorizing the funding of indebtedness in the Territories of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered, as indicated by the Senator.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate, as a part of the morning business, the resolution of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

Mr. QUAY. I move that the pending order be laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the labor-commission bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the motion can not be entertained until the morning business is concluded.

Mr. QUAY. I supposed it was concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not yet concluded. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution of the Senator from New York, coming over from a previous day. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. HILL on the 25th instant, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That the President be, and is hereby, requested to return to the House for correction the bill (H. R. 9647) to authorize the extension of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] or the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] explain to the Senate the necessity for returning this bill to the Senate for correction. The Committee on the District of Columbia, who considered this matter at great length and with the utmost care, are not cognizant of any necessity for the return of the bill. Before the question is taken on the adoption of the resolution it is due to the Senate that some explanation should be made to the Senate by the Senators introducing these resolutions as to why the bill should be returned.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from New Hampshire seems to place some stress on the fact that the Senator who introduced the resolution should give some reason for its adoption. As the Senator is well aware, I stated when I introduced the resolution that I did so at the instance of the Senator from Nebraska, who had been called out of the Chamber at the time and who undoubtedly will give good reasons for its adoption. It is an ordinary resolution, such as it has been the practice of the Senate to adopt, and is carefully framed to avoid any constitutional difficulties that might arise. As to the merits of the matter, the Senator from Nebraska of course can explain. I know nothing about the merits of the bill itself. I have personally no objection to it, because I know nothing about it.

Mr. ALLEN. The resolution was drafted and introduced by the Senator from New York at my request, in consequence of my being called from the Chamber at the time on business which could not be neglected. It was my design, and I supposed the Senate understood the fact, that the resolution should be treated as a substitute for the Senate resolution which I had introduced a few moments before that time; and yesterday morning, when the resolution was laid before the Senate, I supposed it was the concurrent resolution which is now before the Senate, and that that resolution was adopted, until some hours after, when my attention was called to the fact that it was simply the Senate resolution and not the concurrent resolution that had been agreed to.

The Senator from New Hampshire understands quite well why this resolution is introduced. He understands fully as well as I do, if not better, the reasons for its introduction. This company has been engaged in a controversy with certain of its employees. The company blacklisted certain employees in consequence of their exercising the rights of citizenship. That fact was brought fully to the attention of the Committee on the District of Columbia, as I am informed by those who were before that committee on an investigation. No attention whatever seems to have been paid to the requests or to the complaints of these persons. No attempt whatever, as I understand it, was——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, we allowed them to be heard for a full hour before our committee.

Mr. ALLEN. That was very gracious, indeed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; it was, under the circumstances, very gracious.

Mr. ALLEN. Any ordinary American citizen ought to feel very thankful——

Mr. ALLISON. I see that this is likely to lead to debate, and it can be considered at a later hour in the day. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10289, the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Pardon an inquiry. I should like to understand how the Senator from Iowa can, without my consent, get the floor and make a motion while I am talking?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly I can not. If the Senator is on the floor, I do not ask it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from Nebraska is entitled to the floor, having been recognized.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to take the Senator from the floor.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall yield the floor in a few moments. I was proceeding to say, when the Senator from Iowa interrupted me——

Mr. ALLISON. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I supposed the Senator had taken his seat.

Mr. ALLEN. There was nothing wrong in it at all. It is perfectly proper.

I was saying that any average American citizen ought to feel extremely grateful that the District Committee would give him or his friends an hour of their valuable time upon a matter of the importance of this bill. But it does not seem to have amounted to anything. The Senate is not even informed as to the result of the investigation. The Senator from New Hampshire, who called upon me a moment ago for an explanation of the resolution, within five minutes of that time himself develops the fact that there was a contest before the committee of which he is a member. He knew, and knows now, and the committee knows quite well, that there was a very strong contest before that committee; and I am led to believe that those Senators knew there was opposition in the Senate to the passage of the bill in its present form. It is very singular that among the number of Senators on this side and some on the other side who have opposed this measure without certain concessions and certain amendments—they have been unable to be in the Chamber when it was taken up in any of its various stages and considered.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to state in answer to the Senator that the bill was passed in the Senate in its regular order, having been taken up when it was reached on the Calendar. The bill passed the House on the 17th day of December and three days later was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. It was not reported to the Senate until January 13, and then only after a full hearing. It was on the Calendar until February 5, and during that time I heard no word of opposition to the bill from any quarter. On the contrary, the committee received many letters asking for its passage. The Senate having agreed to take up the House bills on the Calendar, the Metropolitan bill was passed on February 5, without either being called up or opposed by a single Senator. Afterwards the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] said that he was intending to oppose certain provisions of the bill, and before the conference report was submitted the bill was changed so as to meet his objections. In this way the only objection I ever heard from any Senator until to-day was overcome. As I said, the bill passed in the usual way.

Mr. SHERMAN. Without objection?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Without any objection whatever. I wish to repeat that, after the bill was reported and before its passage, no Senator, either on the floor of the Senate or anywhere else, ever made any objection to the bill to me, nor am I aware that a Senator made objection to any other member of the committee. The only objection ever made to the bill was made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], as I have explained. He took exception to the clause which related to changing certificates of indebtedness into stock. That provision was eliminated in conference, and the conference report was made by me, as usual, after the House had accepted the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. ALLEN. I am not at all prepared to say that that statement is not correct, but I say that it is rather a remarkable circumstance that in the various stages of the bill, in being reported and acted upon in the Senate, and in the various stages of the conference report, it so happened that all of these orders have been taken and the action of the Senate has been taken when those who were opposed to the measure in its present form were absent from the Chamber, although I think they have attended with systematic regularity. I do not say, of course, that the Senator from Michigan, or any other Senator, had any purpose in slipping this measure through in the absence of those who opposed it. I would not be guilty of a remark of that kind. But it is a singular fact that every time the bill was brought up here and considered, it was when every Senator who was opposed to it in its present form was temporarily absent from the Chamber; and there are a number of Senators who are opposed to it.

As I am informed, the District Committee had before it a number of witnesses who testified to the fact that this road was guilty of depriving many of its oldest and most trusted employees of their right of citizenship. It made war upon them because they were members of the Knights of Labor, and discharged them from their positions not by reason of the fact that they were incompetent or neglectful of their duties, or that their habits were not perfect, but because they refused to dissolve their connection with that organization. The committee had before it the original evidence, as I am informed, a copy of which I send to the desk and ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
ORDER OF KNIGHTS OF LABOR, 43 B STREET NW.,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1897.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives:

For several months past the Metropolitan Railway Company, of the District of Columbia, has been engaged in a persistent and determined attempt to deprive its employees of the rights guaranteed by the laws of the United States to belong to any lawful labor organization which they may choose to join. In pursuit of this object, the said company have intimidated, discharged, blacklisted, and terrorized its employees, who are citizens of the United States, and entitled to the protection of its laws. The said Metropolitan Railway Company, which engaged in this criminal course of conduct, robbing its employees of their most sacred rights, is enjoying the possession and profit of a very valuable franchise as a gift from the people of the United States, and are to-day asking a still further grant of valuable privileges in the streets of the city of Washington, in the shape of H. R. No. 9047, which is now before your committee.

In behalf of the workingmen, whose rights are being trampled upon by this company in the most outrageous and criminal manner, we protest that your committee should not grant to this Metropolitan Railway Company the privileges asked for in H. R. No. 9047, or any other privileges, until said company complies with the laws of the United States, and grants to its employees the rights which they are entitled to under the law; to do otherwise, and to grant to this company the privileges it now asks would be to sanction their criminal acts already committed and to encourage them to still further violate the law and infringe on the rights of the poor and comparatively defenseless workingmen in their employ.

In pursuit of its policy of intimidating and coercing its employees to give up their rights as American citizens, the Metropolitan Company has already discharged and blacklisted fourteen men, twelve of them immediately after the closing of the session of Congress in June. They did not dare, apparently, to engage in so glaringly criminal an act while Congress was in session.

The twelve men discharged and blacklisted on the 25th of June last were the oldest and most competent employees of the company, and were victimized for no other reason than that they were active members of an assembly of the Knights of Labor. It was admitted by the officials of the company that they were honest, sober, and competent, and, so far as the services rendered by them to the company, no fault could be found.

The only cause assigned for their discharge was to the effect that they had interfered with certain legislation desired by the company at the hands of Congress; which charge was proven to the company to be absolutely false. The general officers appealed to every member of Congress, asking that they would address President Phillips on the subject of the discharge of these men, and request their reinstatement; to this appeal many of the honorable members of both Houses responded, but to all of these letters President Phillips turned a deaf ear. The company was not satisfied with merely discharging the men, but for some reason, best known to the company, the men have been prevented largely from securing employment elsewhere, either the company directly prevented them from securing employment, or else some tangible agreement must exist between the companies, providing that an employee who is discharged or who leaves the service of one company shall not be employed by another. The only trouble with these men seems to have been that they were members of organized labor, members of the Knights of Labor. For some time prior to the organization of the assembly, and since its organization, it was the policy of the company to require from all applicants for employment in the service of the company an agreement that they would not connect themselves with any organization of labor, should they be appointed to a position in the service of the company.

This is proven by the following affidavits of reputable citizens and business men of this city, who were interested in an endeavor to secure employment for some of their friends:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington, ss.

Personally appeared before me this 6th day of July, A. D. 1896, James E. Gessford, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

That he is engaged in business at Ninth and U streets northwest, in the city of Washington, in keeping a drug store. That after the Ninth street electric cars were started he was requested by Mr. Taliferro, who desired to secure an appointment as motorman, to see President Phillips at his office, together with Mr. Lewis J. Brown and Mr Taliferro. Mr. Phillips promised us his appointment, conditioned, as he said, "that you will promise me that he (meaning Taliferro) shall not join the Railway Street Assembly, as I intend to get rid of all those union men in such a way that they will not know how it was done, and if you learn of his joining any such union you will report it to me, and I will discharge him."

Here we have positive proof that the management of the Metropolitan Railway is guilty of a criminal violation of the laws of the United States.

Section 5508 of the Revised Statutes provides:

"PENALTY FOR EMPLOYERS' CONSPIRACY.

"If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same, with intent to prevent or hinder his free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privileges so secured, they shall be fined not more than $5,000, and imprisoned not more than ten years, and shall, moreover, be thereafter ineligible to any office or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States."

In view of the foregoing, we desire in the name of justice and fair play to enter our protest against this corporation being granted any privileges at the hands of your honorable body until it agrees to adjust the wrongs it has perpetrated upon the citizens who, to earn an honest livelihood, were compelled to accept service with the company. We are willing to submit the whole controversy to a disinterested tribunal to arbitrate the differences, and our people will accept the result, whatever it may be. Until then, we protest against any further grants of any kind whatever to the Metropolitan Railway Company, because the company have no legal or moral right to enjoin its employees from associating themselves together for a legitimate purpose, nor have they any legal or moral right to compel American citizens to surrender any of their constitutional rights as a condition of their obtaining employment with the company.

To allow this company to go on in its present course would mean that all corporations deriving their powers from legislative authority would be allowed to dictate to their employees as a master would to his slaves. Congress has entire power in the matter; it can prescribe the conditions under which a corporation may do business that seeks a franchise at its hands. This corporation should be compelled to adjust the present difficulties and give a guaranty that it will not resort to such un-American treatment of its employees in the future before any other privileges are conferred on it or any extension of its franchise is granted.

Such violations of law as this company is guilty of fully warrant Congress not only in refusing any further privileges, but are ample justification for steps being taken to revoke the grants already made to the Metropolitan Railway. It is a menace to the rights of every workman in the District of Columbia to permit such a corporation to continue in business here.

Very truly,

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, my information is to the effect that all the facts in this article and in these affidavits were fully before the Committee on the District of Columbia before this bill was reported favorably, and I should be glad to know from the chairman of that committee, as we proceed, why the evidence taken by the committee has not been reported to the Senate, so that the Senate might be properly informed upon the subject.

Mr. McMILLAN. I will state in reply that the customary hearing was given to the representatives of the Knights of Labor before the full committee, and there were present also the president and other officers of the railway company. Both sides were heard, and after going into the matter very fully it was decided by the committee, I think unanimously, that it was not wise for them to interfere and attempt to compel the railroad company to employ again the very men whom they had discharged. The railway company claim that these men were trying to disorganize the labor on their road; and while these were good men, yet they were engaged in a scheme to compel every man on the road to become a Knight of Labor or compel him to leave, and in that way they seemed to make some trouble.

Mr. ALLEN. And the committee thought, of course, that the railroad company was right, and that the men were wrong to have refused.

Mr. McMILLAN. We did not decide whether these men were right or wrong; we decided that such legislation had nothing to do with the bill under consideration. If the company had done some wrong to these men they had the courts to go to, and we thought that was the proper place for them to go.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; but why did not the committee report these hearings?

Mr. McMILLAN. I will say, also, that the railway company did not ask for the extension of their line. It was asked for by the people on Columbia Heights, who were desirous of having the road extended, and the bill is in the interest of the people of the District, not in the interest of the railroad company. The hearings are reported for the use of the committee. It is not customary to report them to the Senate.

Mr. ALLEN. That is the old, old story. The company is not responsible for anything, and did not ask for anything, but the people asked for it, who are not connected with the company. I will not say to the Senator that I do not believe that at all, but I would need pretty strong evidence to induce me to believe that the company did not want to extend its road and make all the money it could, and that it was merely an eleemosynary association or corporation, ready to sacrifice its interest at the demand of the people of Columbia Heights. That does not answer the question at all. The Senator from Michigan gives no reason why the hearings were not reported. The Senator does not deny that it was made to appear before the committee of which he is chairman that the company was depriving these citizens of the United States of their rights of citizenship.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, no such matter was made to appear to the satisfaction of any member of the committee—not one.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not say to their satisfaction.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly not.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not suppose they could be satisfied in some respects.

Mr. GALLINGER. Probably not on the lines the Senator is traveling on.

Mr. ALLEN. But I say to the Senator from New Hampshire it is singularly suspicious that the hearings have not been reported to the Senate, so that the Senate and the world could know what took place there.

Mr. GALLINGER. The committee had no authority to employ a stenographer and to use the public funds for the purpose of having the hearing reported. It is a very unusual thing for any committee of the Senate to report hearings to the Senate in returning a bill.

Mr. ALLEN. It is not an unusual thing at all. There were six or seven different claims allowed this morning out of the contingent fund of the Senate for hearings before different committees.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that I have myself reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia, and they are now on the Calendar of the Senate, seven very important bills, on every one of which I had a hearing, but I have not thought it necessary or proper to report those hearings to the Senate. I have reported the facts.

Mr. ALLEN. That does not answer it at all.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, I will state that there are certain hearings where it is proper and necessary that the testimony should be reported. Those hearings are confined to cases where a particular subject-matter is sent to a committee for investigation, like, for instance, the investigation which was had before the Naval Committee as to the price of naval armor, etc. This matter of the complaint of these employees was never committed to the committee by the Senate, but came up incidentally. Here is a House bill which simply proposes to give the railroad company the right to extend its line.

Now, as a collateral matter, altogether outside of any matter submitted to the committee by the Senate, there arises an issue which is made by certain employees, who say that this additional franchise ought not to be granted to the company because it has treated its employees improperly. Certainly there was nothing in that which would require that the committee should return any report to the Senate upon the subject, because it did not relate to any matter which was pending before the Senate.

While I am on my feet, I want to say one thing, if the Senator from Nebraska will pardon the interruption. It is very well for the Senator from Nebraska, if he sees proper, to bring this matter to the attention of the Senate and for him to attempt legitimately to defeat the bill, but I do protest, Mr. President, it is not proper in so doing that he should seek to asperse the motives and the character of the men who are upon the District Committee.

Mr. ALLEN. It is not——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will pardon me just one moment further.

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. The service upon the District Committee is extremely onerous. It is a very thankless task the members of that committee have to perform. It is one of great difficulty. From the beginning of the Senator's speech to the present time he has failed to confine himself to the discussion of the question as to whether the committee has acted improperly in an error of judgment as to the manner in which the proceeding has taken place, but has thrown insinuation after insinuation upon the committee in regard to this matter. For instance, the Senator in the beginning repeated time after time the statement that it was very strange that the bill was brought up before the Senate each time when no Senator who was opposed to it was present, and that in the face of the statement by the chairman of the committee that it had not been brought up at any irregular time, but that it had only proceeded in its regular way. Yet the Senator still repeated the statement that it was extremely strange that whenever it came up the Senators who were opposed to it were absent. If the Senators who were opposed to it were absent at the time when it came up in its regular order, it was certainly not the fault of the committee, but only the fault of the Senators themselves that they were not in their seats.

Mr. ALLEN. Probably after a time the Senator from Georgia will prohibit me from talking upon the subject at all or drawing any deductions whatever.

Mr. BACON. I have for the past two years listened with very great pleasure to more than one speech of the Senator from Nebraska, and it is the first time that I have interrupted him.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not object to the interruption. I am always glad to submit to an interruption on the part of my friend from Georgia.

But, Mr. President, I am not yet prepared, like the men who are in the employ of the street railway company, to abdicate my rights as a citizen or as a Senator. I shall do that at the proper time. I shall draw my own deductions, whether they are correct or incorrect. The world can determine that fact. If my logic is at fault, the Senator from Georgia or the Senator from Michigan or the Senator from New Hampshire may correct it if they see fit.

I have not impugned the motives of this committee, and have not impugned the motives of any one of them, and do not now. I want to disclaim as publicly as I can any purpose whatever of impugning the motives of any member of the District Committee, but I must be permitted, in the same connection, to state the facts as I understand them to exist, and to draw my own deductions from those facts, and, much as I prize the opinion and judgment of the gentlemen composing that committee, I am not yet prepared to take their judgment in place of my own. I have acted for fifty years upon my own judgment, and I propose to act the remainder of my life upon my own judgment.

It is not denied that the fact recited in this paper was before that committee; it was made to appear by the affidavit of James E. Gessford, that Mr. Phillips, the president of the Metropolitan road—

> Promised us his appointment conditioned, as he said, that you will promise me that he (meaning Taliferro)—
> That is the applicant—
> shall not join the Railway Street Assembly, as I intend to get rid of all those union men in such a way that they will not know how it was done, and if you learn of his joining any such union you will report it to me, and I will discharge him.

That fact is not denied; that fact was before the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. And it was denied most emphatically.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, yes; but how do we know it was denied?

Mr. GALLINGER. I say so.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, the Senator says so. That settles it. But where is the evidence that it was denied?

Mr. GALLINGER. The same evidence the Senator has. He has the word of a Knight of Labor. I give the word of a Senator of the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. I have an affidavit, an affidavit that would subject a man to indictment for perjury if it were not true.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator want my affidavit?

Mr. ALLEN. No, but I want the evidence the Senator heard in the committee. I do not want any secondary or hearsay evidence.

There was the deliberate statement of the president of this road that he intended to disorganize the Street Railway Association. Mr. President, if the street railway employees had made that declaration respecting the railroad company, it would have been regarded as something just short of treason, and it would have been suppressed by the occupant of the White House if it had been declared in the street, in consequence of their not having a building in which to meet.

The Senator from New Hampshire says they are not concerned in this matter at all. That seems to be entirely correct. The affidavit of Louis J. Brown shows in substance the same thing. Here was this company, an applicant to Congress for additional powers, for an extension of its charter power, yet putting its feet upon those who were laboring for it; and the District Committee of this body loaned its influence to the triumph of the company and to the dethronement and destruction of labor.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. ALLEN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. His misinformation is monumental.

Mr. ALLEN. No doubt of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is monumental. The Committee on the District of Columbia considered this bill, reported it here, and it was placed on the Calendar. After it was on the Calendar, those gentlemen appeared and asked the courtesy of a hearing, the bill being on the Calendar. We listened very attentively to them—I said a moment ago for an hour, but it was two hours. The president of the company also made a statement to the committee. The committee then considered the subject at two or three different meetings, went all over the ground, considered it with the utmost care, and concluded that there was nothing in this matter that ought to influence us to deny this right, which the citizens desire more than the railroad company. Then the committee simply allowed the bill to remain on the Calendar, and it was considered in its proper way. That is all there is to it. The Senator from Nebraska is getting up a tempest in a teapot about this matter. It is not going to influence anybody, unless it may be some of his constituents. This thing is perfectly understood.

Mr. ALLEN. I have no doubt it is perfectly understood by the Senator from New Hampshire, and I have no doubt that he regards it as a tempest in a teapot. I have no doubt he is perfectly willing to line up with this street railway company against its employees.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am, if it is in the right.

Mr. ALLEN. It is much easier to stand with the strong and the powerful than it is with the weak and the humble; it is easier to stand in this Chamber and excuse the conduct of a great corporation like this in their abuse of their employees and in their depriving their employees of their rights than it is to stand and advocate the cause of the employees. Of course, occasionally these men, who are driven from their positions where they earn a livelihood for themselves and their families, receive a few crocodile tears from some of those gentlemen, but they rarely receive their votes when the vote will be of any benefit to them.

No, Mr. President; it was the duty of the District Committee, if it had a hearing upon this matter, to report the facts to the Senate, so that we could know exactly what the facts are and whether the bill reported by that committee ought to be amended or ought not to be amended. The Senator from New Hampshire may congratulate himself, if he sees fit, upon the fact that the District Committee has discharged its duty to these men in this case; he may console himself, if he desires, with that thought; but I do not believe the District Committee did its duty as it ought to have done without reporting the facts to the Senate and without recommending an amendment to this bill requiring an adjustment of the difficulty between this railroad company and its employees; and nothing that he may say or that any member of that committee may say will change my mind in that respect.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I do not rise for the purpose of criticising the Committee on the District of Columbia. I apprehend that those who wish to serve these employees have misapprehended the proper remedy for the evil complained of. I want to get this bill back before the Senate, in order that I may offer an amendment to the bill and have it voted on in this body.

This is an act of incorporation. This company is a creature of law; it can not exist without the fiat of law; it does exist by the fiat of law. In the creation of this corporation Congress can impose whatever conditions it pleases, and see to the enforcement of those conditions. These corporations are created for public benefit; for public purposes; for the benefit of the whole people of the country; and every provision necessary to carry out that purpose ought to be placed in the act of incorporation. I am anxious to have the amendment placed in this act of incorporation, because an act of incorporation is in the nature of a contract, and a contract which it has been held by some courts it is impossible for the lawmaking power to change after it is once made.

I take it for granted that the policy which we have usually pursued to amend or alter a charter has been retained in the original charter in this case; but if it has not, here is the place to put a condition for the protection of the employees of this corporation.

We have heard much, Mr. President, about arbitration—arbitrating grave international questions and arbitrating questions between corporations and their employees all over the country. The working people have been demanding the creation of some tribunal of that sort; but here is the place to insert in this bill, which I wish to get back before the Senate, a provision that no employee of this corporation shall be discharged by the persons conducting its business until charges shall have been preferred against him and sent before the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, who shall have authority to hear evidence and to pass upon the validity of the charges, and that, if the charges are not supported, this corporation, created by law, shall not have the power to discharge its employees.

Freedom of speech is an inheritance of every American citizen; everyone has the right to discuss all public business, and the public business of all corporations created by law, and no corporation should be permitted to discharge its employees because some one of them, as an American citizen, has questioned the validity or the rightfulness of its action. He should not, for such reason, be incontinently dismissed from its service, and to have no remedy at all.

I state to my friend that I am not criticising him, nor any member of the committee, for what has been done. I want to offer my amendment, if we can get the bill back, and let the Senate vote upon it. I shall then be satisfied. I want to insert an amendment that this public corporation, created by law, shall not discharge its employees at will, without grave charges made against them, and those charges heard and determined by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER obtained the floor.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, I want to be perfectly frank with the Senate in reference to the position I occupy touching the entire subject-matter that is now brought before us.

My attention was brought to the subject alluded to by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and I myself felt that something should be done in order to meet the demands of the men who claim that they were dismissed by this corporation because of the fact that they were members of a labor organization, and, although I was not present when the bill was passed in committee, and it had been placed upon the Calendar some two weeks, when I was called upon by these gentlemen I appealed to the chairman of the committee to give them a full hearing upon the subject of their complaints. In response to the appeal I made on their behalf, it was determined that the whole committee would hear the complaints of these men, and give notice to the railroad company of the hearing, so that its representative could also be present and contradict or controvert any proposition submitted by the Knights of Labor.

In pursuance to that agreement, the full committee met, both sides in this controversy were fully heard, and a large number of affidavits were submitted on behalf of the labor organizations and affidavits were submitted on the other side by the parties directly interested controverting the whole proposition. The gentleman who had been president of the railroad company, and who had been charged with making the statement contained in the affidavit which was read at the desk, was no longer connected with the company; he had resigned some few months before—I think some six or eight months ago—and Mr. Harries, who had been elected in his place, was before the committee, and the commitee questioned him and cross-questioned him as to his policy upon this subject. He stated in a succinct, clear, and definite manner the policy of his administration—a policy as to which, he said, no board of directors could influence or control him; that the question of belonging to a labor organization would not have the slightest influence with him either as to the employment or the discharge of any employee; that he himself was a member of the labor organizations of this city; that he was a member in good standing with these organizations; that he sympathized with their purposes and their objects, and that under no circumstances, even if an order should be passed by the board of directors, would he ever consent to be made the subservient tool of any policy that would affect the rights and liberty of a laboring man to join such organizations and to participate in the benefits which flow from them.

Being satisfied of that policy by the now existing organization of this railroad company, realizing that this was a collateral matter, which did not enter into and could not affect the merits of the question which was before the Senate, which was the giving of a great public benefit to a large number of citizens who are now compelled to walk up and down that long hill at Columbia Heights in the rain and slush and snow of winter and in the heat of summer, and believing that the purpose of the extension was a great public purpose, and not for the pecuniary advantage of that railroad company, I felt compelled, though I have all the sympathies which the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Texas have in reference to this matter, to say in the interest of the public that we should not put any obstruction in the path of the passage of the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. ALLEN. Could we not have required this corporation to make an adjustment with these men?

Mr. FAULKNER. If we had said—and that was the only way it could have been done—we will not pass this bill until the railroad company makes some adjustment with these men. And that is what I was asked to do and that is what I had determined to do, until I realized from the testimony before us that the policy of this company was not antagonistic to the rights of these men.

Mr. MILLS. Does the Senator not think that the adoption of my amendment would have a good effect?

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not think it would. I do not think that any corporation or anybody else has the right to transfer my employees over to another organization or body of men to say whether I shall discharge them or not.

Mr. MILLS. Do you not think that Congress had the right to require that in the grant of the act of incorporation of that company?

Mr. FAULKNER. Congress has power to impose any conditions upon the grant of franchises that it chooses to impose; but I say that I have no fear that Congress will ever pass a law which will provide that the employees of anybody, or any corporation, shall be transferred over to a board of commissioners to decide whether they shall continue as employees or not.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator justify the discharging of its employees by this corporation?

Mr. FAULKNER. No, sir; and I said I did not. I said that my sympathies on that subject were as strong as were the Senator's, and when I became satisfied that the policy of this company was not to do any such thing, then, under those circumstances, I could not and would not in the public interests interpose objections to the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator know that these corporations have blacklisted employees as if they had been guilty of crime?

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state that it was proved as conclusively as proof could be made that there is no blacklisting in the District of Columbia. On that point I was satisfied, and I came to the conclusion that there was no blacklisting on the part of the corporations in this District.

I have some question of doubt as to the other point, as to whether the evidence did not sustain the allegation that these men were, perhaps by reason of being agitators, as they were called, quietly discharged, but on the question of the blacklisting my mind is thoroughly satisfied.

Mr. ALLEN. Do I understand the Senator to say that because these men were agitators, as they were called—that is, American citizens who expressed their opinions—they were discharged in consequence of that fact?

Mr. FAULKNER. No, I do not mean that. I mean just what I say, and not what the Senator says. I mean to say that the impression was left on my mind, after hearing all the evidence, that by reason of the fact of these twelve men being active and earnest in trying to build up their organization, the railroad labor union, or whatever it may be called, urging men, and, as the officers of the railroad company claim, threatening them, so as to force them to join the labor organizations, did have an influence on the discharge of those men, but that was under a different administration of the Metropolitan Railroad Company. But the present president of that corporation, being a labor-union man himself, in full sympathy with labor and with organized labor, and he having assured the committee that it was his deliberate and well-considered policy not to interfere with them in any way, with the proof that there is a large number of labor-union men still in the employment of the company, and that they had never been interfered with, and with the statement of the president of the company that he had never asked any man whether he was a member of a labor union or not, and never would ask it in the employment of men by that company, convinced me that under the policy now existing there is no possibility whatever of this offense being committed.

Again, Mr. President, I should not be willing to recall this bill, even if I were in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Texas. When you make a law of that kind, it ought to apply to all corporations. Do not single out the very best corporation, the finest street railroad in the whole country. It has organized and gone to the expense, under a provision passed by this Congress which compelled them to do it, of putting in a magnificent line of railroad here at tremendous expense. Do not single out that particular railroad company and leave all the others out, but pass a general law for this District, if the Senator from Texas desires to do that. Then the question will come up for fair and full discussion as to the policy of transferring and turning over the question of the discharge of any employee of a corporation to be considered and heard by the District Commissioners.

Mr. President, I am a friend of organized labor, but I never would vote for such a provision as that. I recognize the rights of both parties in this great controversy—the right of labor to organize for self-protection, and the right of every man who employs labor either to discharge it or retain it, as, in his judgment, he believes his interest may be promoted. The laboring men can never receive protection by any provision of law of that character; they must receive it by combining, as capital combines, in labor organizations, and making the fight. For that reason I have always approved of organized labor.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator approve of organized capital overriding labor?

Mr. FAULKNER. No, sir; I do not; but I say your puny acts of legislation can not affect this question. Laboring men must have the manhood and courage to stand up and organize themselves; and when they do so, they are the equals of capital. Segregated, separated, and isolated, each man for himself, he is no competitor with capital; but when labor is organized it is the equal of capital at any time.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me to suggest that he is throwing his great influence for organized capital against organized labor in this important transaction?

Mr. FAULKNER. No, sir; I am not. I am saying, as a Senator on this floor, looking at the interests which are committed to me, that I can not let a collateral matter come in here and stop a public improvement, demanded by the citizens of this District, when I am satisfied that under the present policy of this company no such offense will ever again occur.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I shall not occupy much of the valuable time of the Senate this morning in presenting this case as I understand it, but I do beg the indulgence of the Senate for a very few minutes.

I turn to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, and I find the Senator from South Dakota propounded an inquiry to the Senator from Nebraska in these words:

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know whether it is simply to correct a clerical error?

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; a clerical error.

The Senator from Nebraska yesterday wanted to get this bill back to correct a clerical error, and now this morning he wants to get it back, according to his own testimony, to put a provision on it compelling this corporation to restore to their service certain men whom they have dismissed, and the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] wants to get the bill back to put on two or three sections of United States statutes, which apply to this question, and which are found in the laws at the present time, and are operative as regards this proposition.

Mr. MILLS. I wish my friend would not misstate my position. I said nothing about putting on any provision of the statutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. What the Senator proposes is in the statutes to-day, and applies to this and all other corporations.

Mr. MILLS. There is no such provision in the statutes. I shall not interrupt the Senator now, however, but I shall take the floor when he concludes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Committee on the District of Columbia, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] very properly and correctly stated, is a committee which is doing a vast amount of gratuitous and unappreciated work. They are considering legislation for this great District, and they are giving their valuable time, to the neglect of duties that pertain to their own States. They are listening to arguments and speeches and to all sorts of things which all sorts of men want to be heard upon in this District; and I do not deny the right of those men to demand of this committee that they shall be heard.

As regards the present bill, the committee gave it a long and careful consideration. Then it was reported to the Senate and placed upon the Calendar. These gentlemen appeared and asked for a hearing. That hearing was granted to them. We listened to them for two hours, and we took into consideration every argument they made. They presented the paper which has been read from the desk. That paper was sent to me almost a year ago, and I was commanded to telegraph certain gentlemen here representing this corporation that unless they restored these men I would, as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia and as a Senator, obstruct future legislation in their interest. That is not anything new to us. We have heard of it for a long time. Two gentlemen did make affidavits—at least their affidavits are there in print. They did not appear before the committee, but they swore that they understood that this corporation had discharged these men because they belonged to organized labor.

On the other side, Mr. Samuel L. Phillips, one of the best known men in the city of Washington, who was president of that railroad company at one time, has given a long affidavit denying every allegation that is made in that direction. Another gentleman, whose name I need only mention to have it recognized, Mr. H. B. Colman, made a similar affidavit, which is on my desk. Another gentleman, Mr. S. Thomas Brown, gave a similar affidavit. He is a gentleman of integrity and standing in this community. Mr. Robert D. Weaver also gave an affidavit denying these allegations. Mr. A. B. Grinnell likewise made an affidavit in the same line. We listened to all this testimony, we gave it careful consideration, and the committee were of opinion that this was a controversy which did not belong at the present time in the Congress of the United States. The bill was on the Calendar. The complaints that these men made—the hardships, if you please, that may have been imposed upon them—had a remedy in the courts of the District of Columbia. This bill simply proposed a small extension of this road. The president of the road appeared and said: "Our company do not care whether you give this charter or not; the citizens living along the line of those streets are demanding that this extension shall be made."

I will say to the Senate, Mr. President, that scores of those men have been to me; they have been to me during the last two days begging of me that the bill shall not be recalled from the President of the United States, because they want the advantages of rapid transit which other citizens in other portions of the District of Columbia have.

Here is this great corporation. It is a great corporation; in my judgment the finest street railway in the United States, and perhaps the finest street railway in any city of the entire world. These men were compelled by Congress to put in an underground system of electricity. They spent $2,300,000 to put in that system of underground propulsion, and they are to-day heavily in debt. They are giving the citizens of this District, in my judgment, the best transit that can be found in any city on the American continent, and, as I say, perhaps in any city of the world.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. GALLINGER. For a moment.

Mr. ALLEN. Does that justify their brutal conduct of their men?

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not justify anything. Neither would it justify us in striking a blow at this corporation at the dictation of a few outside men who imagine they have grievances or at the dictation of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. George H. Harries is at the head of the corporation. Who is Mr. George H. Harries? He is a man who has come up from the ranks; who worked his way up through a printing office. He is to-day a member of the labor organizations of this country. He is in profound sympathy with every man who is struggling as he has had to struggle. The Senator from Nebraska intimates that I stand here as the champion of a corporation against the rights of human labor. I myself am a member of the International Typographical Union. I know what it is to struggle for a living. I know what every workingman in this country has to contend against, and when the Senator from Nebraska intimates that I have not as much sympathy with laboring men in this country as he has, he has not a correct knowledge of the struggles I have had to get a living in this world.

Mr. President, I am in profound sympathy with these laboring men, and I am in profound sympathy with every laboring man who belongs to labor organizations, as I belong to labor organizations; but that is no reason why I should stand here and do a wrong to a corporation at the dictation of some outside men who come here and demand that they shall be restored to their places, that their wages shall be paid from the hour they were discharged, and this corporation shall be taken by the throat by these men and compelled to do their bidding. I resent it, I resist it, and I say the Senate of the United States can not afford to make any such record as that.

We have given this matter careful consideration. We have listened attentively to these men who imagine they have grievances and who perhaps have grievances, but Mr. Harries, who is at the head of this corporation, is a union man; he is in sympathy with labor; he says the question of unionism or nonunionism has never been raised, so far as the employees on the road are concerned, and I believe that in his hands the interest of labor as well as the interest of the men who are employing him is absolutely safe, and that we do not want any further legislation on this little bill for the purpose of protecting here the interests of labor or capital in the District of Columbia.

The time of the Senate is very valuable. Many other things might be said, but I will not weary the Senate in stating them. Both sides of the question have been heard; I think the matter is fully understood, and I now move to table the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. BACON. I trust the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his motion.

Mr. ALLEN. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not undertake to enforce any gag rule of that kind.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have made the motion in entire feeling that I am doing the right thing.

Mr. BACON. I desire to be heard.

Mr. GALLINGER. If Senators desire briefly to be heard, I will withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. BACON. I rose before to address the Senate, not upon the merits of the question, but impelled simply by the desire to repudiate and repel what I thought were unjust aspersions on the part of the Senator from Nebraska against the membership of the District Committee of this body.

I do not wish to do anything further on that branch than to say that of course I recognize the right of the Senator from Nebraska to criticise, legitimately, any action of the committee, and not only that committee, but any other committee, but I do not think it was within the legitimate sphere of criticism to suggest that the committee, by trickery, has got through this body a bill which it could not have got through under any other circumstances.

Mr. ALLEN. I did not suggest anything of the kind.

Mr. BACON. I accept the Senator's disclaimer, and I am very glad to do so.

Mr. ALLEN. I suggested nothing of the kind.

Mr. BACON. The thing which the opponents of the bill before the committee desired to have done was that an amendment should be put upon the bill which would require the company to arbitrate the issue between itself and these employees. I favor the principle of arbitration between large corporations and their employees, because I recognize the fact that employees, even in their aggregate capacity, are not in position to cope with the power of great corporations. But I do not recognize the propriety, and I think this point ought to be made to appear clearly to the Senate, of a special bill for a special arbitration in a particular case.

I desire to say to the Senator from Nebraska, favoring, as I know he does, the principle of arbitration, that if he wishes to reach this matter in a practical way, to the benefit of those whose interest he advocates here, and for whose interests I do not admit that he has any superior regard to myself, let him introduce a general bill for the purpose of submitting to arbitration disputes between corporations in the District and their employees. Let him advocate it, and when it is put to a vote he will find that I will vote for it; but I will decline to vote for arbitration in a particular case against a particular company.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me to suggest that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] has a bill of that kind before the Senate, and he can not even get it up and get a hearing.

Mr. BACON. It certainly is not the fault of the District Committee that it can not be got up. The thing for the Senator from Nebraska to do is what I have suggested.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not understand the Senator from Nebraska to say that the bill is confined solely to the District, and went to our committee. It is a general bill.

Mr. ALLEN. It is a general bill. It is such a bill as the Senator from Georgia referred to.

Mr. BACON. What is its scope? Is it confined to the District or does it go outside into the United States generally?

Mr. ALLEN. It takes in the District and the whole United States.

Mr. BACON. It is very difficult, as the interests are so varied, to get a bill framed which will meet the approval of everybody.

But if the Senator wants this particular matter to be effected in the District of Columbia, if he wishes to reach the particular evil which he says exists in this case—I shall not stop to discuss the merits of it—the way to do it is to secure a general bill which will insure arbitration between corporations in the District of Columbia and individual employees. I submit to the Senate, however, that it is opposed to every principle of law to incorporate upon the bill what was demanded, that there should be arbitration in this particular case. If the law of arbitration is to exist—and I repeat I favor it—it ought to be a general law, and not a provision for arbitration attached to a particular bill, and relating not only to a particular corporation, but to a particular dispute with one corporation. If the Senator from Nebraska introduces such a bill as I have indicated, he will not be a more earnest advocate than I; he will not more certainly vote for it than I will.

Mr. GALLINGER. I renew my motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator will not undertake to cut off debate?

Mr. GALLINGER. I prefer to have the vote taken.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I will take occasion at another time to correct some of the glaring errors and misstatements of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to lay on the table the pending resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the vote may now be taken on the resolution. Let us test the sense of the Senate upon it.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Nebraska asks the ordinary courtesy to speak. Let us extend it to him, whether or not we agree with the resolution.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will be permitted to speak. I appeal to the Senator from New Hampshire to withdraw his motion for that purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. I then shall feel constrained to move to proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, which is not debatable.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. ALLEN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

Mr. McBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], but I am sure that he would vote "yea," and therefore I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (when his name was called). I desire to inquire whether the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. TURPIE. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WILSON. I announce my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

Mr. NELSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who, I see, is not in his seat. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire if the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. PERKINS. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DUBOIS. I take the liberty of transferring my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE]. I am assured that the Senator from South Dakota would vote "nay." I am not certain how the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] would vote.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—30.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 268) concerning carriers engaged in interstate commerce and their employees was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The bill (H. R. 10023) setting apart a plot of public ground in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for memorial purposes, under the auspices of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

INTERNATIONAL MONETARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the international monetary conference bill which has come from the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. 3547) to provide for the representation of the United States by commissioners at any international monetary conference hereafter to be called.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the bill with the amendments of the House of Representatives may be printed for the use of the Senate. I shall call it up on Monday for action.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the House amendments may be stated. Let us hear them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendments of the House of Representatives are, on page 2, section 2, at the end of line 4, to insert:

And he is further authorized, if in his judgment the purpose specified in the first section hereof can thus be better attained, to appoint one or more special commissioners or envoys to such of the nations of Europe as he may designate to seek by diplomatic negotiations an international agreement for the purpose specified in the first section hereof. And in case of such appointment so much of the appropriation herein made as shall be necessary shall be available for the proper expenses and compensation of such commissioners or envoys.

SEC. 3. That so much of an act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," as provided for the appointment of delegates to an international conference and makes an appropriation for their compensation and expenses, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for the representation of the United States by commissioners at any international monetary conference hereafter to be called, and to enable the President to otherwise promote an international agreement."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall on Monday move to concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1743) to establish an additional land office in the State of Montana;

A bill (S. 3561) to grant a right of way through the Fort Spokane Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company; and

A bill (S. 3721) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 3623) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to define the jurisdiction of the police court of the District of Columbia;" and

A bill (H. R. 8582) to allow the bottling of distilled spirits in bond.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2232) to vacate Sugar Loaf reservoir site in Colorado and to restore the lands contained in the same to entry with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7320) to prevent trespassing upon and providing for the protection of national military parks, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HULL, Mr. CURTIS of New York, and Mr. TYLER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. PENDLETON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print, for distribution by the Department of State, 5,000 copies of the Commercial Relations for 1895 and 1896, and (in separate form) 10,000 copies of the Review of the World's Commerce, etc.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

JULIO SANGUILY.

Mr. DANIEL. I avail myself of this opportunity, Mr. President, after consultation with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] who is in charge of the Post-Office appropriation bill, simply to present certificates of naturalization of Julio Sanguily from the State of New York, and to ask that they may be made a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. They were kindly furnished me by the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], to whose courtesy I am much indebted.

I would also ask, Mr. President, in connection therewith, that there may be inserted in the RECORD section 2167 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, page 379, which contains the provision as to the naturalization of aliens under the age of 21 years, from which it will be seen that the certificates of naturalization are in conformity with that section.

I have no desire either to enter into any discussion or to provoke any at this stage.

Mr. HOAR. To what section does the Senator refer?

Mr. DANIEL. Section 2167 of Revised Statutes.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia, provided it does not lead to debate. If it does, I shall call for the regular order.

Mr. DANIEL. I was just about to state that I did not intend to enter into any discussion and hoped that I would not provoke any.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think it is quite reasonable that the request of the Senator should be granted. I do not wish to enter into a discussion of the matter at this time, but I wish to point out an additional section of the Revised Statutes which I wish to have go into the RECORD with the section referred to by the Senator.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope that may be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HOAR. Let it be stated from the desk, or let the Senator himself state it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia will please state his request.

Mr. DANIEL. That the credentials of naturalization of Julio Sanguily may be printed in the RECORD, and also section 2167 of the Revised Statutes to follow thereafter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I consent, on what I am sure will be agreed to, that section 2170 of the Revised Statutes be also added.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

Mr. HOAR. Before the request of the Senator from Virginia passes, I should like to suggest that the matter to be printed in the RECORD be inserted as of time immediately before the taking up of the Post-Office appropriation bill. We do not want it thrust in the midst of another subject, where we can not find it easily.

Mr. DANIEL. That may be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia? The Chair hears none, and the papers, together with the section of the Revised Statutes referred to by the Senator from Virginia, and also the section referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts, will be printed in the RECORD.

The certificate of naturalization of Julio Sanguily is as follows:

No. 23.

The people of the State of New York, by the grace of God free and independent,

To all to whom these presents shall come or may concern, greeting:

Know ye, that we, having examined the records and files in the office of the clerk of the county of New York, and clerk of the supreme court of said State for said county, do find certain affidavits in the matter of Julio Sanguily, on his naturalization—minor, there remaining, in the words and figures following, to wit:

[SEAL.]

Superior court of the city of New York.—In the matter of Julio Sanguily, on his application to become a citizen of the United States—minor.

STATE OF NEW YORK, City and County of New York, ss:

Joseph M. Mestre, of 450 West Twenty-third street (attorney), being duly sworn, doth depose and say that he is well acquainted with the above-named applicant; that the said applicant has resided in the United States for three years next preceding his arrival at the age of 21 years; that he has continued to reside therein to the present time; that he has resided five years within the United States, including three years of his minority, and that he has resided in the State of New York one year at least, immediately preceding this application; and that during that time he has behaved as a man of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the same; and deponent verily believes that for three years next preceding this application it has been the real and honest intention of the said applicant to become a citizen of the United States.

JOSEPH M. MESTRE.

Sworn in open court, this 6th day of August, 1878.

THOMAS BOESE, Clerk.

STATE OF NEW YORK, City and County of New York, ss:

Julio Sanguily, of corner of Forty-second street and Fifth avenue (gentleman), the above-named applicant, being duly sworn, says that he has arrived at the age of 21 years; that he has resided in the United States three years next preceding his arrival at that age, and has continued to reside therein to the present time; that he has resided five years within the United States, including the three years of his minority, and that he has resided one year at least, immediately preceding this application, within the State of New York, and that for three years next preceding this application it has been his real and honest intention to become a citizen of the United States.

JULIO SANGUILY.

Sworn in open court, this 6th day of August, 1878.

THOMAS BOESE, Clerk.

I do declare on oath that it is my bona fide intention, and has been for the three years next preceding this application, to become a citizen of the United States, and to renounce forever all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, State, or sovereignty whatever, and particularly to the King of Spain, of whom I was before a subject.

JULIO SANGUILY.

Sworn in open court, this 6th day of August, 1878.

THOMAS BOESE, Clerk.

I, Julio Sanguily, do solemnly swear that I will support the Constitution of the United States, and that I do absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, State, or sovereignty whatever, and particularly to the King of Spain, of whom I was before a subject.

JULIO SANGUILY.

Sworn in open court, this 6th day of August, 1878.

THOMAS BOESE, Clerk.

All which we have caused by these presents to be exemplified, and the seal of our said supreme court to be hereunto affixed.

Witness Hon. Roger A. Pryor, a justice of the supreme court for the city and county of New York, the 20th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1897, of our independence the one hundred and twenty-first.

[SEAL.]

HENRY D. PURROY, Clerk.

I, Roger A. Pryor, a presiding justice at a special term of the supreme court of the State of New York, for the city and county of New York, do hereby certify that Henry D. Purroy, whose name is subscribed to the preceding exemplification, is the clerk of the said county of New York and clerk of said supreme court for said county, duly elected and sworn, and that full faith and credit are due to his official acts. I further certify that the seal affixed to the exemplification is the seal of our said supreme court, and that the attestation thereof is in due form.

Dated New York, February 20, 1897.

ROGER A. PRYOR,

Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New York.

STATE OF NEW YORK, City and County of New York, ss:

I, Henry D. Purroy, clerk of the supreme court of said State, in and for the city and county of New York, do hereby certify that Hon. Roger A. Pryor, whose name is subscribed to the preceding certificate, is presiding justice at a special term of the supreme court of said State in and for the city and county of New York, duly elected and sworn, and that the signature of said justice to said certificate is genuine.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the said court, this 26th day of February, 1897.

No. 24.

The people of the State of New York, by the grace of God free and independent,

To all to whom these presents shall come or may concern, greeting:

Know ye, that we, having examined the records and files in the office of the clerk of the county of New York, and clerk of the supreme court of said State for said county, do find a certain certificate of naturalization there

[SEAL.] remaining, in the words and figures following, to wit:

United States of America, State of New York.

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK, ss:

Be it remembered, that on the 6th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1878, Julio Sanguily appeared in the superior court of the city of New York (the said court being a court of record, having common-law jurisdiction, and a clerk and seal) and applied to the said court to be admitted to become a citizen of the United States of America, pursuant to the provisions of the several acts of the Congress of the United States of America for that purpose made and provided. And the said applicant having thereupon produced to the court such evidence, made such declaration and renunciation, and taken such oaths as are by the said acts required:

Thereupon it was ordered by the said court that the said applicant be admitted, and he was accordingly admitted by the said court, to be a citizen of the United States of America.

In testimony whereof the seal of the said court is hereunto affixed this 6th day of August, 1878, and in the one hundred and third year of our independence.

By the court.

[SEAL.] THOMAS BOESE, Clerk.

All which we have caused by these presents to be exemplified, and the seal of our said supreme court to be hereunto affixed.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the said court this 26th day of February, 1897.

[SEAL.] HENRY D. PURROY, Clerk.

The sections of the Revised Statutes referred to are as follows:

SEC. 2167. Any alien, being under the age of 21 years, who has resided in the United States three years next preceding his arriving at that age, and who has continued to reside therein to the time he may make application to be admitted a citizen thereof, may, after he arrives at the age of 21 years, and after he has resided five years within the United States, including the three years of his minority, be admitted a citizen of the United States without having made the declaration required in the first condition of section 2165; but such alien shall make the declaration required therein at the time of his admission; and shall further declare, on oath, and prove to the satisfaction of the court, that, for two years next preceding, it has been his bona fide intention to become a citizen of the United States; and he shall in all other respects comply with the laws in regard to naturalization.

SEC. 2170. No alien shall be admitted to become a citizen who has not for the continued term of five years next preceding his admission resided within the United States.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print for distribution by the Department of State 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations for 1895 and 1896, and (in separate form) 10,000 copies of the "Review of the World's Commerce," etc., being part of said Commercial Relations.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and accede to the request of the House of Representatives for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to have certain papers relating to appointment of additional judge of United States court for the central district of the Indian Territory printed as a document to accompany the Indian appropriation bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

SUGAR LOAF RESERVOIR SITE.

Mr. TELLER. A Senate bill has been returned from the other House with some amendments. I desire to have action on the bill. The amendments are of no great importance, and I desire that they be concurred in. I ask that the amendments may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2332) to vacate Sugar Loaf reservoir site, in Colorado, and to restore the lands contained in the same to entry; which were, in line 10, after the word "at," to insert "public auction after thirty days' notice by advertisement;" in the same line, after the word "price," to strike out "of $2.50 per acre," and insert "at a price not less than $2.50 per acre;" and in line 12, after the word "prescribe," to insert "so as to secure the early building and permanent maintenance of a reservoir for the storage of water to increase the flow of the Arkansas River, as contemplated by the Government in reserving the reservoir sites of the arid region; but nothing herein shall prevent the purchasers, or their assigns, from using said water for mechanical, manufacturing, or other purpose which does not materially lessen said contemplated increased flow."

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me while I make a motion that the Senate take up what is known as the labor-commission bill?

Mr. HALE. I object for the present.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the request?

Mr. QUAY. My request was directed to the Senator from Iowa. The request was that the Senator from Iowa yield to me, that the appropriation bill might be temporarily laid aside while I make a motion to take up the labor-commission bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I am told by Senators around me that that bill will give rise to debate. If there can be unanimous consent that a vote shall be taken upon it, I might yield for that purpose. If it is to be taken up and displace the appropriation bill, I must object.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Maine objected yesterday to the consideration of the bill. I do not know whether he will or will not object to the proposition for unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. I do object.

Mr. QUAY. Do I understand that the Senator renews his objection?

Mr. HALE. For the present.

Mr. QUAY. So that unanimous consent can not be had?

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Maine, however, says "for the present." Shall I take that as an intimation——

Mr. HALE. I will confer with the Senator from Pennsylvania about the matter during the course of the day.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for a vote on the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the committee amendments may be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Free-delivery service," on page 3, line 13, after the word "service," to strike out "at Detroit;" in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty" and insert "ninety," and in line 15, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "fifty-four;" so as to make the clause read:

For incidental expenses, including twelve mechanics in the six largest cities, exclusively employed in repairing boxes and locks, and erecting boxes, planting posts and pedestals, at $900 per annum; letter boxes, package boxes, posts, satchels, repairs, marine free-delivery service, etc, $90,000; in all, $13,254,000.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 14, after the word "service," I move also to strike out the words "and so forth."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 19, to strike out:

The Postmaster-General is authorized to apply to the payment of the salaries of letter carriers for the fiscal year 1897 the sum of $23,000, being an unexpended balance of $13,500 of the appropriation for the current fiscal year for street letter boxes, posts, and pedestals, and an unexpended balance of $9,500 of the appropriation for the current fiscal year for package boxes.

Mr. ALLISON. I have a letter from the Postmaster-General asking that this paragraph, which the committee struck out, may be retained in the bill. The committee recommended the striking out of this provision because it is usual to make these reappropriations in the deficiency bill, but as it is a matter of no special importance I hope the Senate will disagree to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THURSTON in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill and read lines 4 and 5 on page 4, as follows:

For experimental rural free delivery, under the direction of the Postmaster-General, $50,000.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know that there is any better place in the bill to call attention to a matter which I have in mind. Last year there was, as the appropriation bill left the Senate, a provision in it for $50,000, which might be applied to defray the expense of what was called "experimental free delivery." There were some thirty offices in the country where there was an experimental free delivery. Some of them were self-supporting; among others one or two, one certainly, in Connecticut; and I took a very great interest in having that experimental free delivery continued, at least in the offices where it was self-supporting. But in conference that provision was reduced to $10,000 in the following words, under the head of "Free-delivery service:"

Provided further, That $10,000 of this amount may be used to defray the expense of experiments in rural free delivery under the direction of the Postmaster-General, and that the amount heretofore appropriated for this purpose and still unexpended be available for said experiments.

When the conference report was presented last year, I called the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the word "may" had been inserted, and asked him whether he understood that the experimental free delivery would be continued, at least in those offices which were self-supporting, and the chairman informed me that he did so understand it. I will read a little from the RECORD of last year—a very little. The chairman stated that—

The sum of $50,000 was stricken out and $10,000 inserted in lieu thereof, and in addition to that the amount heretofore appropriated for this purpose and still unexpended is made available in the future.

I said:

I notice that a little more is done than to strike out $50,000 from the Senate amendment and insert $10,000.

Then I stated how the Senate amendment read, and continued:

I see that the word "may" has been inserted. It is a small word, but I am very much afraid it may come to be a very important word. It now reads: "Provided further, That $10,000 of this amount may be used to defray the expense of experiments in rural free delivery."

As we understand that the Postmaster-General is not very favorable to these experiments, the little word "may" may result in there being no experimental free delivery after the 1st of July, 1896.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Connecticut will also observe that the amount heretofore appropriated for this purpose and still unexpended is made available. The word "may" is not inserted there. I have no doubt that the Postmaster-General will so use the money.

Mr. PLATT. While I am on my feet I wish to ask a question. Have the conferees any information upon the subject as to whether even in towns where the delivery has been paying its way it will be continued after the recommendation of the Postmaster-General, as I remember, that the whole matter should be discontinued?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand from the House conferees that that will be done. They had a consultation with the Postmaster-General. I have no doubt it will be done. I think in appropriations where the words "may in his discretion" or "in the discretion of the Postmaster-General" are not inserted it is generally regarded as equivalent to "shall."

The word "not" has evidently crept in there by mistake. The Senator from Iowa intended to say where those words are inserted they should be regarded as equivalent to the word "shall."

Notwithstanding that, immediately after the 1st of July, 1896, the free delivery in all those towns was discontinued at once. The attention of the Postmaster-General was called to it. His attention was called to what was stated here by the chairman of the conferees on the part of the Senate. He was thus informed that the intention of Congress was that that service should be continued. Yet, exercising a discretion which was given to him, he discontinued all of that service. I suppose nothing can be done about it now, but it was not according to the understanding of Congress, and the Postmaster-General knew that it was not; he discontinued those offices when he knew that the intention of Congress was the other way. I am sorry that I have not the correspondence showing somewhat the arbitrary way in which he dealt with this matter. I simply wish to call attention to it to show how the head of a Department overrode what he knew to be the intention of Congress, and that after his attention was called to it.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Connecticut directs his remarks, I think, against lines 4 and 5, on page 4.

Mr. PLATT. I do not direct my remarks against any lines in the bill; but I thought it was a good place to call attention to what had been done in the past.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that this appropriation is for experimental rural free delivery.

Mr. PLATT. An entirely different thing.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator is discussing the experiments in cities and towns?

Mr. PLATT. In towns having a less population than the number which the law requires. There was a law that in towns having less than 5,000, I believe it was, there might be experimental free delivery.

Mr. BUTLER. That is covered by another paragraph in the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I think not.

Mr. BUTLER. I think so. Has the Senator from Connecticut any information that the Department has discontinued its experiments in rural free delivery?

Mr. PLATT. There is a distinction between rural free delivery, which has been established within the past year, and experimental free delivery, as it was called, which existed up to the commencement of the past year.

Mr. BUTLER. There never was any experiment until the last appropriation was made one year ago.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator from North Carolina could not have heard what I said, I think. Before the passage of the last appropriation bill there were about 30 towns in the United States where under a provision in former appropriation acts free delivery had been established, those towns not having the number of population necessary under the general law. There was great discussion here last year as to whether that was to be abandoned or should be continued; and it was stated by the chairman of the committee that under the $10,000 appropriation in last year's appropriation act he had no doubt it would be continued; that the conferees on the part of the House had had a consultation with the Postmaster-General and they said it would be continued. Yet immediately after the 1st of July, 1896, it was arbitrarily abandoned by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BUTLER. The item under consideration is for experimental rural free delivery, under the direction of the Postmaster-General, $50,000.

Mr. PLATT. I do not object to that item. I am in favor of it.

Mr. BUTLER. I intended to offer an amendment to that provision. I see from the last report of the Postmaster-General, on page 25, he states that this appropriation, which is a cumulative appropriation—that is, a few years ago an appropriation of $10,000 was made for this purpose. The report of the Postmaster-General for 1895 stated that that was so small it was not sufficient to make a fair experiment, and therefore last year, in the Post-Office appropriation bill, I offered an amendment appropriating $40,000, and to make available, in addition to the $40,000, the cumulative appropriation of $10,000 for two or three years, that had been running and had not been used, to make these experiments. The Postmaster-General reports that he is now making these experiments and that—

Care has been taken to choose territory in starting widely divergent in physical features and in the occupations and density of its population.

He says:

I shall at a later date prepare for the information of Congress such data as the experience of a limited period may furnish the Department.

The pending bill continues the appropriation. It is not as large as the Postmaster-General has had, because it was about $70,000 last year—$40,000, with the appropriations which had accumulated. This year he is given $50,000 to continue it. We have no data to show whether $50,000 is sufficient or not, but certainly the experiment should be continued, for the Postmaster-General states that he is not yet ready to make a report as to the success of the experiment. I think that instead of reducing the appropriation it ought to be increased, so that he could make experiments in more than two or three localities. I understand that he is now making one experiment in Massachusetts, in a densely populated section, and he is making another, I think, in West Virginia, in a sparsely settled section. There should be a sufficient amount to make experiments in half a dozen different counties widely differing in condition, but we do not know how much is necessary, for the Postmaster-General does not give us any information as to how many places he is now making experiments in and how much is necessary. This information I have obtained unofficially. Therefore I will not offer an amendment, though I think there should be an increased appropriation. In the absence of information of any kind, except the fact that he is making the experiment, I will be satisfied that the appropriation shall go on until we can get some report from the Postmaster-General as to what is done and what can be done and what will be necessary.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment was, on page 5, line 1, before the word "expenses," to strike out "Miscellaneous" and insert "Stationery and necessary miscellaneous and incidental;" so as to make the clause read:

Stationery and necessary miscellaneous and incidental expenses for the money-order service, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 5, line 13, before the word "fifty," to insert "one hundred and;" and in line 15, after the word "devices," to insert "by purchase or otherwise;" so as to make the clause read:

For mail-messenger service, $1,000,000. And the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, use not exceeding the sum of $150,000 of this amount in the transportation of mail by pneumatic tube or other similar devices by purchase or otherwise.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "amount," in line 14, the words "to be immediately available."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 9, on page 6, the last clause read being as follows:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, of which a sum not exceeding $30,000 may be employed to pay freight on postal cards, stamped envelopes, and stamped paper and other supplies from the manufactories to the post-offices and depots of distribution, $29,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to offer an amendment, which I think will not be subject to a point of order. In line 9, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not pay more for the transportation of the railway mail than is paid by the express companies for like service.

We have, practically, no law regulating the price to be paid per ton for carrying the mail. We have simply a maximum rate that was fixed a number of years ago, and the Postmaster-General has the discretion to fix any price—at that maximum or lower. But since that maxium was fixed, transportation rates for passengers and freight have been reduced. The reduction in freight rates has been nearly 40 per cent; the reduction in passenger rates has been about 18 per cent, and yet here the Government is paying now as much for mail as was paid before these reductions were made by the railroad company to private individuals.

We have heard a great deal about the deficit of the Post-Office Department. If we want to stop that deficit, let us apply common business methods to the conduct of this Department, such business methods as any private individual would adopt in the management of his own business. Our Government pays for the service the railroads render the Government in hauling the mails about $80,000,000 a year, while the whole star-route system of the country costs only about $5,000,000. The star-route service, running out from every county, city, and railroad station, and ramifying the country districts, which we would expect to cost a very large amount of the expenses necessary to maintain the Post-Office Department, costs but about $5,000,000.

Mr. President, this amendment simply proposes that the Government shall stand on the same footing as express companies, private individuals, and corporations that have dealings with the railroad companies. It simply, in a general way, requires the Postmaster-General, in making the contract with each railroad company and fixing the amount to be paid for the mail hauled, not to pay more than express companies and other people pay the railroads for a similar service. If the Government wants to go into the business of giving free gifts, then I say, let us find those who are needy and poor. Let us give it to the poor Indians, the wards of the nation. If we are going to throw away money, let us give it to the soldiers who fought for their country; let us give it to the paupers, or the widows and orphans; but in a common business transaction let us deal with common business methods.

I submit that, inasmuch as the Postmaster-General has never seen fit to make a contract for less than the maximum rate, it is fitting and proper as well as high time that Congress should at least request and direct him to pay no more for this service than others pay the railroads for similar services.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 9, on page 6, insert:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not pay more for the transportation of the railway mail than is paid by the express companies for like service.

Mr. ALLISON. That is already in the statute. The Postmaster-General can not do that under existing law. I have no objection to the insertion of the provision. It is a mere reenactment of what is now the law.

Mr. BUTLER. Then there can be no objection to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly not.

Mr. BUTLER. All right.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, the question of the pay to the railroads for transporting the mails has received some attention, and the committee have placed in the bill an amendment which provides for a committee composed of members of this body and the House of Representatives to investigate and report upon this whole question; and there certainly seems great necessity for it.

After all, the railroad mail service is but an express service, for the average speed of the railway mail trains of this country is but 26 miles an hour, and the average distance the mail is carried is but 448 miles. Yet we are paying, according to the report of the Post-Office Department, 8 cents a pound for the transportation of mail matter, a much larger sum than the express companies charge for a like service, and they not only pay the railroads for the service, but pay their own officers and gain a profit besides, and in many instances a very large profit. In dealing with this matter the Government of the United States has paid no attention, it seems to me, to the ordinary methods of business, and in no instance for years has it pursued that course which any prudent business man would have pursued.

We pay as much per pound to-day for carrying the mails upon the railroads in this country as we paid in 1878. What business man in the United States doing an express business for which he paid from twenty to thirty million dollars a year would have continued to have paid without murmur or complaint the same price to-day that he paid in 1878? The cost of carrying the mail since 1878 has been reduced nearly one-half, and yet no effort has been made on the part of the United States to secure any reduction whatever. Nineteen years have rolled by, the volume of mail has increased enormously, and yet nothing has been done. To-day the New York Central Railroad, between New York and Buffalo, receives from the Government of the United States compensation sufficient to pay the interest on the cost of a double-track railroad every year. They obtain interest at 5 per cent on a cost of $60,000 a mile of road for the mail service alone, and yet no effort is made to secure a reduction. The mails of the country would be carried at a profit to the Government if we paid only what the service is worth for railroad transportation. This one reform would wipe out the deficiency in postal revenue.

Further than that, instead of decreasing the amount of mail that can be carried at a 1-cent rate, it ought to be increased. It can be carried for that rate at a profit. Second-class mail matter in this country can be carried by the railroads of this country at a profit at 1 cent a pound, and yet we are paying 8 cents. I believe I can demonstrate that proposition to the satisfaction of every person within the sound of my voice; yet Senators rise and talk about economy, and cut off an appropriation of $10,000 for necessary surveys in the West, while year after year they have voted to pay millions upon millions more than it is worth for the railway-mail service. I believe we can save eight or ten million dollars a year from this one item alone and yet pay all the mail service is worth.

In the report of the Postmaster-General for 1890 he makes this statement, calling the attention of Congress and the people of the United States to this question, and yet nothing has been done about it:

In the past twelve years no reduction of rates has taken place, though the freight rates upon all railroads have been steadily lowered. During this period the weight of the mails has largely increased. It is quite reasonable to say that the reduction in freight rates generally between 1878 and 1890 is not less than 20 per cent, and in many instances it is much more. The largest expenditure of the Department is for transportation. The estimates just sent to the Treasury for the next fiscal year cover $22,610,123.31 for railroad transportation alone.

This bill carries $29,000,000, and there is no reduction yet, although years have rolled away since that report was made.

Finally we have this bill, in which provision is made for investigating this subject, and I am making these remarks for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate and the House of Representatives to this question, so that this provision shall remain in the bill if the bill becomes a law.

Now, let us see what it is worth to perform this service. The report of Postmaster-General Bissell in 1894, page 53, shows that the average price paid for carrying mail was 8 cents a pound. Mr. Wilson, in his report of 1895, on page 31, makes the same statement. The report of the Postmaster-General for 1889, page 90, shows that the average haul of postal matter was 448 miles. You can make money carrying it in wagons at the price paid. The freight rate into the Black Hills before the days of the railroads, a distance of 205 miles, was $20 per ton. Yet we are paying $160 per ton for carrying the mails a little more than twice that distance.

True, we get a greater speed, but because we get the speed is no answer to the objection to this high rate unless the service is worth the price.

Mr. President, the Texas Pacific and Southern Pacific railroads carry caps, boots, cassimeres, and hardware from New Orleans to San Francisco for eight-tenths of a cent a pound, a distance of 1,500 miles, three times as far as the average distance the mail is carried, yet we pay 8 cents a pound for carrying the mails, or more than ten times as much. That, however, is not express service. But before I get through I shall show that freight rates are but a little larger than are charged for express service.

The distance from New York to Boston, in round numbers, is about 250 miles. The Adams Express Company carries 100 pounds for a cent a pound, and they carry the same amount from New York to Cleveland, a distance of five or six hundred miles, for a cent and three-quarters a pound.

The weight of the mail between New York and Boston or New York and Cleveland is greater than the weight carried by the express company on any of its trains, and yet we pay 8 cents a pound.

But here is a more interesting illustration. Milk is shipped by the railroads on the express trains, on the passenger trains, to New York, a distance of 396 miles, and the cans returned for nothing, for one-sixth of a cent a pound, and cream for one-fourth of a cent a pound, a uniform rate for the whole distance.

In an investigation had before the Interstate Commerce Commission last year, Mr. George R. Blanchard, representing the roads, testified that the distance could be extended to 1,000 miles with a uniform rate from every station, and that milk could be carried at a profit for one-sixth of a cent a pound over the whole distance, and one-fourth of a cent a pound over the whole distance for cream; yet we pay 8 cents for 448 miles.

Mr. Joseph H. Choate, who appeared for the railroads in one of those investigations, stated that a rate of one-half cent a pound on 40-quart cans of cream, and at one-third of a cent a pound on 40-quart cans of milk, and half those rates on bottled cream, brought a profit of from two to three hundred per cent, and he insisted on continuing the transportation. The dairymen near New York objected, and made complaint because the railroads brought the cream 400 miles and the milk for 400 miles at the same price that they charged for bringing it 50 or 60 miles. The railroad companies resisted a reduction of the rates for the long haul, which shows conclusively that they could do the business at a profit.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him a moment, I will call his attention to the obvious fact that in the carrying of milk cans, with which we are all no doubt entirely familiar, the railroad company puts them on the car and then takes them off again at the proper point, whereas in the case of the mail service the railroad has nothing to do with it, but the Post-Office puts its innumerable packages in the cars and throws them out, and the railroad company has nothing to do but haul the car.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is a very excellent suggestion, and in accordance with the facts.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it ought to be said in this connection that, as respects the cost to the railroads of transporting the mails, they are obliged to deliver the mails to post-offices that are within 80 rods of a railway station; and we have in this bill an appropriation for railway-messenger service—which means between the stations and the post-offices—of $1,300,000, or whatever the sum may be. That only covers about one-fifth of the post-offices, the mail to the other four-fifths being delivered by the railroad companies, and they certainly must pay something for those deliveries.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Oh, Mr. President, nearly all of those stations where a railroad company delivers the mails are within the 80-rod limit of the depot; they are small affairs; country stations, where the mail is thrown upon the top of the omnibus that goes to the train for passengers.

Mr. GEAR. I will state to the Senator these "small affairs" cost the railroad companies from seventy-five to one hundred and fifty dollars a year each.

Mr. PETTIGREW. No doubt they cost something, but perhaps not that much. They cost probably from $25 to $150 per year.

Mr. GEAR. I know whereof I speak when I say the cost is from seventy-five to one hundred and fifty dollars in each case, and if you will multiply that by the number of stations, you will find that it is not by any means a small affair.

Mr. PETTIGREW. They receive $29,000,000, and it is a small affair compared with the vast sum they receive for carrying the mails. When the representative of the railroads appeared before the Committee on Appropriations—I refer, Mr. President, when I say "representative of the railroads" to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General—the only argument he made for continuing this service at 8 cents a pound was that they had to deliver the mail from the car to the post-office where the stations were within 80 rods of the post-offices.

Mr. GEAR. I will state to the Senator that the $29,000,000 he alludes to is for all the service, not the delivery of the mail at these stations. Again, the compensation of some of these roads has been reduced, and not, as the Senator said, reduced a very small amount. I live on a fast-mail line, which extends 500 miles. That road is a land-grant road, and its compensation for this service has been reduced three different times, 20, 10, and 5 per cent. The reduction on that road amounts to more money than the original value of the lands which that road received from the Government. The road received 460,000 acres, which were open to entry and could have been bought by anybody for $1.25 an acre.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I did not yield to the Senator to make a speech.

Mr. GEAR. I did not want to make a speech. I merely wanted to put you right.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I can answer every proposition the Senator makes.

Mr. GEAR. I say these reductions amount to twice as much as the lands were worth when they were granted.

Mr. PETTIGREW. You can find instances where the receipts of the railroads are small; but I contend it is not individual cases or isolated railroads that make an argument as against the proof, which is uniform, which shows there has been no reduction in the price paid for this service since 1878; and yet the cost of the service has decreased since that time nearly one-half. Whatever may be said, the compensation has continued the same.

Mr. GEAR. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I decline to yield further. I shall be glad to hear the Senator when I get through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. GEAR. All right.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have just read from the report of the Postmaster-General for 1890, in which he states that at that time no reduction had been made in this rate since 1878, and I assert that no reduction has been made since 1890.

But in addition to the payment for carrying the mail we allow $3,600,000 as compensation for the mail cars in this bill; and I assert that you can purchase new mail cars for every mail car now in the service for $500,000 less than the amount we are to pay next year for the use of those in the service, and that every year for the last twenty years we have paid more for the use of postal cars than new cars would cost. The life of one of these cars is from twelve to twenty years; and therefore we have paid twenty times over the cost of new cars in the last twenty years.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BUTLER. I inquire of the Senator whether new cars could not be built for one-half of what we pay for the rent of them?

Mr. PETTIGREW. No; not for one half, but they can be built for five or six hundred thousand dollars less than what we are going to pay for the use of the cars for the next fiscal year. We could buy them over and over and over again for what we pay for the use of them.

Then we pay for carrying the mails in those cars 8 cents a pound, and we have continued this system for years. I trust it will come to an end; I trust that when we get the report of this commission that we may be able to correct these evils. The only wonder is that we have not done it long ago.

What is more, Mr. President, the Texas Pacific and Southern Pacific, when attacked for carrying freight from New Orleans to San Francisco at eight-tenths of a cent per pound, resisted increasing the rate, because they could carry it for that. They were carrying, however, foreign goods, not American manufactures, and American manufacturers complained because they had to pay nearly twice as much. The matter was brought before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it was taken into the courts, and the roads hired lawyers, and they fought it through; they fought for the privilege of carrying this freight for eight-tenths of a cent a pound over the whole distance, and won their case.

What good is your tariff with a condition like that? Our foreign railroads—and they are nearly all owned in foreign lands; the officers of the road are simply the hired men to conduct the business—can place a rate upon foreign goods to distant interior points of this country which will absolutely destroy the protection of any tariff you choose to pass.

The Southern Pacific and Central Pacific railroads carry freight from New Orleans to San Francisco manufactured in foreign countries for a little over one-half of what they will carry goods manufactured in this country of a like character. That will be one of the questions to which the Senate ought to pay attention when we come to pass our new tariff bill, the modern recipe for prosperity.

Yet more, Mr. President. In regard to freight rates in England, let us see what has been accomplished there. The Great Eastern Railway of England, with a thousand miles of track, will carry farm products over its whole system, the whole distance of a thousand miles, for the rates I shall mention. Farm products, done up in packages of 20 pounds, so that they are convenient to handle like an express package, can be carried upon fast trains over the whole 1,000 miles for 8 cents, considerably less than half a cent a pound; yet we pay for carrying the mails 8 cents a pound, or twenty times as much. From 20 to 25 pound packages can be carried for 10 cents over the whole system, and our railroads can carry the mails at a profit for the same price. This is the rate fixed by this road: 25 to 30 pounds for 12 cents, 60 pounds for 25 cents, over the whole system—the whole thousand miles—yet the average haul of the mails in this country is but 448 miles, according to the report of the Postmaster-General, and we pay 8 cents a pound.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the average haul over the line of which the Senator speaks?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not know what the average haul is, but they will haul it the whole thousand miles for these prices.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that; but the Senator knows that that railroad, which has a thousand miles of track, has it within a radius of a few hundred miles.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I understand perfectly well the statement of the Senator; but the difference is between paying only 25 cents for 60 pounds and 8 cents a pound. That rate is fixed voluntarily by the road itself, and yet we have continued since 1878 paying this enormous price, and no effort has been made to reduce it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from South Dakota, if he will permit me, whether or not the Second Assistant Postmaster-General did not say that that statement was an error, and that, so far as he was able to ascertain the facts, the cost of carrying the mails was about 1¼ cents per pound.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The report of the Postmaster-General for 1894, page 33, is that it costs 8 cents per pound, and he figures up what is lost between what is received and what we pay for carrying the mail. This was Mr. Bissell's report. Mr. Wilson in his report for 1895, on page 31, makes the same statement.

Oh, yes; the Second Assistant Postmaster-General came before the committee, and I should like to have every Senator read his testimony. I read an extract from it. I put to him this question:

You told us something of your business before you went into the post-office service.

Mr. NEILSON. Yes.

Senator PETTIGREW. What was that?

Mr. NEILSON. I was in the railroad service.

Senator PETTIGREW. What railroads?

Mr. NEILSON. I was on the Northern Pacific and on the Erie. I was on the Erie for twelve years and on the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton for eight years.

Senator PETTIGREW. Which road did you leave at the time you went into the Department?

Mr. NEILSON. The Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton.

Senator PETTIGREW. What is the full name of that road?

Mr. NEILSON. The Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton.

Senator PETTIGREW. What was your position on that road?

Mr. NEILSON. General superintendent of the road.

Senator PETTIGREW. Who was your predecessor in the post-office service?

Mr. NEILSON. Mr. J. Lowrie Bell.

Senator CULLOM. He was a railroad man, too, was he not, or had been?

Mr. NEILSON. He is now the general traffic manager of the Central Railroad of New Jersey.

He resigned his position of general superintendent of a railroad to become Second Assistant Postmaster-General, with a salary of $4,000 a year. I say we heard from the railroads when we heard from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. No doubt when he goes out of office after the 4th of March he will again enter the railroad service with a large salary. The general superintendents of railroads get all the way from ten to thirty and forty thousand dollars a year, and he resigned the position of general superintendent to take $4,000 a year. Perhaps he did it for glory. I will refer to some other things he said, in answer to the Senator from West Virginia.

I asked him how far the average haul of the mail was, and he said a thousand miles. He has studied this question, and his testimony is valuable, is it not, Mr. President? Then he stands up and says the reports of the Postmasters-General are not correct, that we do not pay 8 cents a pound; and he did not know how much we paid, nor how far the haul was. The Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, who was just beside him, corrected him, and said the average haul was not over half that distance. The official reports of the Department show that the average haul is 448 miles. I suppose he had not had time to read the reports. He was made Second Assistant Postmaster-General in the interest of the railroads, and knew what he was there for, and did not propose to do anything else.

Mr. President, the express companies carry 100 pounds from New York to New Haven for a half cent a pound, to Boston for 1 cent a pound, to Cleveland for 1½ cents a pound, to New Orleans for 5 cents a pound, and we pay 8 cents a pound from New York to New Orleans, when our average haul is but 448 miles. The express companies will haul express a thousand miles for 5 cents a pound; they will carry express packages from New York to Elizabeth, 25 miles, for four-tenths of a cent per pound; to Jersey City for one-quarter of a cent; and this includes the delivery from domicile to domicile.

What more, Mr. President? As I said, this bill carries an item of $3,600,000 for the use of postal cars. Let us see how the railroads have responded to this generosity on the part of the Government; let us see how they have met these gifts; let us see how they have felt toward this Government for these enormous contributions, which in the last fifteen years have amounted to millions upon millions of dollars.

In the first place, they cheat every time they weigh the mails.

Mr. WILSON. How often is the mail weighed?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is weighed once in four years, or oftener if they desire it.

Mr. WILSON. Does the Senator know whether there is or is not a reweighing?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Last spring—I will read first from the report of the Postmaster-General under the head of "Weighing the mails," from the report of 1896:

The Department takes every precaution at its command to insure honest weighing of the railroad mails. But this has not prevented one or two attempts on the part of railroad officials to pad the mails during the weighing season.

Mr. GORMAN. From what page does the Senator read?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Page 35. The report continues:

In the case of one of the more important lines the effort to do this was so clear—

It must have been very clear to awaken that Department—and the Department secured through its inspectors such detailed and damaging evidence that I transmitted the papers to the Attorney-General, with request for criminal prosecution.

It must have been a very bad case.

Existing statutes, however, are so defective that some changes in the criminal law are imperatively necessary to insure the conviction and adequate punishment of those who attempt or who perpetrate such frauds on the Government.

What are the facts? The Seaboard Air Line procured 16 tons of public documents, franked by some member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate. They can secure them without the connivance at all of the persons who frank them. They ship them back and forth to their station agents. They ship this franked matter during the weighing season to a station, and have their agents take out the packages from the bags, redirect them, and mail them again. So they kept these 16 tons of frankable matter going for thirty days. The Department determined to have a reweighing. They had a reweighing for thirty days more, and then the railroad company secured an extra edition of a newspaper that weighed 5 tons; they shipped that back and forth along the line and distributed it over the line during the thirty days, and when the Postmaster-General complained, they asked him what he was going to do about it. And Mr. McBee, the manager of the road, asked the Postmaster-General why the Seaboard Air Line had been singled out for criticism for stuffing the mails during the reweighing period, when it was well known that all railroads practiced the same fraud upon the Government. So it is the general practice. There is no doubt about it. Everybody knows it. We do not need to investigate the matter much to learn that fact.

What is more, Mr. President, in addition to that they have set up a mail service of their own. Not only have they carried their own letters, which is the paying part of the mail service, but they carry each other's mail and distribute it from one road to another, and they set up a regular system of post-offices to carry the railway mail. There is great profit in carrying the mail which should pay 2 cents postage, and so the railroads have organized on their own hook a postal system which defrauds the Government out of hundreds of thousands, and I believe millions, of dollars a year because that branch of the service, the carrying of letters, is profitable.

In the Postmaster-General's report made in 1896, page 215, attention is called to this point by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. It seems at first glance very astonishing that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General should call attention to this matter, but the employees began to use this railroad post-office. The employees handling the railway mail put their own letters into it, and the Second Assistant Postmaster-General then began to call attention to the matter. It got to be an enormous abuse. The railroads got nothing for doing the service. So long as they could do it for each other, it was a saving to their revenues—these foreign-owned corporations of ours; our masters rather than our servants—and they found no fault, but the very moment the employees began extensively to send their letters through the railway post-office service, the only way to get around it was to abolish the system. So the Second Assistant Postmaster-General calls attention to it and asks that legislation may be had to stop this practice.

The following from the report of the Postmaster-General for 1896 is of interest in this connection:

It was found upon close investigation, which was brought out more particularly by the detection of private correspondence being carried on under the cover of what is known as a "railroad business" envelope, that in some cases the families of employees were using this method of communicating with outsiders as well as those connected with the railroads. A careful investigation also disclosed the fact that the railroad companies themselves were misusing the privileges granted them by the Department in the character of their own correspondence and acting as intermediate carriers of mail between other companies and individuals. In connection with this misuse of the postal privileges granted the railroad companies, schemes had been worked out and interchange offices had been established which formed a complete system of postal facilities.

July 2, 1896, the Postmaster-General issued Order No. 422, calling the attention of the railroad companies to the impropriety of their actions in such matter and requesting them to conform to sections 3985 and 3996 of the Revised Statutes, and notifying them that the statutes would be rigidly enforced.

So this is the response we have received to this enormous payment, to this generous treatment. They cheat us in regard to weighing the mails; they set up post-offices of their own, and a post-office mail service of their own to carry first-class mail matter, upon which class of matter there is a large profit to the Government. If there is a necessity for the reduction of expenses, here is a field where economists can profitably exercise their talents.

Mr. President, when the Indian appropriation bill was under consideration the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] was clamorous for economy. He talked about the deficiency of revenue and the depleted Treasury. He wanted to strike off an item of four or five thousand dollars for an Indian school in the West. Here is a chance for him to develop his genius. Here is a chance for him to exercise his talents in the interest of real economy, and yet he is silent upon this subject.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether he does not believe that the present law gives sufficient authority to the Postmaster-General to prevent this abuse, and whether it has not grown up simply because of a want of proper administration?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I doubt if the present law is sufficient to reach all these difficulties, but I do believe that there is ample power to secure a reduction of these rates if they wanted to do it. But how can you expect that they will do anything when one Administration after another, it makes no difference whether it is Democratic or Republican, appoints railroad employees, who resign salaries four and five times greater than the Government pays to enter this service?

Mr. GORMAN. I made special inquiry, if the Senator will pardon me, as to the feature he was speaking of last, that is to say, the custom which has grown up with the railroad companies to establish postal facilities of their own. I believe the Postmaster-General, in the very report that the Senator read from, claims that having brought the Attorney-General's attention to the provisions of the law, he has since made regulations which will prevent further abuse in that line.

I do not understand the Senator to say that it is a defect in the law. The Senator will find it on page 216 of the Postmaster-General's report. He claims that he has corrected that abuse. So, if that be true, no further legislation by Congress is necessary. It only requires a vigorous and honest administration of the Post-Office Department so far as that particular branch of the service is concerned.

Mr. PETTIGREW. These railroads come to Congress and want legislation to compel them to keep their agreements with each other. My observation is that the present law is not sufficient to make them keep an agreement with the Postmaster-General; that the penalty must be severe and the punishment certain before they will obey the statute or keep an agreement with the Department.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARTER in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the Senator know that the present law gives the Postmaster-General full power to have the mails weighed as often as he sees fit, and to refuse to certify the weight until he is satisfied that it is an honest weighing? So under the present law the Postmaster-General can have a weighing every thirty days, if he thinks necessary, and refuse to certify it. The roads would never get a chance until he makes the contract, and when he makes the contract for a given amount of money, there the Government's responsibility begins and not before. The trouble now is that they allow this padding to go on constantly, incessantly, on every railroad in the country, and the Postmaster-General has ample authority and power now conferred upon him by statute to prevent it. The two great abuses are, first, that the Government pays too high a price for the carriage of the mails: and second, that it pays for mail that is not carried. It pays for a vastly larger weight of mail than is actually carried.

The Postmaster-General can correct both abuses, because one statute gives him the power to weigh the mails and to see that there is an honest weighing and not to certify until it is done. The other statute gives him the power to fix the rate per ton. He can fix it. He has ample authority to put it at anything he pleases below a certain maximum. He can not go over a certain amount fixed by law. That amount, as has been stated, was fixed in 1878, and we are now exactly paying that maximum established in 1878. Every abuse that is complained of the Postmaster-General can correct and put a surplus into the treasury of that Department instead of having a deficit, if he sees fit to exercise his power under the present law.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is hardly necessary to answer the Senator from North Carolina, as he proceeded to do that himself. However, while the Postmaster-General can reweigh and can weigh as often as he chooses where he thinks frauds have been practiced, still he says in his report for 1896:

Existing statutes, however, are so defective that some changes in the criminal law are imperatively necessary to insure the conviction and adequate punishment of those who attempt or who perpetrate such frauds on the Government.

So that after all the statute is defective, and he realizes, having been in the railroad service all his life, that it is only the sure conviction of a criminal offense that will make a railroad official obey the law. I shall be very glad, however, if the next Postmaster-General shall see fit to exercise the power he has under existing statutes to correct this evil.

Mr. President, I did not intend when I rose to discuss this question to occupy the time I have devoted to it. I intended simply to call attention to these figures, to these facts, to compare the prices we are paying with the prices individuals pay for similar service, for the purpose of emphasizing the importance of retaining this provision in the bill, which creates a commission to investigate the frauds connected with this service. I think, however, that we ought to amend it by providing that not more than 80 per cent of the amount paid last year shall be paid in the next fiscal year for this service. That would strike off one-fifth of the amount we are now paying at once, and thus save nearly $6,000,000.

I will not make that motion, however; and I will not make it for the reason that under existing law if the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina is adopted, the Postmaster-General can apply the remedy if he pleases, and I hope he will do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment stated by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 9, page 6, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not pay more for the transportation of the railway mail than is paid by the express companies for like service.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment certainly is objectionable. It does not apply to the paragraph under consideration. It should be "railway mail between said points."

Mr. BUTLER. Weight and distance being the same, I submit that when you say "like service"——

Mr. ALLISON. "Between said points." We are dealing now with this transfer.

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to add "between said points."

Mr. BUTLER. Before the Senator makes the motion, I will call attention to the fact that the amendment comes in at line 9 and not at the end of line 17. I purposely put it in line 9 so as not to affect the special amendment the committee propose to add.

Mr. ALLISON. I object to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves to amend the amendment by inserting what will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the words "between said points;" so as to read:

By express companies for like service between said points.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my suggestion. I supposed the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina was to be inserted after the word "dollars" in line 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the amendment suggested by the Senator from North Carolina should not be adopted at this time. If we are to have an investigation of this subject, I think we had better know something about the rates that ought to be paid. Of course if we want to decide now and investigate afterwards, the Senator from North Carolina seems to know about this matter, and I confess I do not——

Mr. BUTLER. I submit that the investigation will be all right in due time, but this applies to the present year. It will be another year before we can have the result of the investigation. It is simply that the Government shall not pay for like service more than others are paying, and there can be no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order upon the amendment that it changes existing law and therefore is not in order.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I understood the Senator accepted the amendment when it was offered, and said it conforms to existing law.

Mr. ALLISON. I accepted it conditionally, because I supposed it applied to this particular provision as to the transfer.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not know that I particularly object. I am willing that the incoming Administration, inasmuch as they have power to correct these evils, shall try their hand at it.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will also take that view as respects the new Administration.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not believe they will do it, however.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the Senator from Iowa to say that this proposes to change existing law?

Mr. ALLISON. I think it changes existing law. The rates for railroad transportation are fixed by statute, and if there is a statute which incorporates the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina I am not aware of it. If he will show it to me, then I will say, of course, that it does not change existing law.

Mr. BUTLER. I call the Senator's attention to the Revised Statutes, section 4002, and I ask the Secretary to read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 4002. The Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation hereafter to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes upon the conditions and at the rates hereinafter mentioned:

First. That the mails shall be conveyed with due frequency and speed, and that sufficient and suitable room, fixtures, and furniture, in a car or apartment properly lighted and warmed, shall be provided for route agents to accompany and distribute the mails.

Second. That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of 200 pounds, $50; 500 pounds, $75; 1,000 pounds, $100; 1,500 pounds, $125; 2,000 pounds, $150; 3,500 pounds, $175; 5,000 pounds, $200, and $25 additional for every additional 2,000 pounds, the average weight to be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than thirty, at such times after June 30, 1873, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, it strikes me that it would be unwise for us at this time to make an ironbound law with reference to this subject, as provided by the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. The reason why I think so is that the bill provides for a commission to investigate the very subject upon which it is proposed by the Senator from North Carolina to legislate definitely and positively. We had some little evidence before the committee as to the question of cost between the railroad transportation by mail and by express, and in comparing them I think that up to 4 pounds the difference was about 2 cents lower by express than by mail. That was the rate submitted to the committee.

There are a great many things in connection with this matter, and the Senate should not enact this proposition into law without considering them. So many things enter into it, in fact, that the committee found themselves absolutely unable, without investigation through a commission, to determine what is fair and just upon this question. If the Senator from North Carolina will notice, the commission is required to make its report the 1st of next January, so that we can have it here before Congress when the appropriations are to be made for the next fiscal year.

For example, the express car is a cheap car compared with the cost of a mail car. It has nothing in it whatever—it is a mere box car—except that at one end they put in some pigeonholes, while a large amount of paraphernalia is necessary for a mail car. An express car is not required to be heated or lighted under the terms of the contracts with the railroad.

Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator from West Virginia for a moment?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I call the Senator's attention to lines 18 and 19 of the next paragraph, which we have not yet reached:

For railroad post-office car service, $3,600,000.

That is for the rent of the cars after paying the railroads for hauling this matter, and also for keeping them lighted, heated, and the general furnishing of the car.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand that.

Mr. BUTLER. So it is proposed to make an appropriation here for the service of which the Senator is speaking that is twice what it will cost, and I can prove it to the Senate or to any committee.

Mr. FAULKNER. We are going to attempt to prove that, if we can, through the commission; and we determined to be as liberal as possible. We determined to invest the commission with such powers that they can employ the finest experts who can be obtained in the United States to investigate thoroughly and to probe this whole question to the bottom, so that when we do act we can act intelligently.

For example, there are 40,000 stations in this country. This information came to me as the result of a very brief examination before the committee. At only 7,000 of those 40,000 stations in this country are contracts made by the Government for the transportation of the mail from the station to the post-office, and it costs two or three million dollars to do it. At the remainder, 33,000 stations, the railroad companies, as included in the cost of transportation, are compelled for that compensation to transport the mail from the stations to the post-office, to provide rooms for the mail to be stored at night, to be responsible for the mails, to employ the men necessary to handle the mail at the stations, and also to have the trucks, etc., necessary to transact that business.

Mr. BUTLER. May I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that all the points he is making are outside of the amendment entirely?

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand that the amendment——

Mr. BUTLER. They are entirely outside the amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand that the amendment of the Senator is to limit the cost of transportation to the sum paid by the express companies.

Mr. BUTLER. For like service. That is the proviso.

Mr. FAULKNER. "Like service."

Mr. CALL. What is "like service?"

Mr. FAULKNER. It is impossible to say what "like service" is, in the first place, and it will be impossible to compare the mail service with the express service. The express companies are insurers of their own goods. The express companies handle all their own goods. The express companies have to pay rent for every one of the rooms in the stations which they must have in order to handle their business. They have to provide their own men to handle the goods at the station. They have to provide, also, the trucks upon which they have to handle them. The amount for the transportation of mail clerks of itself would reach up to $3,000,000 if fare was paid for the transportation of these men upon trains at the ordinary rates. All that is done and included in the cost of transportation, and it is not required by the express companies. So it is almost impossible to make a comparison between the cost of the two services, and yet the Senator forces that comparison by the proposition to enact a specific and distinct law to that effect.

Mr. BUTLER. It leaves that in the discretion of the Postmaster-General, and requires him to say what is a similar service and what is not, and then the Postmaster-General in his next report will give the Senate information that he has never given to the public so far, and he will tell you why he pays the railroads so much and what is similar and what is dissimilar service. The amendment is not ironbound. It is simply of a nature that requires the Postmaster-General in his discretion not to pay for a like service more than the express companies and individuals pay.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the amendment of the Senator be adopted, I do not know that it would not increase the cost of the transportation of the mails. But we do not care about relying upon the report of the Postmaster-General when we here have appointed our own commission.

Mr. BUTLER. You have not appointed it yet.

Mr. FAULKNER. We hope to appoint it.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us discuss that question when we get to it.

Mr. FAULKNER. And we believe that we will succeed in getting the Congress of the United States to make a thorough investigation of this matter through the commission. I assume that where a great public question of this character is brought before Congress, for the purpose of investigating the amount of appropriation necessary to defray the public expenditures upon a very complicated and difficult question, it will not refuse to appoint the commission.

I therefore insist upon the point of order suggested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that this is general legislation; that it is not reported from any committee; that it has the indorsement of no committee, and has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations one day before it was offered in the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask to have the amendment stated before the Chair rules upon the point of order?

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 9, page 6, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not pay more for the transportation of the railway mail than is paid by the express companies for like service.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am not in favor of the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina. I think the whole subject should be investigated, and that question will come up later in the consideration of this bill, but I am not willing to assent to the proposition that there is a rule of the Senate that we can not in making an appropriation of $29,000,000 put any limitations upon the methods in which it shall be expended to accomplish the general purpose intended. We are not obliged to pay this money in the precise way that former appropriations of this kind have been paid out. It is customary, and it is a good custom and a proper practice, to put upon large appropriations specific limitations and directions as to how the expenditures shall be made.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, that is in cases where specific limitations have not already been put by law upon the appropriations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I appreciate the distinction made by the Senator, and he may possibly be right in this case, and yet it is a doctrine as to the construction of our rules which I am not willing fully to admit, that where a large appropriation is made and an amendment is proposed that it shall be paid in a particular direction, that it shall not be used for a particular purpose, that that amendment is out of order. I am not willing to assent to that doctrine at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I had read a few moments ago section 4002 of the Revised Statutes. Those who paid attention to the reading of that statute will notice that it fixes a maximum rate and leaves it to the discretion of the Postmaster-General to reduce it from time to time in his judgment. There have been two amendments to that statute, which is before you. One was in 1876, which reduced the maximum 10 per cent. I will not ask that that be read unless it is called for, as it would take time. In 1878 there was another amendment passed by Congress reducing the maximum rate 5 per cent, leaving all the provisions of the act which is before you in full force, simply reducing the maximum rate.

I submit that it is not new legislation in the appropriation bill, it is not general legislation that is subject to the rule of order, when you are making an appropriation of $29,000,000, to say, provided that not more of this amount shall be used for this service than is paid for like services by other individuals and corporations. We have already put the matter in the discretion of the Postmaster-General. This is simply calling his attention to a limit and asking him to use his discretion that the Government shall not pay more for this service than others pay for a like service. It is merely a limitation upon the appropriation, and I submit it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. FAULKNER. That the point of order may be definitely known to the Chair, I will state that I make first the point of order that the amendment proposes to incorporate into the law general legislation that is not there, that it makes a limitation upon the Postmaster-General which is not in the law, and therefore changes existing law. The second point is that it is an amendment to an appropriation bill not reported by any committee. Another point is that it was not even reported by a committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations for consideration a day before it was presented in the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from West Virginia says that the amendment changes existing laws he admits that the Postmaster-General is paying more to-day for services than he ought to pay.

Mr. FAULKNER. No; I say that the law stating what his discretion shall be as to a given maximum amount, the amendment adds an additional provision that, although the maximum remains, in addition to that he is not to pay more than is paid by the express companies; and it is an additional provision and limitation that is not in existing law.

Mr. BUTLER. It is a mere limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us have the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say something before the ruling is made, with the permission of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from West Virginia can not be serious in his last proposition. There is no requirement that an amendment of this kind shall be reported by a committee of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment does not add any sum to the amount appropriated. If it increased the appropriation or added a new item, the Senator would be right; but when the Senator says that a mere provision not increasing an appropriation, but limiting the manner in which that appropriation is to be expended, must be notified to the committee of which he is an honored member before it can be offered in this Chamber, he is mistaken. So the Senator is pushed again upon the original proposition that the amendment changes existing law.

Mr. President, I repudiate the idea that when these annual appropriations are made, as they are required to be made year after year, there can not be a limitation on any one of the appropriations as to the manner in which it shall be expended which can be proposed by any Senator in this body when the appropriation bill is under discussion and whether any notice is given of it or not. I submit to the good judgment of the Senator from West Virginia that he is entirely wrong in his point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By the terms of existing law the amount to be paid by the Postmaster-General for the transportation of mails is to be determined by certain definite factors consisting of distance and weight. The proposed amendment suggests that hereafter, should the amendment become a law, the Postmaster-General shall deviate from the definite quantities now prescribed by the statute and inquire concerning the amount paid by certain express companies between different points. The proposed amendment, the Chair believes, would change essentially the basis of computation from definite factors to a wide, broad, indefinite field which might be constantly shifting. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BUTLER. I feel constrained to appeal from the decision of the Chair. Before entering the appeal, though, the Chair will pardon me that I may ask the Senator from Iowa a question. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he would make a point of order against a proposition to reduce this appropriation from $29,000,000 to $20,000,000?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what I shall do on any particular amendment until it is offered and read at the desk.

Mr. BUTLER. I submit that I do not wish to offer an amendment of that kind, though I am prepared to furnish ample evidence to the Senate (and I will take the time of the Senate to do it on that amendment) that $20,000,000 is more than sufficient to pay for the railway mail service of this country. I do not wish to limit the amount, but I prefer to leave the whole appropriation of $29,000,000 and provide that only so much of it shall be used as is necessary to pay a rate to the railroads similar to that which they now get from express companies and other business concerns. I submit that that is fairer. I submit the point of order can not be made by the chairman against a proposition to reduce the appropriation to $20,000,000 or any other amount. If he were to make the point, the Chair would not sustain him.

Then, why is not this better, because it leaves the whole matter with the Postmaster-General, and on its equity? It needs no proof to show that it is fair. It is fair on its face. If $29,000,000 is necessary, then expend it; if $20,000,000 is necessary, expend it. But I will take the time of the Senate to prove that $20,000,000 is more than sufficient, if the point of order is insisted upon against this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. GEAR. I suggest the lack of a quorum.

Mr. ALLISON. A call of the roll will bring a quorum into the Senate if the yeas and nays are demanded on the appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BATE. What is the direct point upon which we are to vote?

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. CHANDLER. I heard the want of a quorum suggested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] suggests the absence of a quorum in the Chamber. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. GEAR. My colleague suggests that a vote by yeas and nays will develop the presence of a quorum. I will withdraw the call.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has suggested the absence of a quorum, and——

Mr. BATE. I ask what is the question that it is moved be laid on the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Pending the determination of the presence or absence of a quorum, the Senate can not, as the Chair understands, transact business. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll; and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,
Allison,	Daniel,	Lodge,	Roach,
Bacon,	Dubois,	McBride,	Sewell,
Bate,	Faulkner,	McMillan,	Sherman
Berry,	Frye,	Mantle,	Shoup,
Blanchard,	Gallinger,	Martin,	Stewart,
Brice,	Gear,	Mills,	Teller,
Call,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Turpie,
Cameron,	Gordon,	Murphy,	Vest,
Cannon,	Gorman,	Nelson,	Vilas,
Carter,	Gray,	Palmer,	Walthall,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Peffer,	Warren,
Chilton,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Wetmore.
Cockrell,	Hill,	Platt,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have responded to their names on the call of the roll. A quorum is present.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. Let us have the yeas and nays on that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina appeals from the ruling of the Chair, and the Senator from Rhode Island moves to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, will the Chair please state exactly what the proposed amendment is and the ruling of the Chair on it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the word "dollars," in line 9, on page 6:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not pay more for the transportation of the railway mail than is paid by the express companies for like service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] made the point of order that the proposed amendment changes existing law. The further point was made that it had not been reported by nor referred to any committee of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon that point of order the Chair held, if the Senator from North Carolina will permit the Chair to state the parliamentary situation, that the proposed amendment changes existing law in this, that under the provisions of section 4002 of the Revised Statutes of the United States weight and distance constitute the basis upon which the cost of carrying the mails is computed, whereas the proposed amendment contemplates computations based upon the rates of express companies, indefinite and unknown quantities, as the basis upon which the maximum shall be fixed; and the Chair therefore sustained the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, if the Chair will pardon me. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. Debate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion is pending to lay the appeal of the Senator from North Corolina on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the Chair recognized me, and no one will object if I call attention to the answer made to the point of order.

Mr. ALDRICH. Debate is not in order on the proposition, and I ask for the regular order.

Mr. BUTLER. I submit to the Chair——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island makes the point of order that debate on the motion to lay the appeal on the table is not in order.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it debate to state the grounds briefly, without any debate, upon which the point of order was made, and the answer to the point of order?

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course it is.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Chair will pardon me——

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask for the regular order. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BUTLER. There are a number of Senators now here who did not hear the debate and the ground upon which an appeal was taken from the decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the point of order made by the Senator from Rhode Island, under the rule the Chair must hold that debate is not in order on the motion to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. MILLS. The question is now on laying the appeal on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I ask unanimous consent to state my position and to restate the reason why I maintain the amendment is in order. I am now appealing to the Senate to decide whether or not it is in order. The point of order having been made, I ask unanimous consent to state to the Senate on what ground I made the appeal. Many Senators are now present who were not here when I stated my ground for the appeal.

Mr. ALDRICH. How much time does the Senator want to take?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has not stated the length of time he desires to occupy.

Mr. BUTLER. A minute or two will be just about the time necessary.

Mr. ALDRICH. All right; I am willing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for two minutes to state his position with reference to the pending question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and the Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that if I had moved to reduce the appropriation of $29,000,000 to $20,000,000, it would have been entirely in order, and nobody could have objected to it. I preferred to put in this amendment, which requires that the Postmaster-General shall not pay more for carrying the railway mail than is paid by express companies for a like service. That is more equitable. I submitted that that was arriving in a more equitable way at the same result we would get by reducing the appropriation.

Now, the amendment does not change the method of computation fixed by present law. Why? We have a system of weighing the mail. It does not change the amount of mail to be carried; it simply requires that the Postmaster-General shall not pay more per ton than is now paid by express companies. It does not make any difference whether the weighing shows one ton or a million tons; it simply provides that we shall not pay more per ton for a like service for a like distance. I claimed that it did not change the existing law, but was simply a limitation on the appropriation, and on that ground I appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CULLOM. Now, I hope we shall have a vote on the motion and proceed with the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. To expedite matters, I will ask that this may go over. As the merits of the question will come up under the provision to establish a commission, I will withdraw the appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina withdraws the appeal from the ruling of the Chair. The Secretary will report the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 6, line 8, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to pay from the foregoing appropriation for the special transfer and terminal service between the Union Station at East St. Louis, Ill., and the Union Station at St. Louis, Mo., including the use, lighting, and heating of mail building, and the transfer service at St. Louis, at the rate of not exceeding $50,000 per annum, beginning on the 1st day of July, 1897.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next clause in the bill, as follows:

For railway post-office car service, $3,600,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the following amendment to come in after the word "dollars," in line 19, page 6:

Provided, That not more than 10 per cent of the cost of the cars shall be paid for said service.

Mr. President, this paragraph——

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment that it changes existing law. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's observations, but undoubtedly——

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator from Iowa will pardon me, I should like to ask what existing law the amendment changes?

Mr. ALLISON. The rates for car service are fixed by law now, by section 4003 of the Revised Statutes, I believe.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for the reading of section 4003 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. ALLISON. I will withdraw the point of order to save time, and let the Senator have a vote on his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is withdrawn on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, here is an appropriation for $3,600,000—for what? Simply for the rent of postal cars. How many postal cars? Less than 500 are in use to-day to carry the mails of the country; and here is an appropriation, as I say, of $3,600,000 for the rent of those cars. The postal cars do not cost over $3,500 or $4,000 each to build, and to build the 500 cars will not cost the amount of money which is appropriated in this bill.

I submit that we have already voted $29,000,000 to pay the railroads for hauling the mails. That is at least from twelve to fifteen million dollars more than the railroads charge for like service for me, and for you, sir, for manufacturing concerns, and for express companies. We are paying $160 a ton, when but from $50 to $100 per ton is paid by others for like service.

In addition to that, here we are asked to appropriate $3,600,000 for the rent of cars. The cars put up at auction to-day would not sell for half of it. The Government can to-day go into the market and buy 500 postal cars better than those which are used in the postal service for less money than this.

I submit that if we are to pay this enormous price for carrying the mail, we should not also pay rent on postal cars, and that, if we do pay that rent, we should not pay more than 10 per cent of the cost of the cars. That is the amendment.

The existing law says that the maximum rate which the Post-Office Department can pay for these cars is $25 per mile per annum for cars of 40 feet in length; $30 per mile per annum for cars of 45 feet in length; $40 per mile per annum for cars of 50 feet in length; $50 per mile per annum for railway post-office cars of from 55 to 60 feet in length. That is the maximum rate; and yet to-day I make the statement, and defy contradiction, that the Post-Office Department is paying over $50 for every postal car in use, when even the maximum is only $25 for a car 40 feet in length. They pay on every car as if it were 60 feet in length.

I ask the attention of the Senate to some of the business methods we have had in the Post-Office Department. I call attention to the case of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company between New York, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Chicago. We paid this company for the use of 69 cars in one year the sum of $515,000. That amounts to $7,327 a car. We paid the Pennsylvania Railroad $7,327 a year for the use of each car, when the car did not cost but $3,500.

I call the attention of the Senate to another case, that of the New York Central. We paid that company for the use of 50 cars last year, and for those cars we paid $425,000; that is $8,500 a year for the rent of each postal car, when the cars cost only $3,500 apiece.

I submit that it is no wonder that there is a deficit in the Post-Office Department. There is not a private business in the country which would not be bankrupt in one year with such business methods as those. We pay over twice for the rent of the car what it would cost to build it and own it; and, in addition, we pay $160 a ton for mail, while the express companies can have it carried for less than $100.

It is a matter for the Senate. If it pleases the Senate of the United States to thus squander the people's money, if it pleases the people's representatives to thus throw it away, then let no man who votes for such a proposition as this talk about economy and the interests of good government hereafter.

Mr. President, these are grave statements which I make, and I challenge any Senator on this floor to rise to his feet and question them, for I am here armed with the proofs. I have no more to say. I do not wish to take the time of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I shall not reply to the Senator, but I should like to have a vote at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THURSTON in the chair). Is the demand seconded?

Mr. ALDRICH. Have a sufficient number of Senators seconded the demand for the yeas and nays, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The demand for the yeas and nays, in the opinion of the Chair, is not seconded.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves to lay the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina on the table, and on that the yeas and nays are called for.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Iowa will withdraw his motion for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are the yeas and nays demanded?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; they are demanded, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator from Florida wish to speak to the amendment?

Mr. CALL. Only to make a single observation.

Mr. ALLISON. I will withdraw my motion for a moment to enable the Senator to do so.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, with reference to this amendment, I should be very glad to cooperate with the Senator from North Carolina in any measure reasonably fair for a reduction to a proper extent, giving reasonable compensation to the carriers for the railway mail service, but I think that the Senator from North Carolina is not doing a benefit to that purpose in this motion, although he so intends, because there are many of us who would like to vote for the amendment who can not ignorantly do so at this moment of time, with the few days only of this session yet remaining to pass these bills, without time to consider even the information which the Senator personally may have upon the subject, and venture upon something which may interfere with the reasonable compensation and the efficiency of this service at this time. Without any information, however much we may be disposed to do so, it seems to me not to be in the interest of the very purpose which the Senator desires to accomplish.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Florida permit a question?

Mr. CALL. Certainly I will.

Mr. BUTLER. The amendment I propose simply provides that we shall not pay more than 10 per cent of the cost of the cars for the rent of them. Is not that a fair and clear proposition?

Mr. CALL. That seems to me a very indefinite idea upon this subject. It might be the whole cost of the railway car upon some particular route that might be necessary to be paid for. There is no relation between the arbitrary amount of 10 per cent and the reasonable cost of the service. Those two things have no kind of connection with each other. It is for that reason that I deprecate, in the interest of those who really desire to accomplish the objects sought by the Senator, that he should now offer this amendment.

Mr. BUTLER. This does not cover the service.

Mr. ALLISON. I renew my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to lay upon the table the pending amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to offer a modification of the amendment beginning in line 20, on page 6, and ending in line 3, on page 8. It is simply providing that the committee's suggestion in that amendment shall be changed to a commission, this Congress not having the power, I think, to appoint committees for the next. I send to the Secretary's desk the modification which I propose to make.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed modification will be stated.

Mr. ALLISON. It is to come in at the end of the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to substitute for that portion of the bill beginning in line 19, on page 6, and ending in line 3, on page 8, the following:

That a joint commission is hereby created consisting of three Senators, members of the Fifty-fifth Congress, to be appointed by the present President of the Senate, and three members-elect of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fifth Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fourth Cangress. Said joint commission shall make full inquiry into and examination of the whole subject of mail transportation and the cost thereof; and said commission is authorized to employ not exceeding two experts in aid of said commission, who shall receive such compensation as the commission shall determine to be just and reasonable. The Postmaster-General shall detail from time to time such officers and employees as may be requested by said commission in its investigation. Said commission may employ a clerk and stenographer and such other clerical assistance as may be necessary. Said commission is authorized, for the purpose of said investigation, to take the testimony of witnesses and send for persons and papers, and, through the chairman of said commission, or the chairman of any subcommittee thereof, to administer oaths. Said commission may also examine witnesses and papers respecting every item of expense entering into the cost of such transportation and the best practicable methods of diminishing the aggregate cost of such transportation consistent with the efficiency of the mail service, and shall make report to Congress on or before February 1, 1898, with such recommendations as respects said subjects as it may deem advisable; and shall also report such testimony taken in the course of such investigation. The sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the necessary expenses of the said commission as herein provided for, on the certificate of the chairman of said commission. In case of vacancy by resignation or otherwise of any member of said commission, the vacancy may be filled by the presiding officer of the Senate or House in which such vacancy occurs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest a modification of that amendment where it reads, "to be appointed by the present President of the Senate," by striking out the words "the present President," so as to leave it "to be appointed by the Senate." I do not know who "the present President of the Senate" is. That is an unusual phrase to use in legislation; and it is a little uncertain when this law will go into effect. It may go into effect after the 4th of March. If it means the present Vice-President, he will be then out of office.

Mr. COCKRELL. It can not go into effect after the 4th of March.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is true; but it may go into effect too late for the commission to be appointed by the present presiding officer of the Senate. What it means I do not know. If it means the present Vice-President——

Mr. HOAR. Why not say "by the President of the Senate?"

Mr. ALDRICH. It is an unusual sort of phrase.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the modification suggested by the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island is acted upon, I ask that the last clause in relation to filling vacancies in the proposed amendment of the Senator from Iowa may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

In case of a vacancy by resignation, or otherwise, of any member of said commission, the vacancy may be filled by the presiding officer of the Senate or House in which such vacancy occurs.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is nothing in that such as has been stated. That, I think, is correct, and it seems to me the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island is rather wide of the mark.

I will ask the Senator from Iowa whether, after the amendments are adopted to the substitute amendment, he desires to proceed with the discussion on the amendment at this time or to pass it over until he has finished the rest of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I think we might as well proceed with this discussion now, as the remainder of the bill ought not to occupy much time and the Senate at this hour is very full, and this is a most important amendment to the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then, Mr. President, I shall ask leave to make a suggestion after the amendment proposed by the Senator is acted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. GORMAN. There is objection, Mr. President.

Mr. HILL. I was going to suggest that if this whole scheme is to be discussed before the committee amendment is amended, ought not the discussion to proceed now?

Mr. ALDRICH. It can proceed just as well with my amendment pending as in any other way.

Mr. CHANDLER. The objection to that is that there will be two amendments pending at the same time. I wish to move to strike the amendment entirely out, and therefore it will be more convenient to dispose of the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island or have him withdraw it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The fact that that amendment is pending will not interfere with the Senator from New Hampshire moving to strike the whole paragraph out or to vote against it, which is the same thing. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the parliamentary position of the Senator from Rhode Island is correct, I move to strike out the whole amendment as proposed to be amended and to insert what I shall send to the desk.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I hope the Senate will consider the amendment which I sent to the Clerk's desk as if it were printed in the bill as an amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, so that any amendment to it will be regarded as an amendment to the amendment proposed by the committee. This is done as a matter of convenience.

Mr. CHANDLER. To consider the proposed amendment of the Senator as adopted and the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island as pending?

Mr. ALLISON. No; I do not desire to consider it as adopted. I merely substitute what I sent to the Clerk's desk and had read by the Secretary for what is printed in the bill, and that is to be the amendment pending.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, I move to strike it all out and insert what I send to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to substitute for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] from the Committee on Appropriations the following:

That the questions concerning the correction of alleged abuses in the postal service in connection with second-class mail matter, the extension of free delivery to rural regions, the reduction of the cost of the railroad transportation of the mails, the adoption of 1-cent postage for single letters, and other like questions shall be examined by a postal reform commission of five, to consist of the two chairmen in the Senate and House of the present Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the Postmaster-General, and two citizens to be appointed by the President, who shall make their report and recommendations for legislation to the next Congress; and for the services of said civilian commissioners and the expenses of said commission the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available and to be expended according to the direction of the Postmaster-General, said commission to expire on the 31st day of December, 1897.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, which has just been read.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the attitude of the question as now presented. The amendment proposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations simply proposes to investigate the one subject of the cost of the transportation of the mails. The amendment evidently is directed toward the consideration of the cost of railway mail transportation. There is an elaborate machinery provided; great powers are given to this commission; the time for its work is extended until February 1, 1898, and the large sum of $50,000 is placed at the disposal of the commission. The commission may go to any railroad office, enter into it, and call for all its books and papers.

Said commission may also examine books and papers respecting every item of expense entering into the cost of such transportation.

This commission is vested with immense powers over the railroad companies of the United States, as great powers as I can conceive that it is possible to give to a commission created by act of Congress over any of the corporations of this country.

Mr. President, it may be that it is wise to do this. I am aware that the $30,000,000 expended yearly for compensation to the railroads for transporting the mails, in addition to the three millions and a half paid them for the railway post-office service, is deemed by many to be excessive.

I have heard, in a general way, the statement made that it is twice as large as the amount that ought to be paid to the railroads; that is to say, instead of $30,000,000, $15,000,000 should be paid. Others contend that if the railroads were paid only what they ought to be paid, there could be a saving made of at least $10,000,000 every year. The expenditures of the Post-Office Department are about $92,000,000. The annual deficit, paid for from the Treasury from moneys received by taxation, is about $12,000,000, and it is claimed by those who believe that these expenditures for railway transportation can be reduced that at least the whole amount of the deficit which is found to exist from year to year in the revenues of the Post-Office Department could be made up by the saving of at least $12,000,000 in the amount paid to the railroads.

Mr. President, that is a very important subject. It is a subject which must be dealt with by the Government and by the Congress of the United States. The Senator from North Carolina has submitted, in a supplemental and minority report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, a very forcible statement on the subject of the amounts paid by the United States for railway mail transportation. The subject must be taken up, investigated, and remedies applied for existing abuses, if upon investigation it shall be found that there are existing abuses.

The amendment of the Appropriations Committee proposes to deal only with this one subject in connection with the postal service, the one question whether or not we pay too much to the railroads for the transportation of the mail. There are, however, other alleged abuses in connection with the mail service. The investigations that have been made by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in connection with the Loud bill have developed very serious abuses in the existing methods of the Post-Office Department. They are abuses which it is very likely are justified or authorized by the existing laws in reference to first, second, third, and fourth class mail matter. The abuses most complained of are those as to second-class mail matter; that is to say, in connection with the 1 cent per pound rate of postage on newspapers and periodicals. I will state the whole abuse in connection with newspapers and periodicals. First, the great number of sample copies, as they are called, of newspapers and periodicals introduced into the mail; and secondly, the publication as serials of books, works on literature and science, and other books of great bulk, literature valuable, literature harmless, and also literature much of which is claimed to be worthless and harmful to the community.

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads found a very widespread interest in this subject. They found hundreds and thousands and even millions of our people interested in the preservation and perpetuation of the so-called abuses. There were members of the committee besides the Senator from North Carolina who were opposed to any attempt at this session to deal with these alleged abuses, which fill the mails with thousands of tons of printed matter which it is alleged is carried by the Government at 1 cent a pound, a price far below the cost of carrying it. This immense number of tons of matter increases the compensation paid to the railroads of the country, these enormous sums which it is claimed are causing the great deficit that exists in the postal service and which it is believed will continue to increase until some remedy is applied.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from New Hampshire states that 1 cent a pound is far below the cost of transporting second-class matter. I wish to correct him by stating that it is probably below what the Government pays. In that sense the statement may be correct. But I wish to state here, and I am sure he will agree with me, that it is not below the cost that the Government ought to pay, and which the Government would pay if the two amendments I offered this morning had been adopted. We could carry the mail at 1 cent a pound and put a surplus in the Treasury, instead of having a deficit, if we were to stop the exorbitant rates we are paying, more than the express companies and individuals pay, and also stop the enormous payments for car service, twice as much as the cars are worth.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not certain the Senator from North Carolina is right in his statement. Undoubtedly the bare cost of transporting second-class matter from city to city is not much more than 1 cent a pound, but the Senator must bear in mind that I meant, in speaking of the cost of second-class matter, not merely the cost of railroad transportation, but the cost of receiving that matter at the post-office where it is deposited and of delivering it at the post-offices where it is received. The cent a pound, as representing the mere cost of transportation of so many tons of matter from city to city, is one thing. The total cost of receiving the mail matter and handling it and delivering it to the persons for whom it is designed, which includes, of course, the second-class matter's share of the general expenses of the Post-Office Department, is another thing.

Mr. BUTLER. In that connection, with the permission of the Senator, I wish to say that the entire cost of receiving, carrying, and delivering the mails would be less than that amount if the Post-Office Department was properly managed and if the Government owned its own cars and simply paid for the hauling of them what railroads haul express cars for.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the Senator's opinion.

Mr. BUTLER. I can prove it.

Mr. CHANDLER. But there is as yet no evidence to demonstrate that the Senator is correct.

This subject has been investigated during the present session by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and incidentally the committee considered the question as to the expediency of adopting 1-cent letter postage in this country. They considered the subject of the extension of rural free delivery in this country. The committee took a general survey of the whole subject of the postal service, not merely that portion of it which relates to the cost of the transportation of the mails by the railroads, but that portion of it which relates to the whole subject of the classification of mail matter and of the rates of postage which are paid and which ought to be paid in this country by the patrons of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. President, the result was not satisfactory to the committee. There has not been sufficient time, with the examination we have been able to give, to frame a satisfactory bill. It became evident that the measure from the House, House bill No. 4566, known as the Loud bill, could not be passed at this session. Amendments were prepared to the bill by the acting chairman of the committee which he thought would be valuable. The bill was reported and placed upon the Calendar of the Senate with a report which I now hold in my hand, No. 1517, made on the 22d day of February. All of this was done with no expectation that the bill would pass, but with a distinct realization of the fact that it was impossible at the present session to have any legislation whatever on this great subject.

Having reached that conclusion, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads deemed it advisable to set on foot a commission to make inquiry into all these points of dispute, not merely the question of the cost of the railroad transportation of the mail, not merely one abuse or another abuse as to second-class matter, but all the questions that enter into and affect the question of railway mail transportation; and the committee have reported the amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill which I have offered in lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. President, the commission proposed by the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has this merit at least: It is an economical commission. It is proposed that it shall consist of the chairman of the Senate committee and the chairman of the House committee, the next Postmaster-General, and two civilians to be appointed by the President of the United States, and the sum of only $10,000 is proposed to be appropriated to pay for the services of the two civilian commissioners and the expenses of the commission. But to the commission is committed all these questions—the question of the cost of railway mail transportation, the question of existing abuses in the Railway Mail Service, and the question what shall be the rates of postage, and whether or not the condition of the postal service is such or could be made such that 1-cent postage on letters can be granted to the people of this country.

Mr. President, that is the conclusion the committee has reached; it is the best conclusion which the committee can reach, and the committee I think in all its membership stands before the Senate asking that there may be a commission, constituted as the Senate may please in its discretion, to investigate not one part of this subject, but every part of it; and that it shall not only inquire carefully into the cost of the transportation by the railroads of such matter as is now admissible into the mails, but also into the question what matter shall be transported in the mails, into the question whether or not there are not now admissible into the mails publications and matter that ought to be excluded from the mails, whether a reduction in the deficit of the Post-Office Department can not be accomplished not only by reducing the amount paid to the railroads, but also either by excluding from the mails matter that ought not to be carried therein or by imposing upon such matter an adequate rate of postage which shall compensate the Government for the cost of carrying it

We are confronted on this view of the case by the proposition of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, which, although it creates a commission with great power and proposes to give it $50,000 with which to pay its expenses, provides for no investigation whatever of all these other subjects, no inquiry whatever into all these alleged abuses, but limits the work that is to be done by the commission solely to the one proposition that there may be some reforms instituted in connection with the cost of the railway mail transportation.

Mr. President, I say in all seriousness to the Senator from Iowa who advocates the proposition of the Committee on Appropriations that this whole subject ought to be investigated either by the commission which he proposes or by the other commission, or by a different commission from either, or in some appropriate way, such as shall find favor with the Senate. I hope that there may be a modification of the amendment as proposed by the Senate committee, and that if there is not a modification of it, the amendment proposed by the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads may be substituted. That committee have given a great deal of time to this question during the short session. I do not understand that the Committee on Appropriations have given any considerable time to the investigation of the subject of railway mail transportation. They have taken up the appropriation bill; they have seen this large appropriation of $29,000,000 required for railroad transportation, and $3,600,000 for railway postal-car service, and they have devised this proposition for a commission. But they have been satisfied with a limited inquiry which I take occasion to say in all earnestness will be inadequate to the subject. The whole subject ought to be investigated by a commission, if a commission is constituted, or there ought to be no commission whatever, and the question ought to be left to the Postmaster-General and to the regular and usual methods of preparing for legislation by Congress.

Mr. STEWART obtained the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Nevada to yield to me for one moment, that I may now make an arrangement for the remainder of the day's session. I think it will be most convenient for Senators if we take a recess from 6 o'clock until 8 o'clock this evening.

In connection therewith I desire to state that it is absolutely essential, if we are to deal with the appropriation bills between now and the 4th of March, that the Senate shall continue in session until a very late hour to-night, or at least until we can pass the Post-Office appropriation bill and the sundry civil appropriation bill. Unless these two bills can be passed before we adjourn to-night, it will be necessary for us to have a session on the Sabbath day, and I hope we will not be compelled to do so. Therefore it is essential, I repeat, that these two bills shall be passed before the adjournment this evening.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HILL. What is the precise request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa will kindly restate his request.

Mr. ALLISON. It is that at 6 o'clock this evening the Senate shall take a recess until 8 o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. STEWART. I ask for the reading of the substitute.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the question concerning the correction of alleged abuses in the postal service in connection with second-class mail matter, the extension of free delivery to rural regions, the reduction of the cost of the railroad transportation of the mails, the adoption of 1-cent postage for single letters, and other like questions, shall be examined by a postal reform commission of five, to consist of the two chairmen in the Senate and House of the present Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the Postmaster-General, and two citizens to be appointed by the President, who shall make their report and recommendations for legislation to the next Congress; and for the services of said civilian commissioners and the expenses of said commission the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available and to be expended according to the direction of the Postmaster-General; said commission to expire on the 31st day of December, 1897.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I much prefer the amendment of the committee. The scope of the reform proposed by that amendment is large enough. It will require a great deal of investigation and time. It is a reform also which must be dealt with by Congress and not by the Department. It must be dealt with with a strong hand. The other reforms suggested are simple, and if the Postmaster-General will keep his accounts in such a manner as to advise Congress where the abuse is, it can be very easily reached.

I am of the opinion that there are no abuses under the law so far as mail matter is concerned which can not be remedied by departmental rulings and by properly executing the laws. The scheme of cutting off second-class mail matter has been directed thus far, so far as it has been promoted by those outside of the two Houses of Congress, to the cutting off of the distribution of literature under the pretense that some bad literature may go through the mails, and under the false pretense that it is the literature—the books and the pamphlets—which loads down the mail more than anything else, whereas the fact is that the vast increase in the second-class matter grows out of the stuffed Sunday editions of the dailies. I do not know the amount of these editions that go through the mails, but I do know that many of the large Sunday editions weigh from 12 to 18 ounces. Some of the Sunday editions of the large dailies average a pound, as they are damp when they are sent out from the offices. Suppose a great daily has a circulation of 200,000 copies, which go through the mail. That is 200,000 pounds which go out of that establishment, if they have that amount of circulation, and there appears to be rivalry among the great dailies to have the largest Sunday edition. I do not believe there is any paper in the United States in favor of this system; but if one paper does it, another must, and each, in the enterprise of business, must send out a larger edition and more pictures, and more painting, and more stories than the other, if they are to compete in that field.

Everybody knows that the Sunday edition is a most inconvenient paper. I have seen gentlemen, when it was offered to them on the street, after they had called for it, because it was so large, refuse to buy it. When you have, it if you are not very strong, you want a servant to carry it. The literature that goes into the stuffed Sunday editions of the dailies may be all very well; some of it is interesting; but it can not compare with the literature that goes into the mails of well digested periodicals and reprints of standard works. Having made this raid upon this particular kind of matter, without taking into consideration anything else, and getting up the amount of excitement they have in regard to the Loud bill, it seemed to me there was some other motive than to curtail expenses, and it is generally understood in the country that the movement to force the Loud bill through is nothing more or less than a movement to prevent the discussion of economic questions, an attempt to prevent the people from having both sides of the money question presented to them. It is known very well that the great commercial press takes one side. It is known very well that the telegraph companies and the railroad companies, or those who manage them, take the same side of this question, and to facilitate the circulation of literature on their side of the question is very natural. Newsdealers discard literature advocating bimetallism. It is not sold on the railroads, it is not sold on the news stands; it is practically boycotted, so that it can not reach the people.

Now, the mails furnish the people a convenient opportunity at a reasonable price to get this literature. They also furnish an opportunity at a reasonable price to get standard works to put in their libraries. They could not afford to buy bound books at the price charged and pay the freight, because they can get five or six or ten books for the same price through the instrumentality of the mails. You will find throughout the country that the small circulating libraries, which are praised so highly, are largely composed of paper-bound books that have gone through the mails.

An educational frank has been attached, and it ought not to be. The Postmaster-General could keep a separate account, but that he has not done. I called upon him to ascertain the average weight of the newspapers that go through the mail on week days and the Sunday dailies. He could keep a few headings that might be readily suggested and see what literature weighs down the mails. The question can be reached without a laborious investigation.

But the other question the committee has dealt with requires an investigation. It requires an investigation to learn what the railroad companies can afford to carry this mail for, and what is paid them for similar service; and it requires a great deal of strength and impartiality to deal with the question of contracting with them. The other question is simple.

If we can have the railroad service properly arranged, and such abuses of second-class mail matter cut off as the Postmaster-General can now do by his authority under rules and regulations which he may enforce, I believe that we can have 1 cent postage and not have any deficiency in our revenues. I believe that can be accomplished. If it is thought necessary to accomplish that by cutting off something that is weighing down the mails, and that is presented to us, it will be a single proposition that we can deal with.

As to this reform which I suggest, call your newspaper men and ascertain the weight and investigate that one point. Any committee can at once investigate the average weight of a newspaper. It will not be over 4 ounces. You can not find one during the week, with all its advertisements, that will weigh over 4 ounces. If it is desirable to have these great Sunday editions, let them be heard on that question. I doubt whether the newspapers themselves want that, because it is impoverishing them. They are running a race in this extravagance which makes it very difficult for the newspapers to maintain themselves. I do not believe it pays, though no one can get out of it while it goes on. This question can be very easily ascertained by a committee and by the Postmaster-General; but when you take up this railway system, which involves contracts and considerations of all the circumstances before the contracts can be made, the situation of the roads, what they do other service for, and what they can afford to do this for, it is a large investigation, and the labor imposed upon that committee is sufficient to occupy its attention without loading it with this other matter of detail which can be so easily disposed of by the Department itself.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I am led to make a few remarks on account of the prospect of staying here every night until midnight, and of meeting on Sunday, which is not pleasing to the Senators; nor is it pleasing to the people of this country that the Senate should be compelled to be in session on Sunday. I am impelled to make these remarks through the scoldings which we get from the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], through the scoldings which we get regularly from the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and from the warning which we have just received from the chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. ALLISON], that unless we devote ourselves constantly to the business in hand, unless we refuse to discuss any matters which might appear to us to be of interest, we shall be compelled to stay here all the time or else the appropriation bills will fail.

If I were to be a member of the next Senate, I would not make any remarks now, but would renew a fight at that time which I led in this Chamber this Congress, to divide the appropriations. No good argument was ever given why the appropriation bills should not be divided and sent around to the various committees, where they belong. The members of the Committee on Appropriations have vast powers in this Chamber. They absorb almost all the power here. They put on amendments in their committee room which lead to long debate. It is with them to say what amendments will go on. They please themselves. They usurp the legislative power of this Chamber almost, and after the debate comes on the amendments which they themselves put on, they scold members here when they want to discuss matters of interest to themselves, their States, and the country.

I think the next Senate should divide the appropriations. It will be an elegant time. No party will have a majority in this Chamber. The Republican party can not organize the next Senate. There is a distinct party here now called the Silver Republican party. They will not cooperate with you. You have not the power to organize the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Who are you referring to?

Mr. DUBOIS. You will not organize your Senate.

Mr. NELSON. Who are you referring to when pointing over here?

Mr. DUBOIS. I am referring to the Republicans.

Mr. NELSON. What have you got against them?

Mr. DUBOIS. I have this against them, that while saying to us for years, "We will help you make this fight for silver," you came out at St. Louis as the advocate of the single gold standard; and when you did it, as you were warned there, you lost the Pacific Coast Senators. Just so fast as the people of that section have an election for a Senator, just so fast will a Republican Senator go down. There have been seven Senators elected there to take the places of seven Republicans. One Republican comes back of the seven. Just so fast, I say to you, as the people there have a chance to express themselves, just so fast will you lose a Republican Senator if you cling to the single gold standard.

You can not organize the next Senate, nor can you organize any other Senate. As we said at St. Louis, the Republican party as a party has written its last law on the statute books of this country. If you get your tariff bill through, it will not be by Republican votes. You have not enough of them; you can not get them; they do not belong to you, and you will be further from getting them in the Senate after two years.

Therefore I say it will be a good time at the beginning of the next Senate to reorganize the Committee on Appropriations. There will be no candidates for President; there will be no reason why you should not distribute the appropriations. Nobody knows who is to compose that committee. Nobody knows who is to be the chairman of it. And in view of the surroundings here now which confront us, when we can do nothing at all except sit here night and day or have the appropriation bills fail, in view of this situation fresh in your minds, in the session which is to come I trust you will at once reorganize the Senate by distributing the appropriation bills, and putting them in the hands of the various committees where they belong. No argument has ever been advanced against it which is good.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the House of Representatives passed the Loud bill upon the theory that it was to do away with certain abuses in regard to second-class mail matter. No other legislation has been proposed seriously. That bill may be a good bill or it may not. It depends upon what view is taken of the question. The bill came to the Senate and the Post-Office Committee, not the Appropriations Committee, entered into an investigation of the whole subject-matter upon which that bill was based, and reported a bill, not as the judgment of the committee, but in order that the matter might be placed before the Senate, a tentative measure. There is no effort to be made to pass it. That same question, as to what shall be done in regard to second-class mail matter, is to confront the next Congress.

As has been well stated by the acting chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, that committee formulated a scheme for a commission and tendered it to the Appropriations Committee. The Appropriations Committee have never spent an hour upon the subject. They took the Post-Office Committee scheme and you do not recognize it when it comes out of the committee. They do not propose to investigate a single question out of which arose the Loud bill. Not a single abuse is to be investigated, but simply the question as to the cost of the transportation of the mail by the railroads; and now it is seriously proposed by the Committee on Appropriations that the one single subject shall be investigated.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit me, this is probably one of the most important items in the bill, and it is very essential indeed that Senators who are to vote upon it should be present while it is being discussed. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VILAS in the chair). The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Chandler,	Hill,	Pettigrew,
Allen,	Chilton,	Hoar,	Pritchard,
Allison,	Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,
Bacon,	Cullom,	Lindsay,	Quay,
Baker,	Daniel,	Lodge,	Roach,
Bate,	Dubois,	McBride,	Sewell,
Berry,	Elkins,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Mantle,	Stewart,
Brice,	Frye,	Martin,	Teller,
Brown,	Gallinger,	Mills,	Turpie,
Burrows,	Gear,	Morrill,	Vilas,
Butler,	Gibson,	Murphy,	Walthall,
Call,	Gordon,	Nelson,	Wetmore,
Cannon,	Gray,	Peffer,	Wilson.
Carter	Hawley,	Perkins,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. HILL. Of the two schemes, the one proposed by the Post-Office Committee and the one proposed by the Appropriations Committee, both intend the investigation of the subject of charges of railroads for mail transportation. So far so good; but that will not reach the desired information; that will not enable the next Congress to properly legislate. It is but a branch of the subject. Ordinarily it would seem as though, if the subject of mail matter was to be inquired into, at least the suggestion made by the Post-Office Committee should be followed. It strikes me that it is somewhat disrespectful to the Post-Office Committee that its scheme, which is a broad one, a liberal one, an extensive one, whereby we can procure sufficient legislation to remedy these abuses, should not be followed, and that we should be switched off from that proposition to a single question now proposed by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. President, until the Loud bill was discussed there had been no suggestion from any place in regard to the investigation of railroad charges. The whole thing arose in connection with the investigation had in regard to the Loud bill. These various subjects will confront the next Congress. I call the attention of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] to the fact that in the next Congress the very same difficulty will present itself that presents itself now; that there is no adequate data as to precisely what this superfluous second-class mail matter costs for its transportation. I listened to his argument before the committee (and he made a very able one, and it impressed me greatly), in which he stated that according to the present methods of keeping the books in the Post-Office Department it is difficult to tell precisely with any sort of accuracy how much this second-class mail matter, which is regarded as objectionable, costs the Government to carry. That same difficulty will meet you at the threshold of your next inquiry. Why make two bites of a cherry? Why not take the whole subject up, and in an appropriate and legitimate manner, as recommended by the appropriate committee? Why branch off upon the one subject of simple railroad transportation, the one subject as to what the railroads charge for carrying the mail?

I have no doubt that the amount can be reduced, but not so easily as some people say. It is not to be determined so readily. It is not possible that it can be determined upon a mere glance at the figures. The railroads will have something to say upon this subject. It is not possible that every Postmaster-General has been paying, year after year through their respective terms, so much more than was really necessary. There will be two sides of the question, and possibly you may find, when you get through, that no reduction can be made. Then these other questions will come up as to what properly should be carried as second-class mail matter. My friend from Nevada suggests that the newspapers ought to sort of abandon their great big Sunday additions. He will have considerable difficulty in convincing the newspapers that they ought to do it. Are all the questions as to how much should be permitted to pass as second-class mail matter to be determined by this commission? No. After we have had an investigation, a partial one, simply, for the purpose of this legislation in regard to divers subjects involved here, it is proposed to abandon all that, although the committee frankly tell us that we have not really enough upon which to predicate a good bill; that we need more information in regard to the subject, and that the present bill is not to be pressed, and suggest the appointment of a commission. You abandon all that and propose simply to investigate one single portion of it, and appropriate $50,000 for that purpose.

Mr. President, I think it is bad policy. In the first place, no committee of the Senate has suggested it except the Appropriations Committee. The scheme has not originated in some other committee and been referred to the Appropriations Committee. No scheme has been presented by a standing committee of the Senate and referred to the Appropriations Committee, except the one proposed by the Post-Office Committee. Is it not desirable from every point of view that the chairmen of the respective committees, the Post-Office committees of the two Houses, should be upon this commission? Upon whom is the next Congress to rely for legislation? Ought they not to be familiar with the subject so that they can explain it? Ought they not to be familiar with the investigation? Is it not good policy that they should be members of this commission? Ought not the Postmaster-General, who is to recommend or disapprove this thing, to be consulted and to be a member of the commission? Certainly, it strikes me that way.

Then the Post-Office Committee's project is the appointment of two civilians. Now, we might as well be frank about that. It has been suggested that certain ex-Postmasters-General would be appropriate members of the committee, and there is great propriety in the suggestion. They are men who have for years given this subject their attention, who know in regard to whereof they speak. Therefore it strikes me that there is great force in the suggestion that the scheme as outlined by the regular committee of this body on this subject, which was the first to inaugurate and the first to present plans here, should be adhered to, and not this late scheme which is presented, which involves but one single point of this controversy. Ordinarily it would seem that these views should be accepted, and readily so.

What argument is there upon the other side? I do not know of any. What committee has suggested that the railroads were overcharging? Nowhere lately has any such suggestion been made. No doubt they are overcharging, it is said. That may be true; but that is one simple point around which revolves only a portion of the controversy.

In the first place, there is a demand among the people for the reduction of letter postage from 2 cents an ounce to 1 cent an ounce. Who is authorized here to say that that can be safely done? No one. It may be said that can be done if we reduce the price paid to the railroads. Possibly that may be so; but possibly it may be found that the reduction will not be sufficient to justify that outlay. Then what are you going to do? You must then make reforms in other directions. But you have not investigated whether reforms can be made in other directions. Can you change the rates on second-class mail matter? If so, to what extent? You have not investigated. Therefore, it strikes me the proper course for us to pursue is to take up the scheme to which the Post-Office Committee has given considerable attention, and which it has formulated under the lead of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. President, I am not going to allude to what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] so appropriately said. When it comes to a conference committee, what is the effect? Members of the Appropriations Committee, who have nothing to do with post-offices, are to go into a conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill with members of the House Post-Office Committee; and the members of the Senate Post-Offices Committee are to remain over here at their places watching the Appropriations Committee to see what they do. That is the theory upon which our committees are made up.

It strikes me, Mr. President, that it would have been far better to have adopted the scheme suggested by the chairman of the committee who has proposed it here. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has offered an amendment to the committee's scheme.

Mr. ALDRICH. I intend to withdraw the amendment, if I ever get an opportunity.

Mr. HILL. It would not have made the plan harmonious if that amendment had been adopted; but I do not think that the scheme as proposed by the committee should be at all entertained. A commission would be better composed of the chairmen of the respective Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the other House and of this, the present Postmaster-General, the next Postmaster-General, and two private citizens. It strikes me that is proper; it strikes me that that is the right way to investigate the whole subject, so that you can take up your Post-Office bill at the next session of Congress and can provide in one comprehensive measure all the legislation which may be necessary for the purpose of enabling these reforms to be accomplished.

You can not stop this discussion by passing this bill. This bill only enables you to obtain more money. Then the question will arise as to whether you are still going to continue the second-class mail matter and such literature to the extent you do now. The moral question, which has been argued so largely and which entered into the discussion in the other House, will still continue as to whether what is called slush literature is to be carried on a par with your best literature—all those questions will again confront you.

Why not appoint such a commission as has been suggested after the most mature reflection, and thus expedite the investigation which will itself be effectual to accomplish such reforms? With all due respect to the Appropriations Committee, it seems to me that the single scheme upon which they have entered will not prove effective.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a word or two, Mr. President, before the vote is taken upon the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], and I shall content myself with discussing the present question and not those questions which are to arise in the next Congress, although I am very glad to have the advice of my neighbor and friend here [Mr. DUBOIS] as respects what ought to be done in the next Congress about committees, as also the advice of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] on the same subject, as we shall not have the opportunity then.

Mr. President, the question of selecting a commission to deal with this subject is an important one, I agree. Respecting the desire or the alleged threat of the Committee on Appropriations in any way to ignore the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, there was no such purpose. The amendment which the committee instructed me to report was practically formulated and agreed upon before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had made any report, and I will say that it was the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations that, inasmuch as it was charged that the railways were receiving a very large compensation, a compensation far beyond the cost of transportation, that that question lay at the bottom really of this whole subject.

We may as well understand here, as the people understand everywhere, that the question of dealing with the transmission of intelligence is a subject in which the people of this country are interested, and they will from time to time see to it that whatever can be done to facilitate the transmission of that intelligence will be done. That is the first and primary thing. The people do not wish to pay exorbitant prices for that transportation, nor do they wish to pay any postage rate that is beyond a rate sufficient to make the system self-sustaining. The complaint on the one hand is the complaint of a deficiency of postal revenue, and on the other hand it is the statement that we should reduce the rate of postage from 2 cents an ounce to 1 cent an ounce, and that that should be done immediately, without reference to the question of the cost of transportation. That might be advisable if we could take from the Treasury a sum beyond that which is now necessary to be taken in order to make up the deficiency of the revenue, but in the present condition of the Treasury that is impossible.

It seems to me, therefore, that the first question to be decided in the solution of this problem is the question of the cost of transmitting the mails of our country with celerity, and having a mail service which is efficient.

It can not be denied that each and every year, certainly for the last twenty years, there has been improvement respecting the efficiency of the mail service. That improvement has been seen everywhere. It is also true that with the hard times, if I may use that phrase, we have had in the last two or three years in our country, the deficiencies in our postal revenues have been less relatively than they were in prosperous times years ago, whilst the efficiency of the service has been greatly increased.

I remember, Mr. President, the first bill that I had charge of as a member of the Committee on Appropriations was the Post-Office appropriation bill. It was for the fiscal year 1874, and I had occasion then, and I have often thought of it since, to observe that the expenditures for the postal service during the prior year were $28,000,000, and the revenue which was derived from the postal service was $22,000,000, thus giving a deficit of $6,000,000 upon an expenditure of $28,000,000. After an interval of twenty-two years, we have here upon our table a bill appropriating more than $92,000,000, with an estimated deficit by our Postmaster-General in his report of less than $1,000,000, thus showing that, with all the complaints which have been made as to the railway service, as to the insufficient pay of mail carriers, as to the insufficient pay given to the postal clerks, as to this inundation, if I may call it so, of what is termed second-class mail matter, which is run over this country by postal cars and on railway trains at 50 miles an hour—with all these imperfections, which the Senator from New York and the Senator from New Hampshire have so well stated here, it is found that year by year the postal revenue, so far as it concerns the cost of service, has diminished relatively; and in the face of it all we have seen, during the twenty-two years of which I am speaking, this country girded with lines of railroads from the Atlantic to the Pacific. We have seen them spread over this country, north and south, east and west, like spiders' webs, not carrying the slow trains of 20 miles an hour, but carrying from coast to coast railway trains running upon an average more than 35 miles an hour between ocean and ocean, and each and every one of those trains carrying this second-class mail matter at the rate of 1 cent per pound. We carry letters at the rate of 2 cents for each ounce.

Every person who is familiar with the question of railroad rates knows that if we pay the cost of transportation of this mail matter according to its mileage, we should go back to the primitive condition in which we were when I was a student at college, and when, being more than 300 miles from home, I was obliged to pay 25 cents postage for each letter I received.

In 1873, when I had charge of the Post-Office appropriation bill, the rate of letter postage was 3 cents for each half ounce, and in 1883, ten years later, we reduced that postage upon letters one-third, and later we reduced it by providing that 2 cents should be the rate for letters of 1 ounce or less.

So that in twenty-two years of our service, with all these imperfections, and with all these laws standing upon the statute books as to the method of dealing with this question—to wit, weight and speed as the chief elements—we find that we have been able to reduce the postage upon letters at least one-third, carrying, as has been said here upon this floor, intelligence, and spreading it over every portion of this country—to our valleys, across our mountains—at the rate of a cent a pound; and with it the entire deficiency for 1898, as shown by the Postmaster-General in his estimate, will be less than $2,000,000 upon an expenditure of more than $92,000,000, as against $6,000,000 in 1873 upon an expenditure of $28,000,000.

Mr. President, with all these difficulties in our pathway, and with Senators on this floor stating that this railway service is an extravagant service—which I am not prepared to say is true or untrue—I can state as my belief that, as to the great body of the 181,000 miles of railroads in the United States, this pay is not extravagant when you take into consideration the efficiency of our railway mail service. But when it is stated here, and in the newspapers, and elsewhere, that the remedy for this deficiency is not in the reduction of letter postage to 1 cent, but lies in the destruction of our present system of fast railway mail trains, and that it can not be accomplished in any other way than by reducing the railway rates, then I think it is worth while upon a matter of so great moment, involving, as it does, this year $29,000,000, that we should have a careful investigation regarding it.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. I will.

Mr. HILL. Is the Senator able to inform the Senate whether his associates upon the Appropriations Committee concur with him in the belief that the rates now paid to the railroad companies for transportation are not extravagant?

Mr. ALLISON. I believe there is a rule in the Senate which prohibits us from stating what occurs in a committee of this body, but I do not think that I need to disclose what is said in the Committee on Appropriations if I say here that I know members of the Committee on Appropriations differ from me upon that subject.

Mr. HILL. I assumed that the theory upon which the investigation had been ordered was that at least a majority of the committee were convinced that the charges were extravagant, and hence the necessity for an investigation.

Mr. ALLISON. I only wish to add that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations has already spoken upon this subject, and other members have spoken in the Chamber, stating that they believed that the compensation is greater than it ought to be, and I have an opinion that on some railways it may be higher than it ought to be; but, taking the aggregate of the great railway lines in this country of 181,000 miles, more of them are transporting this mail at a loss than are carrying it at a large profit.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, as the Senator from New York refers to the Committee on Appropriations, I desire only to speak for myself. In that committee every year for several years since I have been a member of it this same subject has come up, and we are met with a want of knowledge of what actually ought to be our course with reference to the specific appropriations in the Post-Office appropriation bill. I remember two or three years ago, when I happened to be chairman of the subcommittee, we had the same kind of controversy, and we decided it as the committee has this year and for the same reason, that we did not know exactly what ought to be done, and we feared to do anything, lest we might cripple the service and thereby produce complaint on the part of the people with reference to it. So it has gone on, until this year we had a hearing and action was taken in the committee with reference to what we should do. We had the Second Assistant Postmaster-General before us, and some others. If the Senator from New York will read the testimony which we took in the committee, he will find a tolerably extensive statement made by Mr. Neilson, who is the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, which shows that we should be doing an injustice to the railroads carrying the mails if we were to undertake to make a reduction without further information. Hence it has been that the Committee on Appropriations felt that they could not afford to allow this thing to go on longer without an investigation, so as to satisfy themselves, and to satisfy the Senate and the country as well whether we were paying too much or too little to the railroads.

I for one have felt that possibly we were paying too much; but when we get the testimony of the officer in charge of the subject, and find he says that we are not, I am not prepared to say that I shall make a cut with my eyes shut, and reduce the cost of transportation of the mails. I prefer that we should find out whether we are paying too much or not, and then act accordingly.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. While the Senator from Illinois is on that point——

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. Was the question discussed in the committee—if it is an improper question I shall withdraw it—as to the desirability of including the investigation on the other lines?

Mr. CULLOM. What does the Senator mean by "the other lines?"

Mr. HILL. I assume that when the committee had this subject up, it did not neglect to notice the report of the Postmaster-General upon this subject which I hold in my hand.

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly not.

Mr. HILL. In that report the Postmaster-General calls attention to the fact of the abuses in regard to second-class mail matter.

Mr. CULLOM. So far as that is concerned, we have felt that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had that subject under investigation, and that they were about to report or had reported a bill, and we did not undertake to go into the question of what character of mail matter should be carried by the railroads, or by anybody else. We did undertake, however, so far as we could, to satisfy ourselves whether at this moment we had information enough to justify us in changing the rates which have been given and are now given under the law. So we provided for this commission, as it is termed, to go at once into the investigation and ascertain that substantial fact which involves the expenditure of nearly $32,000,000. It seems to me that the Senator from New York, who is a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads—which has had the subject of the character of the mail being carried under their control for a number of years—and his committee, are the proper persons who ought to be prepared to say whether this kind of mail, that, or the other, shall be carried by the railroads or any other transportation companies.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to say a word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VILAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. CALL. I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations for many years, and I will say for myself that there was no information furnished to that committee upon which an intelligent opinion can be formed whether or not the compensation paid to railroad corporations for the carriage of the mails is too great, and that I would be unwilling to go blindly into a reduction of it which might impair the efficiency of the service. The carriage and distribution of the mails in the United States is a matter of the greatest public interest. Its efficiency is a matter of great concern; it is a vast subject, and therefore while I, as I suppose every other member of the committee and possibly every other

Post-Office Department it is difficult to tell precisely with any sort of accuracy how much this second-class mail matter, which is regarded as objectionable, costs the Government to carry. That same difficulty will meet you at the threshold of your next inquiry. Why make two bites of a cherry? Why not take the whole subject up, and in an appropriate and legitimate manner, as recommended by the appropriate committee? Why branch off upon the one subject of simple railroad transportation, the one subject as to what the railroads charge for carrying the mail?

I have no doubt that the amount can be reduced, but not so easily as some people say. It is not to be determined so readily. It is not possible that it can be determined upon a mere glance at the figures. The railroads will have something to say upon this subject. It is not possible that every Postmaster-General has been paying, year after year through their respective terms, so much more than was really necessary. There will be two sides of the question, and possibly you may find, when you get through, that no reduction can be made. Then these other questions will come up as to what properly should be carried as second-class mail matter. My friend from Nevada suggests that the newspapers ought to sort of abandon their great big Sunday additions. He will have considerable difficulty in convincing the newspapers that they ought to do it. Are all the questions as to how much should be permitted to pass as second-class mail matter to be determined by this commission? No. After we have had an investigation, a partial one, simply, for the purpose of this legislation in regard to divers subjects involved here, it is proposed to abandon all that, although the committee frankly tell us that we have not really enough upon which to predicate a good bill; that we need more information in regard to the subject, and that the present bill is not to be pressed, and suggest the appointment of a commission. You abandon all that and propose simply to investigate one single portion of it, and appropriate $50,000 for that purpose.

Mr. President, I think it is bad policy. In the first place, no committee of the Senate has suggested it except the Appropriations Committee. The scheme has not originated in some other committee and been referred to the Appropriations Committee. No scheme has been presented by a standing committee of the Senate and referred to the Appropriations Committee, except the one proposed by the Post-Office Committee. Is it not desirable from every point of view that the chairmen of the respective committees, the Post-Office committees of the two Houses, should be upon this commission? Upon whom is the next Congress to rely for legislation? Ought they not to be familiar with the subject so that they can explain it? Ought they not to be familiar with the investigation? Is it not good policy that they should be members of this commission? Ought not the Postmaster-General, who is to recommend or disapprove this thing, to be consulted and to be a member of the commission? Certainly, it strikes me that way.

Then the Post-Office Committee's project is the appointment of two civilians. Now, we might as well be frank about that. It has been suggested that certain ex-Postmasters-General would be appropriate members of the committee, and there is great propriety in the suggestion. They are men who have for years given this subject their attention, who know in regard to whereof they speak. Therefore it strikes me that there is great force in the suggestion that the scheme as outlined by the regular committee of this body on this subject, which was the first to inaugurate and the first to present plans here, should be adhered to, and not this late scheme which is presented, which involves but one single point of this controversy. Ordinarily it would seem that these views should be accepted, and readily so.

What argument is there upon the other side? I do not know of any. What committee has suggested that the railroads were overcharging? Nowhere lately has any such suggestion been made. No doubt they are overcharging, it is said. That may be true; but that is one simple point around which revolves only a portion of the controversy.

In the first place, there is a demand among the people for the reduction of letter postage from 2 cents an ounce to 1 cent an ounce. Who is authorized here to say that that can be safely done? No one. It may be said that can be done if we reduce the price paid to the railroads. Possibly that may be so; but possibly it may be found that the reduction will not be sufficient to justify that outlay. Then what are you going to do? You must then make reforms in other directions. But you have not investigated whether reforms can be made in other directions. Can you change the rates on second-class mail matter? If so, to what extent? You have not investigated. Therefore, it strikes me the proper course for us to pursue is to take up the scheme to which the Post-Office Committee has given considerable attention, and which it has formulated under the lead of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. President, I am not going to allude to what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] so appropriately said. When it comes to a conference committee, what is the effect? Members of the Appropriations Committee, who have nothing to do with post-offices, are to go into a conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill with members of the House Post-Office Committee; and the members of the Senate Post-Offices Committee are to remain over here at their places watching the Appropriations Committee to see what they do. That is the theory upon which our committees are made up.

It strikes me, Mr. President, that it would have been far better to have adopted the scheme suggested by the chairman of the committee who has proposed it here. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] has offered an amendment to the committee's scheme.

Mr. ALDRICH. I intend to withdraw the amendment, if I ever get an opportunity.

Mr. HILL. It would not have made the plan harmonious if that amendment had been adopted; but I do not think that the scheme as proposed by the committee should be at all entertained. A commission would be better composed of the chairmen of the respective Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the other House and of this, the present Postmaster-General, the next Postmaster-General, and two private citizens. It strikes me that is proper; it strikes me that that is the right way to investigate the whole subject, so that you can take up your Post-Office bill at the next session of Congress and can provide in one comprehensive measure all the legislation which may be necessary for the purpose of enabling these reforms to be accomplished.

You can not stop this discussion by passing this bill. This bill only enables you to obtain more money. Then the question will arise as to whether you are still going to continue the second-class mail matter and such literature to the extent you do now. The moral question, which has been argued so largely and which entered into the discussion in the other House, will still continue as to whether what is called slush literature is to be carried on a par with your best literature—all those questions will again confront you.

Why not appoint such a commission as has been suggested after the most mature reflection, and thus expedite the investigation which will itself be effectual to accomplish such reforms? With all due respect to the Appropriations Committee, it seems to me that the single scheme upon which they have entered will not prove effective.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say a word or two, Mr. President, before the vote is taken upon the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], and I shall content myself with discussing the present question and not those questions which are to arise in the next Congress, although I am very glad to have the advice of my neighbor and friend here [Mr. DUBOIS] as respects what ought to be done in the next Congress about committees, as also the advice of the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] on the same subject, as we shall not have the opportunity then.

Mr. President, the question of selecting a commission to deal with this subject is an important one, I agree. Respecting the desire or the alleged threat of the Committee on Appropriations in any way to ignore the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, there was no such purpose. The amendment which the committee instructed me to report was practically formulated and agreed upon before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had made any report, and I will say that it was the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations that, inasmuch as it was charged that the railways were receiving a very large compensation, a compensation far beyond the cost of transportation, that that question lay at the bottom really of this whole subject.

We may as well understand here, as the people understand everywhere, that the question of dealing with the transmission of intelligence is a subject in which the people of this country are interested, and they will from time to time see to it that whatever can be done to facilitate the transmission of that intelligence will be done. That is the first and primary thing. The people do not wish to pay exorbitant prices for that transportation, nor do they wish to pay any postage rate that is beyond a rate sufficient to make the system self-sustaining. The complaint on the one hand is the complaint of a deficiency of postal revenue, and on the other hand it is the statement that we should reduce the rate of postage from 2 cents an ounce to 1 cent an ounce, and that that should be done immediately, without reference to the question of the cost of transportation. That might be advisable if we could take from the Treasury a sum beyond that which is now necessary to be taken in order to make up the deficiency of the revenue, but in the present condition of the Treasury that is impossible.

It seems to me, therefore, that the first question to be decided in the solution of this problem is the question of the cost of transmitting the mails of our country with celerity, and having a mail service which is efficient.

It can not be denied that each and every year, certainly for the last twenty years, there has been improvement respecting the efficiency of the mail service. That improvement has been seen everywhere. It is also true that with the hard times, if I may use that phrase, we have had in the last two or three years in our country, the deficiencies in our postal revenues have been less relatively than they were in prosperous times years ago, whilst the efficiency of the service has been greatly increased.

I remember, Mr. President, the first bill that I had charge of as a member of the Committee on Appropriations was the Post-Office appropriation bill. It was for the fiscal year 1874, and I had occasion then, and I have often thought of it since, to observe that the expenditures for the postal service during the prior year were $28,000,000, and the revenue which was derived from the postal service was $22,000,000, thus giving a deficit of $6,000,000 upon an expenditure of $28,000,000. After an interval of twenty-two years, we have here upon our table a bill appropriating more than $92,000,000, with an estimated deficit by our Postmaster-General in his report of less than $1,900,000, thus showing that, with all the complaints which have been made as to the railway service, as to the insufficient pay of mail carriers, as to the insufficient pay given to the postal clerks, as to this inundation, if I may call it so, of what is termed second-class mail matter, which is run over this country by postal cars and on railway trains at 50 miles an hour—with all these imperfections, which the Senator from New York and the Senator from New Hampshire have so well stated here, it is found that year by year the postal revenue, so far as it concerns the cost of service, has diminished relatively; and in the face of it all we have seen, during the twenty-two years of which I am speaking, this country girded with lines of railroads from the Atlantic to the Pacific. We have seen them spread over this country, north and south, east and west, like spiders' webs, not carrying the slow trains of 20 miles an hour, but carrying from coast to coast railway trains running upon an average more than 35 miles an hour between ocean and ocean, and each and every one of those trains carrying this second-class mail matter at the rate of 1 cent per pound. We carry letters at the rate of 2 cents for each ounce.

Every person who is familiar with the question of railroad rates knows that if we pay the cost of transportation of this mail matter according to its mileage, we should go back to the primitive condition in which we were when I was a student at college, and when, being more than 300 miles from home, I was obliged to pay 25 cents postage for each letter I received.

In 1873, when I had charge of the Post-Office appropriation bill, the rate of letter postage was 3 cents for each half ounce, and in 1883, ten years later, we reduced that postage upon letters one-third, and later we reduced it by providing that 2 cents should be the rate for letters of 1 ounce or less.

So that in twenty-two years of our service, with all these imperfections, and with all these laws standing upon the statute books as to the method of dealing with this question—to wit, weight and speed as the chief elements—we find that we have been able to reduce the postage upon letters at least one-third, carrying, as has been said here upon this floor, intelligence, and spreading it over every portion of this country—to our valleys, across our mountains—at the rate of a cent a pound; and with it the entire deficiency for 1898, as shown by the Postmaster-General in his estimate, will be less than $2,000,000 upon an expenditure of more than $92,000,000, as against $6,000,000 in 1878 upon an expenditure of $28,000,000.

Mr. President, with all these difficulties in our pathway, and with Senators on this floor stating that this railway service is an extravagant service—which I am not prepared to say is true or untrue—I can state as my belief that, as to the great body of the 181,000 miles of railroads in the United States, this pay is not extravagant when you take into consideration the efficiency of our railway mail service. But when it is stated here, and in the newspapers, and elsewhere, that the remedy for this deficiency is not in the reduction of letter postage to 1 cent, but lies in the destruction of our present system of fast railway mail trains, and that it can not be accomplished in any other way than by reducing the railway rates, then I think it is worth while upon a matter of so great moment, involving, as it does, this year $30,000,000, that we should have a careful investigation regarding it.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. I will.

Mr. HILL. Is the Senator able to inform the Senate whether his associates upon the Appropriations Committee concur with him in the belief that the rates now paid to the railroad companies for transportation are not extravagant?

Mr. ALLISON. I believe there is a rule in the Senate which prohibits us from stating what occurs in a committee of this body, but I do not think that I need to disclose what is said in the Committee on Appropriations if I say here that I know members of the Committee on Appropriations differ from me upon that subject.

Mr. HILL. I assumed that the theory upon which the investigation had been ordered was that at least a majority of the committee were convinced that the charges were extravagant, and hence the necessity for an investigation.

Mr. ALLISON. I only wish to add that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations has already spoken upon this subject, and other members have spoken in the Chamber, stating that they believed that the compensation is greater than it ought to be, and I have an opinion that on some railways it may be higher than it ought to be; but, taking the aggregate of the great railway lines in this country of 181,000 miles, more of them are transporting this mail at a loss than are carrying it at a large profit.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, as the Senator from New York refers to the Committee on Appropriations, I desire only to speak for myself. In that committee every year for several years since I have been a member of it this same subject has come up, and we are met with a want of knowledge of what actually ought to be our course with reference to the specific appropriations in the Post-Office appropriation bill. I remember two or three years ago, when I happened to be chairman of the subcommittee, we had the same kind of controversy, and we decided it as the committee has this year and for the same reason, that we did not know exactly what ought to be done, and we feared to do anything, lest we might cripple the service and thereby produce complaint on the part of the people with reference to it. So it has gone on, until this year we had a hearing and action was taken in the committee with reference to what we should do. We had the Second Assistant Postmaster-General before us, and some others. If the Senator from New York will read the testimony which we took in the committee, he will find a tolerably extensive statement made by Mr. Neilson, who is the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, which shows that we should be doing an injustice to the railroads carrying the mails if we were to undertake to make a reduction without further information. Hence it has been that the Committee on Appropriations felt that they could not afford to allow this thing to go on longer without an investigation, so as to satisfy themselves, and to satisfy the Senate and the country as well whether we were paying too much or too little to the railroads.

I prefer that we should find out whether we are paying too much or not, and then act accordingly.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. While the Senator from Illinois is on that point——

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. Was the question discussed in the committee—if it is an improper question I shall withdraw it—as to the desirability of including the investigation on the other lines?

Mr. CULLOM. What does the Senator mean by "the other lines?"

Mr. HILL. I assume that when the committee had this subject up, it did not neglect to notice the report of the Postmaster-General upon this subject which I hold in my hand.

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly not.

Mr. HILL. In that report the Postmaster-General calls attention to the fact of the abuses in regard to second-class mail matter.

Mr. CULLOM. So far as that is concerned, we have felt that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had that subject under investigation, and that they were about to report or had reported a bill, and we did not undertake to go into the question of what character of mail matter should be carried by the railroads, or by anybody else. We did undertake, however, so far as we could, to satisfy ourselves whether at this moment we had information enough to justify us in changing the rates which have been given and are now given under the law. So we provided for this commission, as it is termed, to go at once into the investigation and ascertain that substantial fact which involves the expenditure of nearly $32,000,000. It seems to me that the Senator from New York, who is a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads—which has had the subject of the character of the mail being carried under their control for a number of years—and his committee, are the proper persons who ought to be prepared to say whether this kind of mail, that, or the other, shall be carried by the railroads or any other transportation companies.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. CALL. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to say a word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VILAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. CALL. I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations for many years, and I will say for myself that there was no information furnished to that committee upon which an intelligent opinion can be formed whether or not the compensation paid to railroad corporations for the carriage of the mails is too great, and that I would be unwilling to go blindly into a reduction of it which might impair the efficiency of the service. The carriage and distribution of the mails in the United States is a matter of the greatest public interest. Its efficiency is a matter of great concern; it is a vast subject, and therefore while I, as I suppose every other member of the committee and possibly every other

Senator, would be glad to see the price reduced to the smallest point that would pay a reasonable and liberal compensation to the carriers, yet I should be entirely unwilling blindly to undertake anything which might impair the efficiency of the system. Without a careful examination and giving a fair hearing to all parties—the corporations' side as well as the people's side—it is impossible for anyone to form an intelligent opinion upon the subject.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to state that there was no intention or purpose to impinge in the slightest degree upon any investigation that might be going on by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. Indeed, as respects the question of second-class mail matter, except incidentally, it is not involved in this amendment. Of course, it would be proper for the commission to ascertain whether or not it is important that a serial number of Dickens's works or those of any other well-known author should be sent across the country at 50 miles an hour and thus be paid for at the rate specified by the Revised Statutes, or whether some means could not be devised whereby that class of mail matter could be carried at lower rates of payment to the railways and still be as effective in diffusing intelligence among the people. Therefore we could not very well deal with the question of railway compensation without taking into account in a greater or less degree the question of the character of the matter to be carried.

The matter of railway pay lies at the bottom of the question, and no one, it seems to me, can be more familiar with that than the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the character of the literature would not affect the question of the rate. In other words, if a book, a volume, a pamphlet, weighs so much, it does not make any difference to the railroad company whether it is Jack the Murderer, or whether it is a copy of Dickens's works.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator wholly misapprehended my point. I am sorry that I did not make myself understood.

My point is that as to matter that requires immediate and quick delivery, like the New York World or the New York Journal or the New York Tribune, or any of the other of our great newspapers in our large cities, it would not do to carry them upon a mail train going at the rate of 20 miles an hour; but if a serial book did not happen to reach its destination at the rate of 50 miles an hour, or if I wanted to send a pair of boots to my home under the 4-pound rule, that might possibly go at a slower rate than a letter. It would not be necessary for it to be carried over this country at the rate of 50 miles an hour from ocean to ocean. These are topics that intelligent men, whether they are on a commission or on a committee, must deal with in considering this great and comprehensive question of diffusing intelligence through the monopoly of the Government, maintained since its foundation.

There are three or four elements in the bill of cost. One is the railroad mail service, which is the largest of all. Another important element is the mail carriers, who, in sunshine and storm, in early morning and eve, go from house to house in cities and towns having the requisite population and carry the mail to the homes of the people and to their places of business. There is in the pending bill an appropriation of $13,000,000 to pay for that service and to provide for that expenditure. We did not embrace it within the purview of this examination. Twenty years ago it was as unknown as the axis of the earth. It is the invention of an official of the Post-Office Department, who conceived the idea of that method of dealing with the question.

The Senator from New Hampshire in his amendment proposes, although we confine the delivery of mail matter through the mail carriers to cities of 10,000 inhabitants, or where the revenues amount to $10,000 annually, that we shall inquire into the question of delivering the mail to all the rural homes, and there are 12,000,000 homes in the United States. I submit that that is not a necessary topic of inquiry in our consideration, because if we can extend and enlarge this delivery by carrier, we must do it gradually, ascertaining from time to time the expenditure. The letter-carrier system, which was unknown twenty-five years ago, has become a most important element in the distribution of the mail, and because these letters are so carried, they add to the cost of the postal service.

Mr. Neilson—I do not know whether he is a railway man, whether he is a Democrat, or what his particular relation to parties or people may be; he seems to be a man of intelligence—stated that on a route of 250 miles there was a profit to the Government in having mail matter carried at 1 cent a pound, but it is when you come to reach over beyond these great cities and beyond these aggregate populations and centers of population that you find there is an increase in the cost of the service.

I have no wish, and I do not think the Committee on Appropriations have, as to the method in which this shall be done. We have proposed what we believe to be the wisest and best course, and have submitted it to the Senate. That it should be done I think we all agree. The Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from New York find fault with us for bringing in this scheme and plan because we brought it in after theirs. Our scheme and plan originated before we knew of theirs, and when we looked it over we thought that ours was better than theirs for the reason that it made the primary inquiry not the question of the rural delivery or the question of second-class matter, but the great question of the cost of transportation.

Now, we may have been mistaken about that, and if we have been and are mistaken I certainly shall find no fault, nor do I think the Committee on Appropriations will find any fault, with the Senate for believing the plan of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to be the wisest and best.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the subject-matter partially referred to in the proposed amendment of the committee has been very carefully considered in the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of this body for the last six or eight months. The proposition of the Committee on Appropriations to ignore the recommendations of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads brings up for consideration primarily a question of order in the disposition of the public business in this body. For the convenience of the Senate, the better to dispatch the business of the Republic presented here, it has been deemed necessary to subdivide the membership into committees, and if the matter will be considered for a few moments in the light of the necessity for this distribution to committees, a parallel can be drawn here applicable to every committee in the Senate, which will show the fallacy of the position of the Committee on Appropriations.

For instance, we have a Committee on Military Affairs, selected with special reference to the experience and capacity of the Senators who compose it to deal with that particular branch of the public service. Suppose, after the Committee on Military Affairs shall have spent an entire year in ascertaining the cost of maintaining the troops of the Army at different places throughout the United States, it shall come to the Committee on Appropriations and ask the incorporation of a clause in an appropriation bill which will enable the committee to acquire information not at its disposal in the committee room. In that request the Committee on Military Affairs would demand sufficient authority to send for persons and papers and to secure data relating to the whole matter of maintaining the Army on the most economical basis possible. Presume, then, in order to complete the parallel in this case, the Committee on Appropriations, ignoring the request of the Committee on Military Affairs, substitutes an amendment which merely proceeds to inquire the cost of beefsteak in the city of Chicago, thereby suggesting that the inquiries of the regular committee in other directions are either ignorantly proposed or utterly without necessity.

Again, a subject which has been seriously debated in this Chamber is that relating to the cost of armor plate for vessels in the Navy. The armor plate seems to be composed of a variety of metals, prepared under a process of a complicated character. A question has arisen whether the armor plate can be produced for less money, and a reasonable profit made by the manufacturers, than the Government has heretofore been required to pay. The Committee on Naval Affairs presents that inquiry, and in connection with it says "the Committee on Naval Affairs requires additional information before being able to reach an intelligent judgment on the question of the cost of armor plate," and the Committee on Appropriations is requested to incorporate an amendment which will enable the committee to acquire the information desired. The parallel will be complete as applicable to the point before the Senate if the Appropriations Committee should thereupon reply by proposing an amendment to inquire into the cost of pig iron in the Lake Superior country.

In the case before the Senate the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has been for a long time flooded with petitions and protests relating to what has become popularly known as the Loud bill, which embodies propositions to increase the rates of postage on second-class mail matter. The committee reached the conclusion that it could not intelligently pass upon that bill and its effects on the revenues of the Post-Office Department without more information, fuller light, than the records furnished or the committee could acquire from the witnesses examined. In consequence of the necessity for legislation apparently and of the desire of the committee intelligently to pass upon the question, the worthy acting chairman of the committee proposed to the Appropriations Committee the addition of an amendment which would enable the Post-Office Committee to proceed with its investigation, whereupon, as a response to this reasonable demand, the Committee on Appropriations says, "We will provide on our own account for a commission to inquire into the cost of railroad transportation of the mails."

The response is as full and as complete as would be the response in the armor-plate inquiry by announcing to us the cost of pig iron or iron ore in the Lake Superior country or north of it. It would be just as reasonable a response as if upon inquiry the Committee on Pensions, believing that the pension roll was increasing without just cause, desired to investigate the question, and the Committee on Appropriations would respond by saying, "This committee, on its own account, will inquire the cost of paying the widows' pensions and let the balance of the subject go."

Mr. President, the question of deficiency in the revenues of the Post-Office Department can not be intelligently or fairly determined as to cause or cure by the investigation of any special or specific fact or circumstance connected with the service. It will be necessary, in conjunction with the matter of railroad transportation, to take into account the matter of tonnage, it being quite obvious that the railroad companies can afford to transport a large tonnage over their roads at a less rate proportionately than half the quantity or weight; and this might be carried on indefinitely.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in the course of his argument in support of the committee amendment, not only admitted but proclaimed the ineffective and incomplete character of the committee amendment when he suggested that when we arrived at a reasonable conclusion it would be necessary to go beyond the purview of the amendment and to inquire into the rates of postage, to inquire into tonnage, to inquire into classifications, to inquire, in short, into each and every item proposed in the amendment presented by the worthy acting chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. It has been suggested that another commission can be provided for the purpose of inquiring into the particular matters concerning which the Post-Office Committee desires special information. It is a sufficient reply to that to say that the two committees investigating would be compelled to travel over the same identical ground in so far as the railroad transportation question is concerned.

It does seem that the amount proposed to be appropriated by the Committee on Appropriations for the investigation within the next twelve months is excessive and unnecessary. After careful consideration it seemed to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads that the sum of $10,000 would be entirely adequate, considering the fact that the services of Government officials on the regular pay roll of the Government would be available for the use of the investigating body. It is difficult to see why the Committee on Appropriations insists upon conducting an investigation into a special subject when the demand comes for a general investigation, which we hope may not only result in acquiring such information as will enable us to dispose of the constantly recurring deficiency, but may enable Congress to provide a reduction in the existing postal rates as well.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that the members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have entirely misunderstood the purpose of the proposed commission or the necessity for it. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I should like to say that I never heard, when we proposed this amendment, that the Committee on Post-Offices had proposed any examination into the question of transportation.

Mr. CHANDLER. There was such an amendment before the Senator's committee when the subject was taken up.

Mr. TELLER. If it was, my attention was not called to it. It might have been there before we got through, but it was not there, I think, when the question arose. The chairman of the committee says it was not there before we got through.

Mr. ALLISON. Just as we finished the bill we found it.

Mr. TELLER. It was not there, or, if it was, our attention was not called to it. If it had been there, our attention would have been called to it when the bill was taken up.

Some time ago the attention of the country was attracted to this question by an article in one of the leading journals of the day, declaring that we were paying to the railroad companies about $10,000,000 more for the mail service than we should pay. We know, also, that the question as to whether the Government is charging proper rates upon material carried was discussed and considered in another place.

Now, the main purpose of the inquiry which the Post-Office Committee proposes is one that is entirely different, except it may include this, from the inquiry our committee proposes to make. When the House bill came before the committee, there were some members of the committee who believed that the rates now being paid for transportation were excessive. I confess I am one of that number. When we commenced to deal with the question, we found that, while it might be excessive in some sections and on certain roads, it might not be more than sufficient compensation to secure good service in others, and the committee were soon aware that they had not such information as to cost in different sections of the country to enable them intelligently to act on this question. Therefore the committee were disposed to take the action of the House of Representatives, where the bill had originated, as prima facie correct, and then to determine in some way, if possible, by the next time they were called upon to act, whether or not that was a correct sum.

The inquiry was limited because the committee felt that their jurisdiction required them to limit them to the simple inquiry, "Are you paying too much?" In other words, the inquiry was the question, Is the appropriation too large or not? That was perfectly legitimate for the Appropriations Committee to consider, and, if the Appropriations Committee did not have sufficient information, it is perfectly proper, in accordance with the constitution of the committees and the purpose for which they are created, to inquire and get the information, and to get it as best they could.

The question proposed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads as to whether they should have 2-cent postage or 1-cent postage is an entirely different question, and one that the Committee on Appropriations would not attempt to deal with, because it would be a perversion of the purpose for which that committee was created. The other question also as to what should be the charge upon the different kinds of mail matter carried through the mail was, in my judgment, a question that the Committee on Appropriations did not have jurisdiction of. That is a question, as is the other, that properly belongs to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. It is an investigation that they are supposed to be able to make, and an investigation that they can make at any time, with or without the authority of the Senate.

Now, there is not any reason why they may not go on with that inquiry if they choose; that they may add to it, if they choose, the other, which I think is not foreign to their jurisdiction, as to the limitations of the payments that we are making and what should be the policy. Whether the Government should own its own cars or whether the Government should rent them is not a question, in my judgment, for the Appropriations Committee, but a question for the Post-Office Committee, and they could properly extend their inquiry to that also. It seems to me that the members of the Post-Office Committee have entirely misunderstood the purpose of this inquiry. There is nowhere an intention to invade their jurisdiction, and in my judgment there is no invasion of it whatever. When you consider the fact that this is a question that may be determined on the one line and speedily, it seems to me that it is not wise to load it up with the other questions, which are not questions of mathematics, but are questions of policy. It is a very easy thing to determine what we ought to pay these railroad companies compared with what it is to determine the policy as to the amount charged and what shall be the character of the mail matter that is to be carried, and what shall be charged for the different classes of mail matter.

I myself am anxious to get the information on the very simple point as to what is a proper compensation to be allowed to the railroad companies for a proper postal service on their lines. I know that you can not apply any general rule. When we sought to strike off a percentage of the whole appropriation, we discovered at once that, while we might be doing great justice when applied to some sections of the country and to some railroads, we would be doing great injustice when applied to other lines in other sections of the country. Because of that, we thought it was better to go on as we were for a short period, and for that purpose the committee insisted that this finding should be speedy, and that we should have by the time the next appropriations came the knowledge needed. It can not be had on the line proposed by the Post-Office Committee; it can not be got in time; and when it is obtained, if it is connected with all these other questions, there will be much delay and much confusion about applying the information. The simple desire of the committee is that we may have the knowledge as to what it costs these railroad companies to carry the mails, and what is a fair profit for the service they render.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I rise with some diffidence to speak again on this subject, in view of the uneasiness manifested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. In opening his remarks he made what seemed to me a distinction that I never yet had heard, as to the rights of Senators to speak upon this floor. He classified Senators into those who are going out of the Senate on Thursday next and those who remain after next Thursday, and seemed to be quite impatient at the idea that any Senators whose term might expire on the 4th of March should venture to say anything on the bills pending before the Senate, especially upon any proposition coming from the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from New Hampshire does not wish to do an injustice to me.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was surprised at the Senator's remarks.

Mr. ALLISON. I expressed no impatience, but think, on the contrary, I have shown patience as respects this bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator sneered at Senators upon this floor who had shown a disposition to take part in this discussion, and called attention to the fact that they go out of the Senate next Thursday, when he would be rid of them. I felt that the suggestion was unworthy of the Senator from Iowa and not in accordance with his usual grace and courtesy toward members of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am sure that the Senator from Iowa needs no defense at my hands; but I understood the Senator from Iowa to express his gratitude that those Senators were willing to give us their advice while they had an opportunity before they left the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Rhode Island illustrates exactly the remarks of the Senator from Iowa, and leads me to do no injustice to the Senator from Iowa when I say that he sneeringly alluded to that fact, and taunted the Senators with the fact that they were going out by expressing his gratitude to them because they were willing before going out, or seemed inclined before going out, to advise the Appropriations Committee of the Senate in reference to matters of legislation.

Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator from Iowa did this. I never heard him say anything of that kind before in the Senate. I attribute it to that degree of uneasiness which affects the best of men when they become members of the Appropriations Committee. They are in a chronic state of sensitiveness if anyone ventures to criticise their action or to differ with them upon this floor; and we may expect to see more of it between now and the close of the session. We are here with four or five appropriation bills not disposed of, involving vast sums of money, loaded down with legislation. The committee are anxious to get those bills through, and every one of us may well feel, whenever he rises to speak, as if he were incurring in some slight measure at least the disapprobation of the committee for speaking at all.

I hope Senators will not be discouraged on that account from saying their mind, for I can assure them that after the session is over the members of the Appropriations Committee, one and all, including their very valuable and ever-ready assistant, the Senator from Rhode Island, will resume their usual sweetness and good temper, and the world and the Senate will go on just as before. But I hope that no Senator, be his term long or short, be it six years or four years or four days, will refrain while he is here from discussing every subject that is before the Senate in accordance with his convictions of duty.

Mr. President, this is a very simple question. We all agree that there should be an investigation. It is a mere question as to how that investigation should be made. The Committee on Appropriations decide to have it made by a commission to be composed, so far as the Senate is concerned, of the members of the Committee on Appropriations. We know very well beforehand who are to be the Senate members of this commission. They are to be members of the Committee on Appropriations. The contrary is the case in the House of Representatives. There the Post-Office Committee will furnish the three members; and so we shall have a commission to deal with this important subject composed of three of the members of the Senate Committee on Appropriations and three members of the House Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PLATT. How does that follow?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will content myself, as far as the inquiry of the Senator from Connecticut is concerned, by saying that it will follow, as I happen to know.

Now, Mr. President, where is the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate, whose chairman is now absent? That committee can pass upon the controversies concerning the confirmation of postmasters; it can sit on little petty and contemptible questions that mainly constitute its business in connection with the question whether a Republican shall be confirmed as postmaster, or a sound-money Democrat confirmed as postmaster, or a Bryan free-silver Democrat confirmed as postmaster, or occasionally, now and then, once in a hundred, a Republican woman or man shall be confirmed. It can do that; and if a postmaster has his post-office robbed of a few hundred dollars, then the members of the Senate committee can investigate those questions and recommend to the Senate whether or not to relieve the postmaster.

But when a great question comes up, the greatest question of all in connection with the matter of postal reform, whenever the question of the cost of railway mail transportation comes up, and the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which has begun an investigation of this subject and of the abuses that have crept into the postal service, ventures to suggest an humble commission, an economical commission, but a commission authorized to go over the whole subject, every part of it, from top to bottom, from right to left, their recommendation for such commission is treated with scorn by the Committee on Appropriations. It is not even seen by the members of the committee who have carefully made up this amendment, and the Appropriations Committee of the Senate takes control of the subject, organizes a commission, gives them $50,000, gives them almost tyrannical, certainly inquisitorial, power over the railroads of the country; and when the members of the Post-Office Committee of the Senate venture to suggest that the whole subject ought to be investigated and that their method may be on the whole the best, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] tells them that it is none of their business, that it is a matter which belongs to the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. President, there is a little too much of this kind of concentration of power in the Senate. There is a good deal of talk about the concentration of power in another branch of Congress. There is quite as much of it here. The concentration of power is where the control of the money of the Government is accumulated in a few hands, and that is in the Senate Committee on Appropriations. The way in which the Committee on Appropriations have dealt with this modest suggestion of the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is as good an illustration as you could have as to the manner and method of doing business in the Senate of the United States by the Senate Committee on Appropriations and the Senator from Rhode Island.

If the ordinary methods of investigation are not sufficient, if the recommendations of the Postmaster-General in reference to the subject are not sufficient so far as recommendations are concerned, if the recommendations of the two Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in the House and the Senate on these subjects in the ordinary course are not sufficient, and an investigation is to be made by a committee or a commission (the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Iowa, first brought in a committee and he rose an hour ago and said he had found out that you can not appoint a committee in this way and he changed it to a commission), if a commission is to be appointed to deal with this question, why in heaven's name can it not take up the whole subject? Why is it necessary that the business of investigation should be monopolized by the Committee on Appropriations and this vast sum of money and these vast powers should be accumulated in their hands, and when Senators venture to criticise the proposition which the Senate committee has made, why is it to be suggested to them that their terms expire on the 4th of March, when the Senate Committee on Appropriations, sacred be its name and its character, will not have to endure the criticism of those Senators any longer?

Mr. ELKINS. May I interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire for an inquiry? Does the amendment proposed by the Appropriations Committee limit the selection of this commission to the members of the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. ALLEN. We can not hear the interesting conversation going on between the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. ELKINS. I asked permission of the Senator from New Hampshire if I could interrupt him. I am sorry the Senator from Nebraska did not hear me.

Mr. ALLEN. I am sorry, too.

Mr. ELKINS. I simply wanted to ask a question. I do not occupy the attention of the Senate often.

Mr. ALLEN. I wanted to hear it.

Mr. ELKINS. Does the proposition coming from the Appropriations Committee limit the selection of the commission to the Appropriations Committee or does it permit the Vice-President to select from members of the Senate?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know how it will finally read when the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Rhode Island finish it, but as it stands now it is to consist of three Senators to be appointed by the present President of the Senate.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that it has been changed twice since they brought it in.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Rhode Island moved that it should be chosen by the Senate, which would be a fair method of doing it, but some one whispered to him, and he withdrew his proposition. The Senator from West Virginia had better not ask me too many questions.

Mr. ELKINS. Why should I not do so? What is the reason the Senator can not answer my questions?

Mr. CHANDLER. For the reason that the Senator will challenge me as to how I know that three members of the Appropriations Committee will be appointed if this clause becomes a law, and frankly I do not want to tell him how.

Mr. ELKINS. If the Senator will permit me, I want to know, if that is the case, how he knows it? It is not the language of the amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. I know it is to be so, but I will not tell the Senator how I know it.

Mr. ELKINS. If the Senator will allow me, it might make a difference in the vote on this very proposition whether the Appropriation Committee is to furnish the three members or whether they are to be selected from the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator knows very well how conference committee are appointed, does he not?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes; I know the ordinary way.

Mr. CHANDLER. This committee will be appointed in the same way.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not know; it is not in the language of the amendment, as I understand it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I know that. The Speaker of the House always appoints the conference committee of the House, and the presiding officer of the Senate always appoints the conference committees of the Senate, and I am obliged by the Senator to tell in the presence of everyone that it is always done by a little slip that is handed up to the desk by somebody. That slip I think is made out in this case, if the Senator will allow me, but I can not tell him how I know.

Mr. ELKINS. May I ask the Senator if he has talked with the Vice-President on the subject?

Mr. CHANDLER. No; I have not. I only have in mind the slip that is to go up. The Vice-President has it entirely within his power to tear up the slip and write another, but he never does.

Mr. ELKINS. May I ask the Senator one other question?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think the Senator ought to pursue this line of inquiry into the customs and practice of the Senate.

Mr. ELKINS. Does the Senator know the members of the commission who are to be appointed? Is he advised who they are?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have a suspicion, Mr. President.

Mr. ELKINS. Why should he not state it for the information of the Senate?

Mr. CHANDLER. They are excellent men, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. ELKINS. Then the Senator ought to be satisfied.

Mr. CHANDLER. They will do no injustice by the railroads of this country if they are appointed.

Mr. ELKINS. Are the railroads to be benefited?

Mr. CHANDLER. The railroads will not receive any injury from them.

Mr. ELKINS. The railroads are in a bad way with two committees of the Senate contending as to which shall spend a whole summer in investigating them at an expense of $50,000, as I understand it. The fight is not in the interest of the railroads, but as to which committee shall be permitted to investigate them.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am afraid we shall devour the Senator from West Virginia with them. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations has not any purpose to take charge of the matter.

Mr. ELKINS. It seems to me to be a fight as to what committee shall administer on the remaining assets of the railroads.

Mr. CHANDLER. I decline to be interrupted further, Mr. President. I am nearly through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The Senator from New Hampshire declines to yield further.

Mr. CHANDLER. The proposition of the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads names every subject connected with this whole question; it names the subject of the abuses as to second-class mail matter; the question as to the expenses of the free delivery; the question of the reduction of railroad transportation; the reduction of postage, postage on letters, and other like questions. It sends them all to a commission to consist of the chairman of the House Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and the chairman of the Post-Office Committee of this body, without regard to their personality.

They occupy those official positions, and the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices of the other House is the chairman of the committee which also has the Post-Office appropriation bill. The chairman of the committee of the Senate does not have the Post-Office appropriation bill. The Post-Office appropriation bill, when it comes to the Senate, goes into the hands of the Committee on Appropriations. The proposition now before the Senate on my motion, reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, selects those two chairmen, it selects the next Postmaster-General, and then provides that the President of the United States shall appoint two citizens from private life.

I submit that that commission, which is a little out of the ordinary routine, which is a little different commission from that which is constituted by making up a commission the way in which conference committees are made up in the two Houses, which always carry out, if they can, not the wishes of the Senate or the wishes of the House of Representatives, but the wishes of the committee from which they are appointed. I submit, if there is to be anything but a mere formal inquiry into this great subject-matter, this is a better way to constitute the commission.

Mr. President, I feel somewhat in earnest about this matter, and I speak with some freedom upon this subject. I speak with the more freedom because I am only the acting chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and it never has been my purpose to take an active part in the management of its affairs, but, the chairman of the committee being absent, I speak in the interest of a great committee of this body, in the interest of a committee which is entitled to have something to say and which is entitled to have something to do with the large matters connected with the postal service, and not to be confined to little matters in connection with that service. I believe that I echo the sense of four-fifths of the Senators here when I say that, if a commission is appointed to investigate the questions connected with the postal service, if there is any such a thing as a fair organization of the Senate, an equality among the members of the Senate, an equality among the committees of the Senate, the method of doing it ought to be that recommended by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and not that recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the questions involved in the amendment before the Senate are very simple. They have been disclosed in the debate by the members of the committee on the floor of the Senate. It appears that in the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill a proposition was made to reduce the pay to railroads for carrying the mails. All the members of that committee say very frankly that they had not before them the data to enable them to make an intelligent reduction, if reduction was to be made in regard to this matter, and they very naturally proposed an investigation, which is limited to the time between now and the next regular session of the Fifty-fifth Congress. This was a fair, intelligent, businesslike proposition, involving one single inquiry by the methods always used by the Senate, by some members of the Appropriations Committee, or perhaps some other members to be appointed by the presiding officer, whose duty it should be to ascertain the facts in regard to the cost of the transportation of mails and such other facts as should be pertinent to the appropriation for that purpose.

Now, the Senator from New Hampshire and other members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads come in here and say that certain recommendations of theirs have been ignored; that certain prerogatives of theirs have been neglected by the Senate or by the Committee on Appropriations.

What are the facts? The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have had two years with full power to investigate any abuses which exist in the Post-Office Department or anywhere else in connection with the subjects before them, and full power to present to the Senate any legislation which they thought was necessary or desirable to reform those abuses. What have they done in those two years? What bill have they presented to the Senate for its action in those two years? If they believed that these abuses existed, as the various members of that committee say they believe, why have they not suggested some remedial legislation in that matter?

The House of Representatives sent to this body on the 7th of January last a bill which was heralded all over the country as a reform bill. It went to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. It had to do with the very question which the Senator from New Hampshire is now asking the Senate to investigate. What did that committee do with that bill? They kept it in their possession until the 22d day of February, when they reported it back to the Senate. How? Not with the suggestion that the bill should pass, that these reforms should be inaugurated by the methods suggested by the language of the bill, or in any other form, but with amendments reducing the cost of letter postage from 2 cents to 1 cent. I think every member of that committee, without a single exception, has said upon this floor this afternoon that he did not know whether we could now afford to reduce letter postage from 2 cents to 1 cent, and the very purpose of the investigation suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire is to ascertain whether we can or not. Yet their recommendation, and their sole recommendation, as I remember it, of the amendments to this great reform bill which comes to us from the House of Representatives is to reduce letter postage from 2 cents to 1 cent.

Has there been any restriction on the part of anybody, on the part of the Senate, or on the part of the Committee on Appropriations as to the intelligence or as to the zeal of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in connection with these affairs? Who has been restraining the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads for the last two years when they believed and knew that these abuses existed, and they have not only not tried to investigate them, but they have suggested no remedy whatever, but, on the contrary, they have held in their possession the only remedy that has been suggested anywhere else in regard to this matter.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. Our efforts to get a quorum of the committee were very largely interfered with by a member of the Appropriations Committee, who appeared before us on several occasions in opposition to the Loud bill, and raised the technical question of no quorum. We were also involved in the question of the confirmation of postmasters, which of course was a political matter, if I may say so, which largely interfered with the business of the Post-Office Committee.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am very much surprised that any member of the Senate not a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads should have sufficient power over the majority of that committee to restrain them by sweet words or otherwise during the whole of these two years from doing a duty which they to-day have suddenly discovered is paramount upon them, namely, to investigate the great abuses which exist in the Post-Office Department. If they had had the same amount of zeal and patriotism which they have disclosed to-day upon this floor, does the Senator from New York seriously mean to say that any member of the Committee on Appropriations, or other member of this body, would have prevented them from having any meeting for all these months, for the past two years?

Mr. HILL. But people have been sent from different portions of the country with the request to the committee that they be heard, and of the limited time at our disposal we gave them as much as we could, as representing all the different interests from Maine to California and Texas, in order that they might have a full and a fair hearing. Suggestions have been made by members outside and in, but we did the best we could in the limited time at our disposal, and finally concluded that we had not time to prepare a proper bill, and reported the measure for the consideration of the Senate, each member of the committee reserving the right to make any suggestion he saw fit in regard to it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Why a limited time, I should be glad to ask the Senator? The service of this committee commenced on the 4th day of March two years ago. It was not necessary, if these abuses existed to the extent which these gentlemen have stated, to have waited for action in another body. They certainly were not restricted in their zeal from the fact that the bill did not come here from the coordinate branch.

It seems to me, with all due deference and with the kindest feelings toward members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, that it comes with ill grace from them to lecture the Senate or the Committee on Appropriations or anybody else on account of the fact that they have not done what they claim to-day as their paramount duty in regard to this very business.

Mr. HILL. I assume the Senator knows the difficulty of conducting an investigation of that extent and character during a session of Congress, especially a session like this, which is drawing to a close, and when the bill did not get to us until after the middle of January.

Mr. ALDRICH. The bill has nothing to do with that question, I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. HILL. That bill was the one which attracted public attention to the abuses, or the alleged abuses.

Mr. ALDRICH. But, as a matter of fact, there is no constitutional prohibition upon the Senate from originating a bill to correct abuses in the Post-Office Department that I know of.

Mr. HILL. The extravagant compensation which has been paid for years to the railroads of the country has been evident to the Committee on Appropriations, and yet you have done nothing to stop them; and all of a sudden you have seen a new light, and now come in and want an investigation, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has avowed that he does not think that any extravagant compensation has been paid.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have never heard until within the last two or three days——

Mr. HILL. I should like to have your views as to whether you really think that the railroads are receiving extravagant compensation.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have never had any occasion to investigate that subject.

Mr. HILL. And you do not know anything about it?

Mr. ALDRICH. I have never been a member of any committee whose duty it was to investigate this subject, but I hope and I trust that I should be found doing my duty, if I were a member of such committee, with quite as much zeal as the members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have shown.

The bill to which the Senator refers has been pending in the other House for more than a year. It has been publicly discussed in the press for, I think, more than two years, and the principles involved in it were as well known, I take it, to the members of the Post-Office Committee a year or ten months or nine months ago as they are to-day.

Mr. STEWART. They know nothing about the matter to-day. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why is the Senator arraigning the Post-Office Committee for not proposing legislation? I have not arraigned the Committee on Appropriations for not legislating, and why does the Senator arraign us for being delinquent in our duty? Retaliatory arguments are fair enough when the facts warrant them. If that argument has to go on, I shall certainly ask the Senator where our resolution is for distributing the appropriation bills, which was referred a year ago to his committee, with the promise that on the first Monday of December he would report it; and we have not heard from it yet.

Mr. ALDRICH. The resolution to which the Senator refers was referred to the Committee on Rules, with the understanding that there was a full knowledge and determination on the part of the majority of the Senate at least that it was not likely to be reported very soon from the Committee on Rules, as I have already stated, and I think in the hearing of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HILL. The Committee on Rules is rather a conservative body.

Mr. ALDRICH. The committee did not have an opportunity to consider that question during the recess, and so they came in here at the beginning of the session and asked for an indefinite extension of the time. They admitted the fact that they had not had an opportunity to secure action, and the Senate has released the committee from any subsequent obligation on their part.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senate never granted that.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is all "too thin," Mr. President. When we went away from here we were distinctly assured that on coming back in December that subject would be taken up. I am not likely to forget it, for I remember it very well. I remember the Senator's coming in and, with his seductive smile, asking that more time be given to the committee. We knew well that it would be more; we knew it meant all time should be given, and that no report would ever be made.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from New Hampshire will admit that, so far as the Senate, or a majority of the Senate at least, was concerned, there was no expectation or determination on their part that any movement should be inaugurated, by the Committee on Rules or otherwise, to distribute the appropriation bills at this session. I think we are not acting contrary to the spirit and intention of the Senate itself.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will allow me a word, I remember how sly—I mean how seductive and gracious—he was when he got that extension of time, and Senators yielded solely because of the extreme sensitiveness of the members of the Committee on Appropriations on the subject of the distribution of appropriation bills and their disposition to make it a personal matter with every Senator who thought the appropriation bills ought to be distributed; and I have been cowed in that way, as I continually am in the Senate, by having these personal assaults made upon me. [Laughter.]

Mr. CULLOM. I am very sorry that the Senator from New Hampshire is so humiliated and cowed, as he says; but I think there is no occasion for any ill feelings in reference to this subject. I take it that both the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and the Committee on Appropriations have desired to do their duty as best they could; but it is true that while we are in session we are so overwhelmed with work that it is very difficult to make extended examinations during the sessions of the Senate. I hope, however, that it will be conceded that all of us are trying to do the best we can for the interests of the Government.

I desire to refer again to a letter written by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, which Senators will find upon their tables in connection with other testimony taken. It is a letter prepared by that gentleman, who is familiar with the transportation business, and who has the reputation of being a first-class officer. He gave us this letter at our request, after examining him somewhat lengthily, he being before us. There were some matters which he could not answer at the time, and we asked him to write a letter or make a statement of what he knew about them and to give it to us subsequently. Let me say—I do not know whether it has been referred to already—that the question as to what ought to be allowed by the Government for the transportation of the mails is substantially in the hands of the Postmaster-General. As a matter of fact, I think we have a right to complain somewhat, as no one who has been in the office of Postmaster-General, either under Republican administration or Democratic administration, has done his whole duty in reference to this subject. But I rose for the purpose of reading this paragraph from Mr. Neilson's letter:

> I have added such statements as could be prepared in so short a time, and trust this explanation may make them plain to you, and justify my opinion that the present amount paid for the service is not excessive, and that while, as Senator TELLER remarked, "most everything else had been reduced, excepting the railroads, and they should come down also," the facts are that so many improvements have been made in the facilities given the Department, the greater number of trains placed at its disposal, and so much more than was formerly required—asked of them—that I am sure a reduction would operate against the interest of the Department.

There is a declaration by an officer charged especially to look after that question, and he says "I am sure that a reduction would result in injury to the Department." In what way? The gentleman means that it would cripple the mail service to the people of the United States.

Mr. ELKINS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. Is there any objection to letting both of these commissions go on and have the fullest kind of an investigation?

Mr. CULLOM. I have had the idea myself that it was particularly within the purview of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to make the investigation as to the rate of postage, as to what should be allowed to be carried in the mails, and at what rate, and as these appropriations come to the Committee on Appropriations from the other House, carrying with them millions of dollars, it becomes our special duty, so long as that function is devolved upon the Committee on Appropriations, to ascertain specifically whether these amounts are necessary and right.

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator yield to me for one moment?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. Are the two propositions inconsistent? Why not have both of these commissions?

Mr. CULLOM. If the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads desire their amendment adopted as a separate measure, all right. I have no objection to it; and let them make the investigation in reference to those particular features.

Mr. ELKINS. With the understanding that both commissions will go on and be authorized by Congress to investigate. Is there any objection to that?

Mr. CULLOM. That is a matter for the Senate to determine. I wish to read a little further from this letter:

If I remember correctly, I gave you my views of the subject of ownership of the postal cars; therefore will not trouble you with it again, except to say there would be no advantage in such an ownership, with almost a certain great disadvantage and unnecessary expense.

Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations have felt that possibly the amount paid for the transportation of mails is too great. I remember two years ago, I think it was, when the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] who is now in the chair, raised that question, that he was very strongly impressed with the feeling that we were paying too much. I sympathized with that feeling, and yet the Committee on Appropriations not having special charge of postal matters, we went on with the best light we could get at that time, and sustained the rates that were in the bill and that the law provided for, I believe.

So another year came along, and another, and here we are again having to face the same question. So far as I am concerned, I have become tired of it. Before I have to vote upon another appropriation bill for the postal service I wish to have some report that will demonstrate whether we are paying too much or paying too little, or whether the present rate is right. Now, that is all there is in it.

I wish to say another thing. We can not deal with the question of appropriations for the mail service as though it were a matter of no consequence whether or not we cripple the service. The postal service is nearer to the great body of the people of this country than any other public service that is rendered. It comes to every man's door. Every man, woman, and child are interested. We have got in the way of having fast mails, rapid postal service, and extending it all over the country, and the committee which would blindly adopt a policy that would result in crippling the service as we have it to-day would be condemned at once by the people of the whole United States. So it is that the Committee on Appropriations have hesitated to take any steps, from time to time, looking to an investigation. The Post-Office Committee have had the opportunity of doing so. We felt this year, however, in view of the fact that the increase in the appropriation seemed to be larger than usual, and as the question was raised whether we should make a cut of 20 per cent or 10 per cent upon the amount appropriated for carrying the mails, that it was time for us to take a step to find out exactly what the truth is about it; and hence the proposition for a commission, reported by the chairman of the committee.

I hope there will be no feeling about it. I am sure I have none. I have believed, in spite of the report of the Post-Office Department, that perhaps there ought to be a cut, but I am not willing to do it so far as my own vote goes until I know more about it than any of us know to-day.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that this is a very simple matter. There are many things about which there is not the slightest controversy. One is that the Post-Office Department is not self-sustaining. Secondly, the impression prevails that there is extravagance in connection with its administration, and that there is a broad field for reform. So far, we are all agreed, and the only controversy presented to the Senate at this time is how this reform shall be brought about. It is agreed that in order to inaugurate the reform intelligently it is an essential prerequisite that an investigation shall take place.

It is proposed by the Committee on Appropriations to create a commission consisting of three Senators and three members of the other House, to be appointed as indicated in the amendment, and to appropriate the sum of $50,000 for the expenses of the commission authorized by the amendment, to employ two experts, and to report the result of the investigation to Congress February next. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, charged especially with the examination of questions connected with the postal service, have for a long time been conducting an investigation looking to reform in this Department. I have before me the testimony taken by that committee, numbering nearly 225 pages of printed matter, and upon that investigation the committee have made a report that an investigation ought to be had.

It seems to me as a matter of business (because that is all there is in this question) that the suggestions embodied in the amendment by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], the acting chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, is most wise. It creates a commission by making the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate a member of that commission; secondly, it makes the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the other House a member of the commission; and, thirdly, it constitutes the Postmaster-General a member, and then authorizes the President to appoint two civilians.

In making a commission of this kind some regard ought to be had for the qualifications of the members constituting it. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, as I have said, have had this subject under investigation and examination, and while I have no desire to intimate at all that the Committee on Appropriations is not perhaps possessed of great information, yet I do submit that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the Senate, having had the matter under consideration, with that knowledge and with this vast amount of evidence before the committee, will be at once prepared to enter upon a thorough and intelligent investigation of the subject. So the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the House is fully qualified to act as a member of the commission. Then it is provided also that the commission shall have as one of its members the Postmaster-General, as I have said, which would bring to the deliberations of the commission the entire and the accumulated knowledge of the Post-Office Department to aid the commission in its investigation. Then add to this commission two civilians, appointed by the President, and you will have a commission that will make a thorough and complete investigation of the subject.

Then, too, the expense attending it is very much less than that proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, whose proposition is to appropriate $50,000 for the investigation. Of course, the members of the commission from the Senate and the members of the commission from the House will receive no compensation, but the $50,000 is for the two experts to be employed. It seems to be a very liberal appropriation. Under the amendment desired by the Senator from New Hampshire but $10,000 is to be appropriated. I therefore favor, and favor most heartily as a business proposition and as a sensible proposition, the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire. I am at an utter loss to understand why the Committee on Appropriations, desiring the investigation as we do, will not consent to that method, and I have yet to hear one suggestion from anyone of any objection to the method of investigation proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

I have no desire to say anything about the question of distributing the appropriation bills. My views, I think, are known upon that question. The present method of considering appropriation bills is one of the absurd things in the rules of the Senate. The time will come, I do not know when, when the various committees of the Senate having jurisdiction of a particular subject will have the appropriation connected with that branch of the service in charge also. I say I do not know when that will come.

This measure, the Loud bill, went to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads because it is the only committee having jurisdiction of the subject, and, as I said before, we made as thorough and complete an examination of it as possible and reported from that committee a proposition for a commission, and the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire is that proposition slightly modified. Now, the work having been done by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, it is proposed to take the matter away from their jurisdiction, and the suggestions of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads are to be utterly ignored after the hearings have been had before that committee, covering 225 pages, against a hearing covering only 30 pages before the Committee on Appropriations. I care nothing about that. I simply say that as a business proposition the plan suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, which has the cordial support of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, is the wise, sensible, efficient manner of reaching a conclusion in this matter.

Mr. BUTLER. I have the consent of the acting chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to offer an amendment to the amendment, which he will accept and incorporate as a part of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VILAS in the chair). The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 3, after the word "mails," it is proposed to insert:

The reduction of the cost of railway-car service and the advisability of the Government owning the postal cars necessary and paying the railways mileage rates for hauling the same.

Mr. BUTLER. That is one of the subjects to be investigated.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to say anything about the general question between the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and the Committee on Appropriations, and still less about the very important question of changing what the experience of the Senate for a great many years has established, the system and jurisdiction of our committees, but I wish to express my protest and my earnest disapprobation of all these schemes for making commissions which are to be composed partly of members of the Senate and the House and partly of persons appointed by some other authority, whether the President of the United States or anybody else. The members of the Senate who go on one of these commissions go on there as a committee of the Senate. It is a legislative function and a legislative function of the highest importance and dignity in this world, certainly in this country, and I do not conceive that we have the right to impose upon our members the duty of acting upon committees with other persons on an equality.

Now, how are they to report? It may very well be that this report, which is in substance nothing but the report of a committee of the Senate or of a joint committee of the two Houses, will be made in opposition to the opinion of every member of this body, and we shall have here introduced into the Senate in the ordinary legislative way propositions and conclusions which the persons who introduce them as a committee can not defend conscientiously, because they are opposed to the conclusions and which there is no one else to defend.

I conceive that whether this body, which is the investigating board, is to be a committee of this body alone or not (and I think the same criticism applies to this plan which is urged in regard to the labor commission), the committee of this body, or of this and the other House, should have the authority, and the other persons, whether appointed by the President or not, should be experts, making the investigation under their direction, I believe it would be a serious surrender of the dignity and the authority of the Senate to undertake to constitute a commission of the class proposed.

I like the scheme of having whoever is appointed by this body employ its experts, direct them to make such investigation for them as they see fit, and direct them to express their expert opinions if they see fit. The experts may be appointed by the President of the United States and brought in, just as we might take officers of the Navy and Army and call them before a committee and get their results. But it seems to me that we shall find it an infinitely awkward and mischievous principle if we undertake to inaugurate the practice of having boards into which we send our committees, nominally as equals but not equals, because the number of the board is sufficient to overthrow the representatives of the Senate in all cases.

You have an investigation proposed. The members of the Senate who are on this commission want a certain kind of an investigation; they know what the Senate desires; they know what the Senate wants to learn; they know what they themselves desire to learn as a committee having the subject in charge, and then the experts come in and say: "We will vote you down and will not come into that. We think we want a certain other inquiry, which will not help the Senate in the least in your opinion, but in our opinion it ought to be made, and we will not ask one of the questions that you want to put, but all the questions we ask will be questions you do not want to put."

Mr. President, this is a subject on which I should like to spend twenty or thirty minutes. There are a good many other reasons which could be stated, but I have not time to do it, because I have something else to do; but I wished simply to make these remarks, not as an argument, but as a protest against the whole plan and system.

RECESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (at 6 o'clock p. m.). The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, the order of the Senate takes effect, and a recess will take place until 8 o'clock to-night.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 3608) setting apart a plot of public ground in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for memorial purposes, under the auspices of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 824) to require patents to be issued to land actually settled under the act entitled "An act to provide for the armed occupation and settlement of the unsettled part of the peninsula of Florida," approved August 4, 1842, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 9607) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 9931) to amend an act providing for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, and the acts amendatory thereto, and for the relief of persons who have made entries thereunder;

A bill (H. R. 10090) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce;"

A bill (H. R. 10304) to repeal chapter 1061, Fiftieth Congress, approved October 1, 1888, being an act to grant right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 10362) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894, as amended by an act approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin;" and

A bill (H. R. 10367) to revive and reenact a law to authorize the Pittsburg, Monongahela and Wheeling Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print, in addition to the usual number, 5,000 copies of the message of the President of January 18, 1897, and of the report of the commissioners appointed under the act of March 2, 1895, to inquire into deep waterways between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean, accompanying the same.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 153) authorizing the persons herein named to accept certain decorations and testimonials from the late Hawaiian government;

A bill (S. 1676) authorizing Rear-Admiral W. A. Kirkland to accept a gold box presented to him by the Emperor of Germany;

A bill (S. 3340) authorizing Herbert D. A. Pierce to accept a medal from the Russian Government;

A bill (S. 3725) to prevent the importation of impure and unwholesome tea;

A bill (H. R. 1933) granting a pension to Mrs. Catherine G. Lee;

A bill (H. R. 2962) granting a pension to Carrie L. Greig, widow of Theodore W. Greig, brevet major of volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 3402) granting a pension to William Sheppard, late of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry;

A bill (H. R. 3605) granting a pension to Grotius N. Udell;

A bill (H. R. 4076) for the relief of Abner Abercrombie;

A bill (H. R. 5128) to increase the pension of Jere Smith;

A bill (H. R. 6038) to increase the pension of Joseph M. Donohue;

A bill (H. R. 6159) to increase the pension of Mrs. Helen A. De Russy;

A bill (H. R. 6268) to increase the pension of William N. Wells;

A bill (H. R. 6417) to complete the military record of Caleb L. Jackson;

A bill (H. R. 6560) to increase the pension of Emily M. Tyler;

A bill (H. R. 6757) granting a pension to Andrew J. Molder;

A bill (H. R. 6765) to increase the pension of David N. Thompson;

A bill (H. R. 6845) granting an increase of pension to Maj. John H. Gearkes;

A bill (H. R. 6915) granting a pension to Julia D. Beebe;

A bill (H. R. 7317) to increase the pension of Leroy M. Bethea;

A bill (H. R. 7451) for the relief of James Eganson, of Henderson, Ky.;

A bill (H. R. 8633) granting a pension to Nancy Roberts, of Manchester, Clay County, Ky.;

A bill (H. R. 8942) granting a pension to Ann Maria Meinhofer;

A bill (H. R. 9319) granting a pension to Malachi Salters;

A bill (H. R. 9785) granting a pension to Rebecca A. Kirkpatrick;

A joint resolution (S. R. 76) authorizing Lieut. William McCarty Little to accept a decoration from the King of Spain; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 107) to authorize Prof. Simon Newcomb, United States Navy, and Prof. Asaph Hall, United States Navy, to accept decorations from the Government of the Republic of France.

PETITION.

Mr. PEFFER presented the petition of S. Henneigh and sundry other citizens of Kansas City, Kans., and the petition of Rev. W. B. Slutz, of Wichita, Kans., praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 3733) granting a pension to Elizabeth Pittman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9931) to amend an act providing for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, and the acts amendatory thereto, and for the relief of persons who have made entries thereunder, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 10304) to repeal chapter 1061, Fiftieth Congress, approved October 1, 1888, being an act to grant right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 10367) to revive and reenact a law to authorize the Pittsburg, Monongahela and Wheeling Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 10090) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that that bill may remain upon the table for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

The bill (H. R. 10362) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River, between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894, as amended by an act approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River, between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin," was read twice by its title.

Mr. QUAY. I ask that the bill may lie on the table.

Mr. VILAS. I supposed it should go to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. QUAY. The same bill has already been reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to be heard before the Committee on Commerce upon this bill.

Mr. QUAY. It is the same bill which was reported some time ago by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. VILAS. I would be very glad to have the committee consider it.

Mr. QUAY. I do not think the Senator would gain anything by a reference of the bill. I move that the bill lie on the table.

Mr. VILAS. That is not the proper motion.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill would naturally lie on the table, unless there is some specific disposition made of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will lie on the table.

The bill (H. R. 9607) to amend an act to permit the use of the right of way through public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. PERKINS. As this is substantially Senate bill 3533 upon our Calendar, I ask that Senate bill 3533 be indefinitely postponed, and that this bill be substituted in its place on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objecteon, it will be so ordered.

ALABAMA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. MORGAN. Before we proceed with the appropriation bill I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VILAS in the chair). The bill will be read by title.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the consideration of this bill if it is an uncontroverted bill that in no way will lead to discussion.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no chance for discussion about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 9101) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Montgomery Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River near the city of Montgomery, Ala.," approved March 1, 1893; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. In line 13, I move to strike out the word "six" and insert the word "seven," so as to read "eighteen hundred and ninety-seven."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GRACELAND CEMETERY.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is a House bill here to amend an act which authorizes the board of officers of a cemetery to sell certain property here in the city. It is only eight lines long, and I presume there can be no objection to it in the world. I ask unanimous consent that it may be taken up and put on its passage.

Mr. HAWLEY. What cemetery is it?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It is the Graceland Cemetery.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. ALLISON. To these little bills that lead to no debate or discussion I do not object, and for a few minutes may be considered.

Mr. GALLINGER. This bill will not lead to debate. It is a very important measure.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to its consideration, but I will object to any bills that in any way lead to debate.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is the Graceland Cemetery bill, and it ought to be passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. By all means.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 10122) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia," passed August 3, 1894; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH P. PATTON.

Mr. HAWLEY. The bill (H. R. 10290) for the relief of Joseph P. Patton proposes to relieve a man from an unjust dismissal. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to correct the record of the War Department in the case of Joseph P. Patton, late first lieutenant of Company C, Fifth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, by revoking the order of his dismissal and granting him an honorable discharge, to date September 21, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MATHIAS PEDERSEN.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4310) for the relief of Mathias Pedersen, to report it favorably without amendment. It is a small bill, and as it is a House bill and involves only a question of $300, I ask that it may be put on its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Mathias Pedersen, late of Spring Valley, Rock County, Wis., $300, being the sum unlawfully collected from him on November 27, 1863, by the board of enrollment, namely, $300, to furnish a substitute when drafted for service in the Army, he not being a citizen of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. GORMAN. I report from the Committee on Printing a joint resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. R. 209) regulating the distribution of public documents was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the time allowed members of the Fifty-fourth Congress to distribute public documents now to their credit, or to the credit of their respective districts or States, in the Government Printing Office, the Interior Department, the Navy Department, or any other Department or Bureau, and to present the names of libraries, public institutions, and individuals to receive such documents, be, and the same is hereby, extended to December 1, 1897, and the time for such distribution by members of Congress who have been or may hereafter be reelected, shall continue during their successive terms and until their right to frank documents shall cease.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AFFAIRS IN CUBA.

Mr. GORMAN. I report from the Committee on Printing the notes of a hearing before a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations on the condition of affairs in Cuba. I move that the hearing be printed as a document, so that every Senator may be able to get a copy of it.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

Mr. BROWN. I ask leave to call up Senate bill 2726. It is a bill that there has been some little demand to have taken up. It is a short bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the consideration of the bill if it does not give rise to debate.

The Secretary read the bill (S. 2726) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire objects.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 10272) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 261) for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

IMPERSONATION OF DISTRICT INSPECTORS OF HEALTH.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9976) to punish the impersonation of inspectors of the health and other departments of the District of Columbia. It is an important bill that will not lead to discussion.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN F. M'RAE.

Mr. BACON. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (H. R. 610) for the relief of John F. McRae.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to John F. McRae, of the county of Telfair, in the State of Georgia, $462, for services rendered as deputy United States marshal of Georgia in the year 1859.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES DEAL.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to make a favorable report from the Committee on Claims. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5597) for the relief of Charles Deal, to report the same.

Mr. HILL. A similar bill passed the Senate and House at a previous session and went to the President, and got there five minutes too late. It is again reported, and I should like to have present consideration. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Charles Deal, late a deputy collector of customs at Champlain, N. Y., $240.04 for expenses incurred by him in the case of Hugh O'Hara against said Deal.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. 10272) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 261) for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States.

BURIAL IN NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have just one more bill. Of the nurses who served during the war there are a few survivors. Some of them desire to be buried in a national cemetery, near the men they cared for. This bill gives the legal permission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill (H. R. 8443) to amend section 4878 of the Revised Statutes, relating to burials in national cemeteries.

Mr. ALLISON. After this bill is disposed of, I desire to call for the regular order.

Mr. QUAY. I trust the Senator from Iowa will pardon me while I call up a bill which I think will create no discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the bill called up by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], and which has been read?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALLISON. I will hear the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. I was about to ask the Senate to take up the bill the consideration of which I moved just previous to the adjournment last night. It is what is known as the Little bill, and prevents the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol.

Mr. HILL. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7469) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "to," in line 8 of section 1, insert the word "be;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same.

JAMES McMILLAN,
CHAS. J. FAULKNER,
LUCIEN BAKER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

G. M. CURTIS,
AD. MEYER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HILL. What are those amendments; the second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth?

Mr. McMILLAN. Amendments simply putting in the word "agent," so as to read "owner or agent," and to cover the property that is owned by agents in the District of Columbia. That is all. The House conferees agreed to the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. WHITE. I will inquire if that expression is involved in the definition of a penalty. Is the use of the word "agent" in the definition of a penalty in the original bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. It simply gives notice to agents, so that agents will be notified as well as owners, that snow and ice shall be cleared from the sidewalks.

Mr. WHITE. It requires notice to the agents?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

The report was concurred in.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10272) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi, reported it without amendment.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa calls for the regular order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893.

Mr. QUAY. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me. I will take the floor for one moment on the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Pennsylvania says that he has something to say in connection with the appropriation bill.

Mr. QUAY. A practical elucidation of the relations between the Post-Office Department and the railway companies, which throws a deal of light upon the question of the propriety of the present appropriation to those companies, is contained in a letter to the distinguished Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, from Mr. Neilson, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, which I desire to put on record as a part of my remarks, and the only remarks I propose to make, on the pending amendment, and I send it to the desk to be read. If the Senator from Iowa would prefer, I will have it printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will allow the letter to be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. QUAY. That is satisfactory.

Mr. ALLISON. It is on the table of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The letter is as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 20, 1897.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your instructions of Saturday morning, I beg to submit the following data, which I trust will be of service to your committee in their search for information in regard to the transportation expenses of this Department in connection with the question of proper and just remuneration to the railroads for such service as they render the Government in transporting the mails. I am particularly gratified at being thus permitted to give you the facts, because I fear some of the gentlemen of your committee did not fully appreciate the embarrassment of Captain White and myself in not being able to supply, at a moment's notice, all the information they required. This is a very large and important question; one that can not be treated or explained without most careful preparation for fear of misleading those who are interested in the importance of the service, and the obligation to the Government that I feel rests upon a few of us who have the management of the details in giving correct information from the postal-service standpoint.

The necessity of treating this very important question most cautiously is impressed upon us who daily handle the mails and realize the necessity of frequent and fast service, and the value of a desire on the part of the transportation companies to meet any requirement of the service. If all profit or advantage to these transportation companies is eliminated, I am satisfied the result which will naturally follow, by a loss of interest on their part, will redound to the disadvantage of the Department and loss of revenue by a falling off of first-class mail, which we are rapidly building up with the present arrangement and help of the railroads. I fully realize that the general idea of the service and possibilities differ from those I have endeavored to impress upon the gentlemen of your committee, and also some of the members of the House, but I feel it is my duty to state that which I know to be true and believe to be for the best interest of the service.

The backbone of the mail service is the railroad. To insure success to the Department and satisfaction to the public, the arrangements between the Department and railroads must, of necessity, be agreeable and satisfactory to both. This relationship can hardly be hoped for should close bargains be driven or the service be forced at a loss, or at less than cost; and I beg to suggest that any modifications and changes should only be made after a most careful and arduous investigation; made by such experts as you have at your command, who, I am sure, would at the same time gain much valuable information upon the question of properly adjusting the postal rates and classifications, which evidently need proper treatment.

As a sample of facts shown by the attached statements, I beg to call your particular attention to the line spoken of between Philadelphia and Pittsburg on the Pennsylvania Railroad. Train 7 runs seven times a week between the above points. The distance is 353.8 miles. It is a special mail train consisting of six cars entirely for Department use. Four of them are 60-foot postal cars paid for by the Department at the rate of $50 per mile per annum, which covers the service both ways, which is the case in all car allowances, making the actual pay $25 per mile per annum, which makes the cost to the Government per mile run 6¼ cents per car, amounting to $24.18 per car per trip for the use of the car alone. The other two are 60-foot storage cars which are not paid for. The total weight of mail carried in the six cars is 70,513 pounds, or 35 tons, a load that could easily be carried in the storage cars without the expense of the postal cars if the Government does not care to do post-office work in separations, etc., en route. I bring in this point here because Senator TELLER was disappointed that I did not give more items.

I will, therefore, show each point I can and trust you will pardon me if I quote too many. In other words, the railroad company could easily accommodate the load of mail in two cars and have the four other cars for other service if the Department did not require these additional facilities for postal work. About 4 tons of mail is properly accredited to each postal car, which cost for transportation (or weight) 23 cents per mile run, 353 miles gives $81.19, which, added to the $24.18 paid for car service, makes $105.32 per car for the run from Philadelphia to Pittsburg—353.7 miles. You will of course observe that practically one-fourth of the $105.32 is for post-office use. Consider this train from another standpoint. Were there no postal cars needed, the Government might be saved the entire expense of the four cars—$96.72 per trip—and the railroad permitted to earn additional revenue on this train by catering to other service to the extent of four cars, or two-thirds of the train. The above is the practical description of the special-train service, which must also be considered from the general-service standpoint of which it is a more important feature, drawing, as it does, nearly all the pay for the route.

This road provides 50 trains one way on our schedule. The 49 other trains, nearly all of which are daily, show a difference in cost of from one-half of this amount per trip or per mile to nine one-thousandths of a cent per mile, and less than one-half a cent per mile for 33 of these trains. While 1 train shows (special mail train 7) expense of $105.32 per car, there are 33 trains upon which you have more or less service for various mileage, receive an amount equal to $1.76 per trip of 353 miles, or practically nothing for the service. This is introduced as an example of the point I endeavored to make on Saturday, of service rendered for practically nothing on the majority of trains run on the large roads.

I do not understand that any one questions the propriety of the pay, at present, as applied to smaller roads, or roads transporting small quantities of mail. I have, therefore, selected the larger roads in hopes of showing you that which is true, that the roads with the greater service in reality render as much, if not more, service in proportion to the pay received than the smaller ones. To illustrate the peculiarities of the service on large roads, as compared with that of the smaller roads who only furnish a few trains each way daily, the road mentioned as having 50 trains west bound, seven and six times a week service, has 5 trains with postal cars, 7 trains with compartments, and 38 trains on which the mail is handled by baggage masters in baggage cars at almost no cost to the Government.

Some of the incidental expenses that the transportation companies are obliged to incur in carrying the mails may be classified thus: Laborers at large stations for handling and transporting the mails, and the delivery of mails to all post-offices, except at terminal points and those beyond the regulation distance. These two items alone cost from 15 to 20 per cent of the total amount received from the Government. There are 40,000 post-offices served by the railroads in this country. Seven thousand of them have what is known as mail-messenger service, which is paid for by the Government at a cost of $1,175,000. There are 33,000 post-offices supplied at the expense of the railroads because they are within the 80-rod distance. This would be three times the expense of the 7,000 post-offices to the Government, or about 10 per cent of the entire railroad allowance. The same companies are obliged to furnish office and transfer rooms, including light and fuel. The expense of the above items is very much larger in proportion to the service on Eastern than on Western roads, on account of the frequency of transfer junctions, value of property, number of post-offices, large towns, etc.

There are two other important factors in the question that slipped my mind in the verbal description. The transportation of postal clerks and officers of the Department, including inspectors and other employees, and the liability for accidents, both personal and otherwise. Transportation is furnished to the entire number of postal clerks and others of the Department while on duty to the extent of, say, 3,000 persons daily, $3 per day, which would be an inside estimate of the cost of the tickets if the Government was required to purchase transportation. This would amount to $15,000 per day, or a total of $4,695,000 per year of three hundred and thirteen days. My impression is that an actual count of those using the Government commission, or an order for free transportation, would greatly exceed this amount and would come much nearer half as much again.

The accidents referred to are of two kinds: One to the postal clerk (who rides free of charge), who, in case of injuries received while on the trains, usually brings suit against the companies and recovers damages for personal injuries; the other for damage done to persons or property by the postal clerk by carelessly throwing off pouches while the train is in motion. There are quite a number of personal cases against the companies in process of settlement all the time. We have no records of either these cases or the number of cases of damage caused by the carelessness of clerks, but I can safely assure you that it amounts to a large sum of money. As an illustration: The last year of my service on the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroad I paid out $7,500 for the carelessness of a postal clerk at one point in throwing pouches off on a platform full of people waiting for the train, injuring badly three and slightly five persons. Our entire mail service paid us $90,000 a year. So 8 per cent of the entire revenue for one year was paid out on account of one accident. You, of course, understand there is no way the railroads can recover any such money from the Government.

The postal-car question is one that I fear has never been fully understood. It appears to be the general idea and belief that the railroad companies would, of necessity, be obliged to furnish such cars for the transportation of mails whether paid for them or not. This is not the case with either the postal car or the combination or partial car, for which they are not paid. In the case of the postal car the illustration given in the Pennsylvania Railroad train 7 case, in the beginning of this report, is a fair sample. Two storage cars would perform the service as far as the railroad portion of the responsibility and necessities are concerned, and not be overloaded with the 35 tons.

The additional four cars simply add to the expenses in hauling, maintaining, original cost, etc. In the case of trains with only one postal car, without a storage car, the mail so hauled, were it not for the Government necessities of working in transit, would find a place in the ordinary baggage car without expense to them of hauling the postal car, maintaining, original cost, etc., as above. I think this will illustrate to you the fact that the railroads really have no use for the postal car that we require them to furnish, equipped in such a manner that it can not possibly be used for any other purpose.

The combination (or partial car) is a somewhat similar expense. On lines that do not require a full 40-foot car, and where the Government requires the service for separation of one or more postal clerks, the railroad companies are required to partition off a portion of the baggage car, from 15 to 40 feet in length, fitting up this space in the same manner as a postal car for a mail service, say of from 250 to 2,500 pounds of mail. They are given no allowance for the special use of this portion of the car, while it really causes the use of the baggage car, because if this space were not required for postal work the railroads, in most cases, would run a combination baggage and smoking car in place of the baggage car and a smoker, with the small quantity of mail stored in one portion of the baggage end, thus saving expense in handling one car, maintaining, and original cost.

The revenue of a 60-foot postal car, at $25 per mile run, to a railroad company is about $8,000; cost of hauling about $14,000; maintaining, lighting, heating, etc., about $1,200, making a shortage on that account alone of $7,200 per annum, allowing nothing for interest, renewal of car used up in ten years, replacement in case of accident, etc., upon an investment and possible loss of $6,000. The above case is figured out upon the most flattering terms, i. e., $50 per mile per annum for a 60-foot car both ways, or $25 one way.

The facts of the case are different, because the Government is paying for more 40 and 50 foot cars than for 60-foot cars. A 40-foot car, at $25 per annum, only pays half the amount given a 60-foot; a 50-foot car pays a little more than a 40-foot car, while the expenses are in a general way, excepting that of construction, about the same for each of the three sizes. It is hard to say what is most important and where lines in the service can be drawn. Each person is interested in his one or two letters as much as those who mail hundreds. The first-class mail will naturally be the money earner of the Department. To increase that, every effort should be made.

The Department is making great efforts to improve what might be termed local short-haul mail. To do this combination cars and postal clerks are needed. A very few pounds—say, roughly, 5—will pay the Government expense of clerks; but the value to the railroad company who furnishes the partial car is so near nothing it would hardly be considered. This service is most important to country and suburban districts, and is being pushed there.

If I had the data to give you what might be termed the grand totals of all service, including actual mileage, weights, etc., taking into consideration all service, I am satisfied your committee would be astonished at the low rate shown.

Our estimates show an average of 406 pounds of mail per train mile, the actual cost of which to the Government is 10.76 cents per mile run, giving a rate of about two one-hundredths of a cent per pound per mile.

I have added such statements as could be prepared in so short a time, and trust this explanation may make them plain to you, and justify my opinion that the present amount paid for the service is not excessive, and that while, as Senator TELLER remarked, "most everything else had been reduced excepting the railroads, and they should come down also," the facts are that so many improvements have been made in the facilities given the Department, the greater number of trains placed at its disposal, and so much more than was formally required—asked of them—that I am sure a reduction would operate against the interest of the Department. If I remember correctly, I gave you my views of the subject of ownership of the postal cars; therefore, will not trouble you with it again, except to say there would be no advantage in such an ownership, with almost a certain great disadvantage and unnecessary expense.

I believe the work of a competent committee would result in a great benefit to the Department. Much valuable information would be gained and many of the misunderstood features would be cleared up and properly explained, and I feel satisfied would do much to indorse the idea that I have endeavored to make plain, in addition to offering such suggestions as they might see proper as to the newspaper and other bulky service, which can be handled to the advantage of the postal revenue under the same circumstances.

With great respect, I am, very truly,

C. NEILSON,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

HON. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman Appropriations Committee, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

On this route there are 12 trains carrying mail. Railway post-office cars are paid for on two trains. On 10 trains closed-pouch and apartment service is performed. On 5 trains the allowance is less than $3 per trip; on 4 it is less than $2 per trip.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment under consideration when the Senate took a recess may be passed over until the Senate is fuller, and also the paragraph on page 8, beginning at line 17 and ending at line 3 on page 8, and that we may go on and consider the remainder of the bill.

Mr. GORMAN and others. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the pending amendment may be passed over and also the paragraph on page 8 of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 8, line 4, to increase the appropriation for railway post-office clerks from $8,000,000 to $8,182,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred and twenty-five" and insert "three hundred;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "Provided, That the rate of compensation to be paid per mile shall not exceed the amount now received by companies performing said service" and insert "and the Postmaster-General shall report to Congress at its next regular session the prices paid for such service in detail;" so as to make the clause read:

For inland transportation of mail by electric and cable cars on routes not exceeding 20 miles in length, $209,000; and the Postmaster-General shall report to Congress at its next regular session the prices paid for such service in detail.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General," on page 11, line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "including salaries of inspectors, etc., and for per diem allowance to inspectors in the field while actually traveling on business of the Department at the rate of $3 per day, exclusive of Sundays excepting in cases of emergency, four hundred," and insert "three hundred and fifty-eight;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That post-office inspectors, excepting those receiving salaries of $2,500 per annum, may be paid in excess of the $3 per diem allowed by this act for such items of actual and necessary personal expense incurred in the discharge of their official duties, upon presentation and approval of vouchers covering the total expenditure for personal expenses for the date or dates which such excess may be claimed; or, if the exigencies of the service render the taking of vouchers impracticable or inexpedient, the sworn statement of the inspector reciting the objects of, amounts of, and necessity for, such expenditures, may be accepted in lieu of the vouchers: And provided further, That post-office inspectors shall be paid, out of any money hereby appropriated, a salary at the rate of not exceeding the following: For first year's service, $1,200; second year, $1,400; third year, $1,600.

So as to make the clause read:

For mail depredations and post-office inspectors, $358,000.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what the effect is of these erasures upon the compensation, or rather upon the expense account, of the inspectors when they are in the field? The bill as it came from the House I understand reduced the allowance to inspectors from the present rate. Now, the Senate committee strikes all those provisions out. Does that leave the allowance to inspectors for expenses when traveling on business for the Department as now provided by law?

Mr. ALLISON. It does.

Mr. CHANDLER. That was the intention of the committee?

Mr. ALLISON. It was the intention of the committee to leave that matter as the law now provides.

Mr. CHANDLER. That will be the effect of the amendment?

Mr. BURROWS. It leaves their per diem pay the same as now?

Mr. ALLISON. The same as now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask how the committee obtained the reduction of appropriation from $400,000 to $358,000? If the Senator can state, I should like to know why that was reduced.

Mr. ALLISON. This was the estimate of the Department. We did not feel that we had authority or that it was wise to exceed the estimate of the Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. The House enlarged the Department's estimate, then, I understand?

Mr. ALLISON. The House had enlarged the Department estimate. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I will state that the appropriation for the current year is $300,000. The Department estimate was $358,311. We left off the fractional hundreds and appropriated as the estimate of the Department provided for.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 12, after line 9, to strike out:

Section 413 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 413. The Postmaster-General shall make the following annual reports to Congress:

"First. A report of the finances of the Department for the preceding year, showing the amount of balance due the Department at the beginning of the year, the amount of postage which accrued within the year, the amount of engagements and liabilities and the amount actually paid during the year for carrying the mail, showing how much of the amount was for carrying the mail in preceding years.

"Second. A report of the amount expended in the Department for the preceding fiscal year, including detailed statements of expenditures made from the contingent fund.

"And the Postmaster-General shall cause all of such reports to be printed at the Public Printing Office, either together or separately, and in such number's as may be required by the exigencies of the service or by law."

Section 4020 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4020. The Postmaster-General may appoint two agents to superintend the railway postal service, each of whom shall be paid out of the appropriation for the transportation of the mail a salary at the rate of $2,500 a year, with an allowance for traveling and incidental expenses, while actively employed in the service, of not more than $4 a day; and the Auditor for the Post-Office Department shall charge to the appropriation for mail transportation the salary and per diem of the assistant superintendents of the postal railway service, and to the appropriation for the free-delivery system the salary and per diem of the special agent detailed for that service."

Section 4048 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 21, after the word "detail," to insert "as far as practicable," and in line 22, after the word "service," to strike out "as provided in this appropriation act;" so as to make the clause read:

The Postmaster-General shall for the fiscal year 1899, and annually thereafter, submit in the annual estimates to Congress in detail, as far as practicable, for expenses of the free-delivery service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa what effect it will have upon section 4 of the act of July 16, 1894, to make the change in line 3, on the last page, inserting the word "ten" where the word "seven" occurs?

Mr. ALLISON. Under the act of 1894 money orders may be destroyed at the end of ten years. They accumulate from year to year, so that there is an immense quantity, of course, in the crypt of the Post-Office Department. It is estimated by the authorities of the Post-Office Department that it is perfectly safe to destroy the money orders at the end of seven years rather than at the end of ten. So far as I have been able to examine the question, I think it might be reasonably done at the end of five years; but inasmuch as the House had fixed seven years, we did not in the committee propose a change.

Now, Mr. President, we will return to the amendment which was under consideration when the Senate took a recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURROWS in the chair). The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the questions concerning the correction of alleged abuses in the postal service in connection with second-class mail matter, the extension of free delivery to rural regions, the reduction of the cost of the railroad transportation of the mails, the reduction of the cost of railway-car service, the advisability of the Government owning the postal cars necessary and paying the railways mileage rates for hauling the same, the adoption of 1-cent postage for single letters, and other like questions, shall be examined by a postal-reform commission of five, to consist of the two chairmen in the Senate and House of the present Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the Postmaster-General, and two citizens to be appointed by the President, who shall make their report and recommendation for legislation to the next Congress; and for the services of said civilian commissioners and the expenses of said commission the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available, and to be expended according to the direction of the Postmaster-General; said commission to expire on the 31st day December, 1897.

Mr. CHANDLER. It occurs to me to say in reply to the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], made just before the recess, that I do not think there is any objection to constituting a commission composed partly of members of the two Houses, the Senate and the House, and of civilians. The Senator from Massachusetts put himself upon record as opposed to a commission of that sort on the ground that possibly the members of Congress might find themselves outnumbered in such a commission, and then there would be an awkward result when their report should be made to Congress. If a commission of this kind was invested with power to do things, I should think that criticism of the Senator might have some force. But it is a mere committee of inquiry. The gentlemen who compose a commission of this sort, taking the case we now have, a Senator, a member of the House, a Postmaster-General, and two civilians, will have no power vested in them. These gentlemen would have no power to do anything except to make inquiry. They ascertain facts.

It may be fairly presumed that a commission composed of such gentlemen as would meet on this occasion would make a safe investigating committee. They would not quarrel while they were ascertaining facts, and when the facts were ascertained and it became necessary to make a report to Congress it would not be material, if they happened to differ, that they should differ in their conclusions. It would be a difference fraught with no evil consequences. Each member of the commission, it might so happen, would make a separate report of his conclusion, and no harm would be done. I can not think that there is any gravity in the objections made by the Senator from Massachusetts, even if we supposed that the commission would split up, so to speak, in their opinions after ascertaining such facts as they could reach. On the other hand, the Senator from Massachusetts wholly overlooks the benefits to result if a commission of this kind should happen to be unanimous in its conclusion.

If we could have upon this important subject—the question of abuses in second-class matter, the question of the rates of postage on the various kinds of mail matter, and the question of the fair compensation to the railroads for transporting the mails—a commission, which should consist of a member of the House, the chairman of a committee, the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; of a member of the Senate, the chairman of a committee, the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; the Postmaster-General, and two eminent citizens, to be named by the President of the United States, and if we could have a unanimous report upon these questions from such a commission, surely a very important and valuable result would have been reached. The questions that now trouble us, that trouble the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, that give great anxiety and labor and tribulation to the Committee on Appropriations, would be solved in a way that would give satisfaction to the House and the Senate, and I doubt not to the American people.

So, Mr. President, while I respect highly the judgment on great questions and on small questions of the Senator from Massachusetts, I do not conceive that the reasons which he gave for opposing this commission as proposed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and favoring the commission proposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations were forcible and valid reasons which ought to influence our action.

The commission as proposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations is an anomaly. I have already called attention to the fact that the committee at first thought they could create a joint committee of the two Houses by act of Congress, and upon reflection they discovered that they ought not to create a joint committee, but that they can create a commission.

The Senator from Massachusetts says a commission composed wholly of members of Congress is all right and proper, but a commission composed partly of members of Congress and partly of public officials outside of Congress and partly of private citizens is objectionable. It seems to me that, considering the end which is sought to be accomplished here of a proper investigation, a useful investigation, by both the committees, the Senator from Massachusetts sticks in the bark when he objects to one method, to wit, the method of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and is willing to adopt the method proposed by the influential and potent and all-prevailing Committee on Appropriations.

I hope, therefore, that Senators who are willing to have a commission of any sort will think the commission proposed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads just as good a commission as that which the Senate Committee on Appropriations in their wisdom have proposed to constitute.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the proposition that comes from the Committee on Appropriations for the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the question of mail transportation is the only one that could properly come from that committee at this time and under present conditions and circumstances. It is admitted on all sides that the expenditures of the Government have now reached a point that we must make an honest and earnest effort to reduce them, and to reduce them without in any way impairing the efficiency of the public service.

We have before us from the Departments estimates for the coming year amounting to over $530,000,000. Already up to this day the expenditures of the Government are exceeding the revenues by nearly $50,000,000 during the present portion of the fiscal year, and there is no bright prospect of any increase in the revenue and no way to meet the deficiency except to reduce the appropriations or increase taxation.

There has been a general belief that in the Post-Office Department, whose expenditures exceed by eight or nine million dollars the receipts of that Department, economies should be introduced without in any way impairing the efficiency of that great service which every man and woman and child in the United States is interested in; and the one item that seemed to attract the greatest attention of the Representatives of the people is the item which embraces over $30,000,000 for the transportation of the mails.

The former Postmasters-General have called attention sharply to that particular item. The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], who when Postmaster-General attempted himself, as Postmaster-General, as he had the power to a great extent to do under the law, to correct what were considered excessive payments on that account, succeeded to some extent. So far as I know, that is the only instance of any Postmaster-General in my time making any impress upon the payments on that account.

We have labored in Congress to correct that extravagance, if it be an extravagance. We have sought to gain information. The President of the United States has been requested to appoint commissioners to take testimony and to examine into the details and see whether the Government was paying too much to the transportation companies. We have tried a commission authorized by an act of Congress directing the Postmaster-General to make the investigation, and both of those commissions have been without fruit; no result whatever has come in the interest of the people; no recommendation either from the commission appointed by the President of the United States or that appointed by the Postmaster-General has come to Congress proposing any material reduction.

The only reductions which have been made have been made arbitrarily by Congress in spite of the reports of commissions. One reduction was arbitrarily made by the Appropriations Committee in the House of Representatives and the Senate, concurred in by both bodies; a reduction of 10 per cent, without regard to the service, and with very little knowledge except the general belief that we were paying too much. A second reduction of 10 per cent came. Both those reductions emanated from the great Appropriations Committee in a coordinate branch of the Government, and were concurred in by us.

Mr. President, when we considered this appropriation bill, with the estimates to which I have referred, and with the receipts of the Government before the committee, with the fact that the Post-Office Department is spending eight and ten million dollars more than its receipts, the one item that came up for reduction, so far as the committee was concerned, was this matter of transportation.

The other question, the question as to second-class mail matter and the rate of postage, was being dealt with by the Post-Office Committee of this body, and therefore the Appropriations Committee had naught to do with it. The Appropriations Committee were dealing with this expenditure, not with the policy of the Department as to the rate of postage or the class of matter which was to be embraced, but with this expenditure.

I submit to the Senate, to the Senator from New Hampshire, and to other Senators who have criticised the Committee on Appropriations, that we have dealt with the only branch of the question with which the Committee on Appropriations should have dealt. It was not one embraced in any other inquiry or investigation, and it belonged properly here to the Appropriations Committee. As was stated by the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], no reduction in the transportation rates has been made since 1878, and yet there has been a reduction in the cost of the transportation of everything on the face of the earth of nearly one-half since that date. The Committee on Appropriations were not prepared to make a reduction, for they had no data which showed what the reduction should be, and how great it should be.

The Post-Office Department as now constituted is opposed to any reduction whatever. That Department claims that they are not paying too much. They admit that there has been no reduction, while everything else has been reduced; but they say that it is their information that the increased cost to the railroads, the cost for increased bulk, has more than made up for what would be a proper reduction. The statements of those officers have not made any impression upon me. I believe that they are mistaken. All of the members of the committee were under the impression that the subject should be thoroughly inquired into. Inquired into how? In view of the past history of this matter, we believed that the best method was to inquire into it through members of this body and members of the other body, precisely as we inquired into the control and conduct of the great Departments of this Government, the Treasury Department, the Post-Office Department, and all the other Departments located in Washington, to see what reforms could be made and what economies could be introduced.

I know, and the country knows, that it has become the fashion in the newspaper press and through other sources to endeavor to make the public believe that there is extravagance in Congress; and yet I assert to-night that, notwithstanding we have had two

Democratic Administrations and one Republican Administration in the executive branch of the Government, there has not been in twelve years any recommendation or any act of the executive branch of the Government which has reduced these expenditures materially, and all of the reforms and all of the economies in this service have come alone through Congressional action and through Congressional inquiry.

Mr. CULLOM. Although the law gives the Department the authority to make such reforms.

Mr. GORMAN. I thank the Senator from Illinois for the suggestion. The law gives them perfect authority to institute these reforms, but we might as well look the facts squarely in the face, at least as to the Post-Office Department.

I said a moment ago that the only Postmaster-General within my knowledge who has attempted to deal with this question of mail transportation was the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]; but he had not left the Department six months before every economy he had introduced was wiped away, and the transportation companies practically not only received all they had received before, but their compensation has been constantly increasing from that day to this.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Maryland permit a question?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE. In the Senator's long service in this body when this question regarding the transportation of mails has arisen, does the Senator from Maryland know of any case, excepting the case of the Senator from Wisconsin when he was Postmaster-General, where, except on the part of Congress, there has been a bona fide effort to control this railroad extortion, which everyone seems to admit actually exists?

Mr. GORMAN. That was the statement I made, but it is made more clearly, however, by the honorable Senator from California.

I do not impute to the men who are in the Post-Office Department, or those who preceded them, a want of ability or of courage to act; but the fact is, Mr. President, that the great power of those corporations, who control everything, who are powerful enough to dictate policies and make and unmake public men, is so omnipotent that no executive officer has been found in the last twelve years, except in the single instance and to the extent to which I have indicated, who has attempted to reduce the compensation for mail transportation.

I have read the message of the present President of the United States asking this Congress to economize in its expenditures. I have seen statements emanating from the executive branch pointing out the extravagance of Congress, and yet when you come to turn to the estimates you find the very agents of the President who makes these declarations for economy sending Congress estimates higher than have ever before been made in the history of the Government; estimates which, on their face, amount to about $517,000,000 for the next fiscal year, omitting from the computation $17,000,000 more for rivers and harbors, for the improvement of which continuing contracts are made which will make the aggregate $534,000,000. I have seen executive officers preach economy and call attention to the extravagance of Congress, when I have not known this Administration or the preceding one to go substantially to work for the purpose of decreasing the expenditures of the Government in those matters which would not affect the general welfare or the proper conduct of the affairs of the Government.

You may take the matter of the reduction of the cost of your armor plate. Where did that come from? It came not from anyone who has the control of the purchase of armor or the technical knowledge in regard to it, but it emanated from the committee of which the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire is an honored member, the Committee on Naval Affairs. So it runs through all these great branches.

Now, I submit to the Senator from New Hampshire, practical as he is, and I submit to the Senate of the United States, that if we desire to make these reforms and bring about these economies we must take one subject at a time. The easiest way to kill a great reform and to promote extravagant expenditures is to preach economy, for one to declare himself as being better than his fellows, and then antagonize every proposition that goes to an actual and earnest reform. The easiest way to do it is to load down a proposition, to make it so broad that it will never reach a conclusion; and that, in my poor judgment, will be the result of the amendments offered by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, if they should be adopted. His proposition embraces within its scope more than can be handled by any one commission in the time named, for no commission could take up more than that one subject, which ramifies every section of the Union, which embraces every transportation line by rail and water in the United States; and with the best experts that they can get it will be all that they can do to bring to Congress in February next an intelligent statement of the real condition and the information which will enable us to determine what rates shall prevail hereafter.

That is all that is sought to be done; and why is it sought to be done in the way in which the committee proposed? I suppose I am not violating any confidence when I say that some of us on this side of the Chamber proposed that it should be by a commission appointed by the two presiding officers, the present Vice-President and the present Speaker of the House of Representatives. It so happens that there is a difference in the political faith of those two officers, but all of us have perfect confidence in their integrity. They would appoint a commission which would fairly represent both, if you please, of the great political parties of the country, although there is no politics in this matter of the payment for the transportation of the mails; but the appointment of a commission in that way would give confidence, and we should consider their recommendations as being more fair, when we come to deal with them hereafter, if there should be a fair representation made on a commission appointed by the presiding officers of the respective Houses.

It does seem to me, Mr. President, in view of these facts, and in view of the further fact that the matter embraced in the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, covering the great policies of the Department, which affects the newspapers and publishers all over the country in the fixing of the rate of postage, is a matter of the highest legislation, belonging alone to the Post-Office Committee; and I should not have any objection at any time to empowering that committee with full authority to examine and report upon that subject whenever they see proper; but, in my judgment, you can not embrace such a provision on a great appropriation bill, whilst you may a question as to the fixing of compensation.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I heartily sympathize in general with the views expressed by the Senator from Maryland, but I beg leave ask him whether he has overlooked—perhaps he has not—the fact that the railroad mileage has increased within the five or ten or twelve years of which the Senator has been speaking, I do not know how much, but perhaps 8 or 10 per cent, and that the population of the country since 1890 has doubtless increased not less than 11 or 12 per cent. So that if we suppose this compensation to have been correctly adjusted some twelve years ago, according to the increased bulk of the mails and the distance traversed, there would be a very natural growth of 8, 10, 12, or 15 per cent, roughly estimating, in the absolutely necessary and just expenditures of that Department fairly made. But I can not help sympathizing with those who believe that we have been paying more than necessary to the railroad companies for the transportation of our mails when we come to look at the rates at which they carry ordinary goods.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I do not wish to occupy a very great length of time, but I want to make a few observations with respect to this matter.

The first idea in respect to our postal service is, as it seems to me, that it should be the best, the most efficient of any in the world, if we can make it so. Starting with that postulate, two other fundamental ideas in respect to this Government would seem to be absolutely recognized by everyone who will think of it. The first is that such a service should be obtained at the most reasonable cost; its economy should be a true economy—an excellent service, but at the lowest cost as well as the obtaining of the best service.

The next suggestion is that that cost should be assessed upon the beneficiaries of the service fairly. Our taxation for the support of the Post-Office Department is in the form of a special assessment intended to be corresponding in degree and extent with the benefits conferred upon those for whom the service is maintained.

Now, sir, intending in no case to be understood as meaning by any reduction of cost or expense to diminish in the least degree the full excellence and value of that service, it has seemed to me for many years that the extent of expenditure for the maintenance of the service was highly extravagant. I shall not stop to argue that proposition at length; but ten years ago I had occasion, in making a report upon this subject, to say for the information of Congress, so far as I could give it, a number of things and to make a number of suggestions in respect to that unnecessary cost and the best way of relieving it. Afterwards in the Senate I have tried to insist upon similar ideas, or upon some of them, but encountered in every instance the opposition of powerful influences, and we are never to deal with this subject until we arm some authority with power and until we establish in that authority the men who will exercise the power which the subject demands.

In 1839 the Parliament of England passed a law, which has never since been changed, I believe, for the government of their postal service in reference to the employment of railway mail carriers; at least it had not been changed at the last time I had occasion to look into the subject, and I think it never has been.

I recommended to Congress the first element of that system, and that was this: That an absolute authority should be given to the officers of the United States to compel any railroad to carry the mails. I undertook when charged with departmental service to cut off payments to the railroads which were without a particle of authority of law. I cut them off. A million dollars had been paid for the use of apartments in cars in the likeness of railway postal cars, without a particle of authority to do it. The expenditure had run up to some $90,000 a year at the time when I had the first occasion to look into it; and it was cut off in every instance at once; but the railroads threatened that they would not carry the mails; and one railroad company, the Old Colony Railroad of Massachusetts, refused to carry the mails, notwithstanding, of course, that no payment not otherwise authorized by law was made to that road or any other; and therefore they did not carry the mails for a long time in consequence of that.

No step can be taken on this subject if you are to put the Department, or leave it as it now is, at the mercy of the powerful influences and combinations which exist in the country. The first recommendation which I more than once undertook to present to Congress was that the Department should be vested, as it is vested in Great Britain, with the power to compel railroad companies enjoying all the benefits of Congressional protection, through interstate-commerce laws and the Federal guardianship of interstate-commerce interests, to recognize their duty and comply with it by carrying the mails at such rates of compensation as the law should authorize.

Mr. ALLEN. What is to prevent the courts from compelling them to perform this service by a writ of mandamus?

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, for want of a law to compel it, there has always been a doubt whether the courts would compel it, although in some instances the attempt has been made. I shall not stop to go into the history, because, so far as judicial action is concerned, it can not, I think, be affirmed that it can be counted on as a sure reliance, and perhaps I ought to add that it is even doubtful if the courts possess the power. They need a law, which the courts could then administer without any difficulty.

The next thing in the English system, after having prescribed that obligation, is to leave it to the Postmaster-General to make an agreement with the railroads to carry the mail upon such terms as he sees fit, or as the two can agree upon, precisely, in other words, as a great business corporation in the United States conducts its affairs. Every express company probably in the United States owns its cars. The great packers of meat—Armour, Swift, the Cudahys—own their cars, and as many of them, I venture to say, are owned by each one of those concerns as all the postal cars in the United States. Yes, the Fish Commission—that is an excellent illustration, for which I thank the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]—the Fish Commission of the United States owns its own cars. The large breweries own their cars, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] suggests.

The English system, as I was about to add, has been for the postmaster-general to make a bargain with the railroad companies. When they can not agree, the law authorizes and provides for a method of arbitration to settle the rate of compensation, but that is almost never; for with a wise and able and strong department authorized to conduct its affairs according to business principles, willing to deal fairly with the railroad companies, there has rarely been a controversy of any serious kind, as I am informed. Yet the English postal system, with the penny postage there as here, 1 penny, or 2 cents an ounce, yields a net revenue to the British Government, I think, of from ten to eighteen millions a year, though it is a vastly smaller service than ours, it must be remembered.

We have in our railway service almost as many miles of road as all the rest of the world together. We had in 1886, when I pointed out in a report a comparison of the figures, but possibly the relationship has somewhat changed since, because there has no doubt been a greater expansion of railroad mileage in other parts of the globe than in our own country in the last ten years.

Sir, we have had commissions, as was said by the Senator from Maryland. In 1874 the Senate appointed a commission of its own, that is, a committee of its own, to make an inquiry. It made an interesting report, but no special legislation followed. I believe we are still living under the law of 1873.

Mr. ALLISON. We are, with the exception of two reductions and a reduction as to the land-grant railroads of 10 per cent additional.

Mr. VILAS. Yes, I overlooked that. That is true. In 1876 Congress passed an act for a commission to examine the railway mail service by three persons. They studied it intently, and undertook to evolve a scheme of compensation which should be adjusted to the elements of weight, of car space, of speed, and of frequency of trains. The difficulty was that, trying to establish a single rule to go through the labyrinth of railroads throughout the United States and deal with all those considerations at once, they came to no agreement, and only reported intelligently an account of things, but rather too mystifyingly to result in legislation, and nothing was done.

Mr. FAULKNER. That was a Presidential commission.

Mr. VILAS. Yes; that was a Presidential commission. Subsequently the Department made an inquiry; but it amounted to nothing practical.

Sir, it occurred to me, and I presented that view in 1887, that the true course was, if we wanted to begin, and it seemed to me necessary to begin with care, and not expose the service—the true course was to begin by owning our postal cars.

Now, why? The statute of 1873, which has always since remained in force, saving only as to rates, provided that railroad companies should be compensated upon a graduated scale according to weights alone, and that graduated scale of weights and prices according to weights was to be fixed per mile of railroad per year for a term of four years. But for that the statute provides that the railroads shall furnish—

> Sufficient and suitable room, fixtures, and furniture in a car or apartment, properly lighted and warmed, for route agents to accompany and distribute the mails.

Now, if we stood upon that alone, every railroad would be obliged to furnish everything necessary. In addition to that, they were required to convey the mails with due frequency and speed upon all such trains and in such manner as the Postmaster-General prescribes; to deliver the mail into terminal post-offices and into all way offices not more than 80 rods distant from the station, and to carry without charge post-office inspectors and special agents, mail bags, blanks, stationery, and supplies. That was the obligation of the statute upon railroads as a condition of receiving this ratable pay for transportation.

Now, it will be observed next that the mail is by far the best paid service of any that the railroads perform. I state it without the least qualification and am sure it can not be challenged. When they had amounts large enough to require a full car, they were just as much obliged to provide and it was just as profitable and more profitable to provide a full car to be carried full of mail than it was to carry a half car of mail and provide half a car.

But, sir, in that complication of things, which led to the statute of 1873, there was a struggle of the larger roads for more pay, and the statute was adopted, hastily, as it were, put upon the appropriation bill, and then a commission ordered the very next winter to inquire into the subject, or a committee ordered by the Senate, and in two years another one. The statute was never satisfactory, although it has existed for twenty-four years. It was unsatisfactory in its origin, and almost immediately was attacked. That statute then superadds that, whenever the Postmaster-General shall require it, in every case in which the railroad company uses a full postal car it shall have additional pay for the use of that car. The very time when their business of mail carriage is most profitable to them we superadd rent, as it were. It is not called by that name, but that is a convenient name to call it—rent for the use of the car. If the car is but 40 feet in length, $25 per mile; if the car is 45 feet, $30; $40, if 50 feet, and $50 if it is a 55 or 60 foot car.

Although I find that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, in the recent inquiry before the committee, upon mere general statement, without particularization of facts, has disputed the correctness of these conclusions, I wish to say that in the inquiry I had to make then I had the aid of as accomplished, skillful, business, and expert railroad man as I believe there is to be found, and as the result I reported at that time:

> Careful inquiry discloses that very many of these cars, such as they are, would not cost to build $3,000 each; that the best 50-foot cars can be built for $4,000 to $4,500 each; a new 60-foot car, equal to the most complete and handsome now in the service, for not over $4,600, and that taking together all the post-office cars in the United States their average value does not probably exceed $3,500.

I was speaking of this but a day or two ago with the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], whom everybody here will recognize as probably as well informed on that subject as any man can be. He told me that the cost of cars had been since much reduced.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will permit me, the statement before the committee was that a 60-foot car cost about $6,000 now. That was the estimate before the committee.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the Senator whether that is more than the cars formerly cost?

Mr. FAULKNER. It is.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a different car.

Mr. WHITE. Is it more expensive to build a car now than it was years ago?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, sir; it is a different car, with additional furniture and different requirements of the Post-Office Department, which make it cost about $6,000.

Mr. VILAS. I was about to add that there had been some additional features of cost added to cars, such, for example, as the introduction of the Pintch system of gas and some other features of that kind which have somewhat added to the cost of cars. But it is the superlatively best postal car, equipped with all the features of the highest experience, that reaches a cost of $6,000 to-day, in my opinion.

I found at that time that this was also true, that $60 a month for each car in use is ample provision for cleaning, heating, lighting, supplies of oil, ice, dusters, scrub brushes, soap, lamp fixtures, pails, and other minor articles of daily use, embracing all necessary labor and including ordinary repairs.

Mr. FAULKNER. I should like to state here that it was the testimony of Mr. White before our committee that the cost of a car was about $1,200 a year.

Mr. VILAS. That makes it about $480 more than this estimate. I am perfectly satisfied that it is excessive. I saw the statement. There is no occasion for so high an outlay on the average. There may now and then be cases for outlay upon special cars, but upon an average there is no occasion for that outlay.

Then, sir, I was satisfied—and every car in the United States was enumerated; the full number, including all held in reserve, as well as all in use—that at that time all of the cars in the United States could be bought for $1,600,000; add for cleaning, etc., at $720 a year apiece for the 342 in use, the cost of operation would be $246,240, making a total of $1,846,240. Yet it was necessary under the statute as it stood to estimate a sum of $2,000,000 to pay for the use of them for a single year, the exact amount being $1,881,580, but making allowance for the increase it would be $2,000,000, and in this bill, if I am not mistaken, the amount is $3,600,000. Now, observe that all that is in addition to transportation rate paid.

I take the last report of the Postmaster-General, and I turn to the table giving the statistics of the railway lines between New York and Buffalo on the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, length of route, 439.52 miles; pay per mile for transportation—that is, outside of the rent of cars—$2,588.09, making total annual rate of pay for transportation $1,137,517.31. That is simply for hauling the postal cars. On that route there are ten lines, as they are called—that is, ten cars of 60 feet each—for which, at $50 apiece, $500 per mile was paid, making a payment for the one year for those ten cars, that could not be worth over $60,000 at the highest price known, $219,760, in addition to the full rate of transportation for drawing them, a rate of transportation which includes furnishing the cars according to statute. Now, that illustrates it.

I turn to another. Let me take this route, No. 110001, Philadelphia and Pittsburg, on the Pennsylvania Railroad, 350 miles in length; pay per mile for transportation, $2,081.07; annual rate of pay for transportation, $736,282; nine cars, 60 feet, $450 per mile annual rate of pay; total for the rent of the nine cars, $159,210.

In any case they would cost at the highest rate known, $54,000. In either one of those cases we have paid three times the value of the cars, if we assume them to cost the highest price.

Now, those are simple illustrations; they are among the heavier and more striking illustrations, taken from that report as it has come in to us from the last submission of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. FAULKNER. This was a new subject to me until we investigated it in committee, but I will give the Senator an illustration and ask him how he explains it in reference to fixing the cost. The chief clerk of the Railway Mail Service, I think it was, testified that between New York and Philadelphia we paid for 19 mail cars per day. That was the number we paid for, and he said that by an arrangement with the different roads running between those two cities, in allowing mail to be carried in part of the baggage car or compartment car, baggage and mail, there were between those cities 104 trains carrying the mail, and yet we paid for only 19 trains. That was by an arrangement made between the Department and the company.

Mr. VILAS. I am unable to answer in respect to facts of which I have no knowledge, but I turn to that route.

Mail route 109004, New York and Philadelphia, distance 90.65 miles; annual rate of pay for transportation, $3,151.53; $285,686 for transportation; postal cars, twelve lines of 60 feet and two lines of 40, making $650 per mile; paid for those, $58,272.50. Those twelve cars of 60 feet are probably cars that have been a good while in service, but if they were of the highest cost known they would come to $72,000, and the two cars of 40 feet might come to $7,000 more, or say $80,000, as the entire cost of the cars for the use of which for one year we paid $58,278.50.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator does not seem to get the point. We paid for but 19 trains between those cities, yet I am informed by an arrangement with the companies running between the cities we had the benefit of 104 trains, half each way.

Mr. VILAS. I do not know how that may be. I have taken the facts as they are reported to us by the Postmaster-General in respect to that case, as in respect to others. If there were other trains used, the mail was carried on baggage cars or some other cars. They did not draw extra postal cars.

Mr. FAULKNER. No.

Mr. VILAS. No. I was about to add——

Mr. FAULKNER. I was going to say that there was no compensation paid them for the additional trains, from 19 to 104.

Mr. VILAS. They were paid for the weight of the mail carried.

Mr. FAULKNER. No.

Mr. VILAS. And the transportation paid by weight is an abundant rate of pay for the service. They furnished only 14 postal cars, but if they transported mails in other cars they were paid by weight.

Mr. FAULKNER. I understood this gentleman from the Department to state that they were paid for 19 trains between those two points.

Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator from West Virginia contend that any railroad company in this country ever carried a pound of mail without being paid for that pound of mail?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, sir; there were two instances of that kind given before the committee.

Mr. WHITE. It must be a mistake in the company's procedure.

Mr. FAULKNER. But the testimony of these Department officials was that not one dollar of compensation was paid for these trains carrying the mail in excess of the 19 trains. Now, whether that came in with the weighing of the mail on the 19 trains at the time it was weighed I do not know.

Mr. WHITE. The railroads have been paid for every pound they ever carried.

Mr. VILAS. We do not pay railroad companies according to the number of trains. We pay them according to the weight of mail they carry, and the weight of mail they carry is increased, doubtless, by the more trains they use; that is to say, there would be on a road where there is greater frequency of trains likelihood of larger business.

Mr. FAULKNER. But the point made by the officials was that this gave a greater facility for the transaction of business, and that they induced the companies to accept this mail and to put it into their baggage cars and to put a postal clerk on the baggage car for the purpose of distributing in the interests of the public, without any compensation whatever.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, there ought to be no mistake about this. Does the Senator from West Virginia mean to say that the mail bags on the cars which were carried outside of the postal cars were carried for nothing by the railroad?

Mr. FAULKNER. I understood the Department officials to state distinctly that this service rendered in excess of the 19 trains was absolutely without compensation.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator overlooks the fact that the railroads were paid by weight of mail so much.

Mr. FAULKNER. No.

Mr. CHANDLER. The weighing being at such times as the Postmaster-General prescribed. All that these officials who were testifying before the Senator from West Virginia meant was that in addition to carrying in the postal cars the road carried in their ordinary cars. But they were paid for the weight of mail in all the cars.

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course, that mail was weighed at a certain period, once in four years, and then by an arrangement with these companies, for the purpose of facilitating the transaction of the business and the carrying of the mails, the Department induced them to carry it upon separate trains. Of course, the weight of the mail at the time it was weighed between those two cities was paid for.

Mr. CHANDLER. It included transportation on all kinds of cars.

Mr. FAULKNER. But the facilities to be given by the contract with these companies were only on 19 trains, whereas they furnished these facilities to the public to the extent of 104 trains.

Mr. VILAS. The railroad companies are generous and liberal, but they generally get a quid pro quo in some form or other. One way in which special facilities are obtained from the roads is by giving them all the mail that would go in a certain direction, for example, except in one or two instances where they have wasted money, like one in this bill now, what is called the special-facilities appropriation. Fast routes have been secured by the agreement of the Department to mass on a line of road all the mail which would naturally go that way, instead of sending it by other roads, or which could as well be sent that way as by other roads. In that way fast-mail service was secured to Kansas City, gaining a day to points in the Southwest, by arrangement with the Pennsylvania Railroad, all the compensation they got being the regular compensation, but more money because they carried more mail, and for that they were very willing to give extra facilities, although the more mail they carried the less the rate per weight.

I am only pointing out these illustrations to show by facts and figures why it is that I think there is an unnecessary expenditure for railroad mail service.

I will show it in another way in just a word. In 1887, nine years before the present bill was reached, the estimates of the Department for inland transportation by railroad routes and the appropriation were the same—$17,000,000. Now it is $29,000,000 in the pending bill.

Mr. WHITE. How long ago?

Mr. VILAS. Nine years ago. The growth has been from $17,000,000 to $29,000,000—$12,000,000 in nine years. The growth in the mileage has been moderate. There has been in that time little or no increase in facilities. There has been a considerable increase in the mails, but nothing, in my opinion, to compare with that increase. You can see at once by some other general figures, which I can give in an instant——

Mr. ALLISON. Will I disturb the Senator if I call his attention to the fact that in the ten years there has been an increase of 50,000 miles of railroad, or nearly one-third in ten years?

Mr. VILAS. It may be that the increase has been as great as that in ten years. That would have naturally added, if it was a full third, between five and six million dollars.

Mr. WHITE. I will say to the Senator, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, that the increase of mileage does not mean an increase in the mail carried, because the mileage may have been in portions of the country where the amount of mail was not so great as in the great centers.

Mr. ALLISON. That is undoubtedly true. The increase of railway mileage was in the sparsely settled regions.

Mr. WHITE. Precisely.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, but the railroads all carry mails.

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. As in the case of the Great Northern, recently completed.

Mr. WHITE. The amount is insignificant, however, as compared with the great centers.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. VILAS. I think there is no question about it that the cost has been extended in accordance with existing law, but what I am doing is to arraign the operation and effect of existing law, and I suggest as an evidence the fact that that law has increased the mail-service expenditure for this item from $17,000,000 to $29,000,000 in nine years. We can not but know that there has been no such increase in the service as to require such an enormous increase of expenditure in nine years, and if you add sixteen hundred thousand dollars for the railway postal cars, it makes $30,600,000. The service has grown, but it has not grown at that rate.

Now, I do not wish to take more time. I was trying simply to show by some striking illustrations of this kind that there is foundation for the belief that if we had strong hands with sufficient power applied to the subject we could work a great saving to the Government. That is my proposition.

However, I notice in this testimony one statement which I do not wish to let pass without inviting the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to it. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General testifies——

Mr. WHITE. On what page?

Mr. VILAS. On page 14 Mr. Neilson says:

> We pay for a certain class of service. When we have postal cars we pay for the postal cars in the service, and when we do not have postal cars they furnish apartments or carry closed mails in baggage cars.
> Senator FAULKNER. How many services have you on that route?
> Mr. NEILSON. We have on that route 104 services, and of those we pay for 18 only.

That may relate only to the trains between New York and Philadelphia, but if it has any relation to the old disused practice of paying for parts of cars the committee ought to see to it that the practice is discontinued, for there is no law for it, and it was cut off entirely many years ago. If there are payments being made for parts of cars, they are illegal payments.

Now, just a few words with reference to the other branch of the subject. The one which I have spoken to is the only one that the Committee on Appropriations deals with; but the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had a still larger subject to deal with. They had to deal with the other branch of the question, the consideration of what is a fair rate of taxation to impose on the beneficiaries of the postal service by way of special assessment for the benefits received. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads assert that the rate of taxation is now grossly disproportioned, and I purpose to call attention to one or two facts on that subject in this report.

The total receipts for the last year of the postal service were eighty-two and a half million dollars in round numbers. Of that, seventy-eight and a half million, or all but $4,000,000, in round numbers was from postage stamps, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, etc.

Of the $79,000,000 in round numbers of stamps issued—not quite as much receipts, but generally they correspond year by year—$58,221,000 were for letter stamps, and of these forty-three and a half million dollars were from 2-cent stamps; postage-due stamps, $450,000; ordinary stamped envelopes, about $12,300,000, and postal cards, $5,300,000. Of stamps, stamped envelopes, and postage due, that is, simply letter mail, the total receipts are about $71,000,000; $71,000,000 out of $79,000,000. Postal cards make up $5,300,000 of the rest. And what does second-class matter pay? Two million eight hundred and nineteen thousand one hundred and seventy-seven dollars, about one-thirtieth of the revenues. But second-class matter imposes not less than 40 per cent, in my opinion, of the cost of the service.

The entire weight of second-class matter carried is given in the Third Assistant Postmaster-General's report at 349,000,000 pounds in round numbers. But you must go further in order to understand its share of service. It is not only that it loads down our trains, but it loads down our carriers, and it is not too much to say that it doubles the work in the post-offices, for this second-class matter has to be handled, and in every other town except the town where it is issued carriers have to distribute it in their mails. Substantially so, though there is a qualification I will not stop to enter into now.

Then of the twelve or thirteen millions for free-delivery system, of the seventeen or eighteen millions for post-office service, there is a large proportion to be charged to this class of matter in addition to its share of the $33,000,000 for railway transportation, and for the five or six million dollars for star-route transportation. It is a moderate estimate, in my judgment, that 40 per cent of the cost of the service is due to second-class matter, which pays about one-thirtieth of the receipts.

Now, what there is to be said about that is this, in a word: We are putting upon men who send letters an enormous and excessive overcharge of taxation. We are making them pay for the service vastly out of proportion to the benefits which they enjoy. Therefore the amendment which the distinguished Senator, the active and able and energetic chairman of the Post-Office Committee during the present session of Congress proposed, extends to a consideration of the greater loss to this service from the failure to properly assess its taxation, and that is laid down by the Postmaster-General in the last report as the great and overwhelming grievance of the postal service to-day. That is what the Loud bill aimed at.

Now, Mr. President, we undertook one special thing. We undertook to carry news matter cheaply. That is the theory of second-class matter. That is right. We can afford perhaps to tax the people to distribute news matter; but under the name of news matter we have become the carriers of pretty much the literary publications of the day in the form of great periodicals, in the form of republications of the literature of Europe and of this country, and in the form of the massive, terrible, and oppressive Sunday newspapers.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. VILAS. For a question only, for I have occupied the attention of the Senate so much longer than I meant to do, I feel as though I were a trespasser.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator having been Postmaster-General, I wanted to ask him if he could give the Senate any information as to the proportion between the second-class matter that is in the shape of reprints and books and the second-class matter that makes the big newspapers and the Sunday edition of the dailies? You complain of the immense amount of second-class matter, but if there is any information that can be obtained it is the information we need now as to the proportion of these two kinds of matter.

Mr. VILAS. I have not given attention to any figures for a good many years on the subject as to what is purely news matter and what is literature rather than news in the second-class matter. I am not able to state from any examination recently made, nor do I remember the examinations which were made at the time when I was more nearly connected with the service sufficiently to authorize me in making any affirmation on the subject. It is not difficult to ascertain. I could direct an inquiry that would ascertain it in thirty days with hardly any expense at all. Simply have the postmasters at the several post-offices where that matter comes in make examination for a certain length of time, from which you can arrive at an almost certain proportion for the service.

Mr. BUTLER. I would not have interrupted with what is not pertinent exactly to this question, but he was making a point in favor of the Loud bill, which is not under discussion.

Mr. VILAS. I must decline to discuss with the Senator from North Carolina what is foreign to the point I am now making to the Senate. I am calling attention to the fact only that this alleged abuse, whether it be abuse or not, having been submitted to the consideration of the Post-Office Committee, they thought (and I most heartily coincide with that judgment) that the investigation into the evils of the service and the reforms that are due to it should not omit that colossal error, calling it by the least offensive name, in the distribution of the taxation which maintains the service.

I wish to add that for that reason we have insisted upon a commission being created which should inquire into those evils. The commission proposed by the Committee on Appropriations is limited simply to an inquiry into the mail service. The commission is to make full inquiry into and examine the subject of mail transportation and the cost of it. It takes a page and more to state that full proposal which the Senator from New Hampshire comprised in a very few words:

That the questions concerning the correction of alleged abuses in the postal service in connection with second-class mail matter, the extension of free delivery to rural regions, the reduction of the cost of the railroad transportation of the mails, the adoption of 1-cent postage for single letters, and other like questions.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VILAS. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. How can a committee ascertain the character of second-class matter which is loading the mails unless the postmaster will arrange to keep separate accounts as to the great dailies, the Sunday editions, and as to the books? He need only make three or four divisions. Could any committee ascertain about it unless the accounts are kept so that they can see where the abuse is?

Mr. VILAS. Of course that account must be kept, but it is the commonest thing in the world to order, for a period of thirty days, inquiries of that kind in the post-offices where you want to ascertain certain facts. I have had occasion to do it a great many times. It is one of the peculiar advantages of the proposal of the Senator from New Hampshire to have the Postmaster-General at work with the commission, so that such inquiries as can be made by a proper use of the postal service may be made without extra cost or charge. All that is easy enough to do if you use your machinery properly.

Mr. STEWART. I can give him a list of inquiries to make in half an hour which would classify it so that we could see where the trouble is.

Mr. VILAS. Undoubtedly the committee will avail themselves of the abilities of the distinguished Senator from Nevada with the greatest pleasure.

Mr. STEWART. But we want the ability of the Postmaster-General. He reports that there are abuses here in the gross and is not able to give anything but the aggregate weight of second-class matter, and gives no information. All he could tell me was the aggregate weight of the weeklies that went free in the county—the local papers. He gave me the aggregate weight, and that is the only division he had. He had no division whatever between the books and between the large papers and small ones. Then, in the report here of Mr. LOUD, without any division about it, he says all the trouble comes from a certain portion of this matter, without knowing the fact that it comes from the literature that goes through. What I complain of is that this thing does not need any investigation except to give us the fact, which can be got by bookkeeping.

Mr. VILAS. This commission, when it shall have been appointed, will see to that, I presume, and will inform the Senator from Nevada in all those particulars in respect to which his mind is now groping in darkness.

Mr. STEWART. I shall have no hope of that if the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire prevails, and from the report I have already here before me of the gentlemen who are likely to act with him on the other side, I do not know that I should have any hope.

Mr. VILAS. I hope the Senator will not charge up too much to me in the way of time, for I feel a little guilty now. I have pointed out, sir, just the difference between these two so far as the subjects are concerned. There is a difference in the way in which the committees are appointed. It is said by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, somewhat caustically, that he knows what the commission will be; that it will be made up from the Committee on Appropriations if the proposal of the Committee on Appropriations is adopted.

We ought to be able to determine in a very few moments how we will make up the commission. The great difficulty is, What shall be the subjects of it? The especial advantage in my opinion of the proposal of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is that it is comprehensive of the subjects which require examination.

Now, one other remark that I wish to make with reference to the very interesting observations so eloquently made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] this evening. He inveighed against the great expenditures and increase of expenditures. Well may he do so. The burdens imposed upon the people of this country are tremendous, and I think one of the occasions of the suffering they have endured in the last three or four years has been the heavy burden charged upon them for public expenditures. But with reference to this particular subject, that should make no difference, for the Post-Office budget ought to be equivalent on each side of the ledger.

Our expenditures should be as moderate as they could be to obtain the best service, but every dollar of those expenditures should be raised out of the beneficiaries of the service by a just special assessment. In that case the general burden upon the people would be increased in no measure whatever by the figures of the Post-Office Department. However, the Senator from Maryland is quite justified, because we are paying $8,000,000 a year of deficiencies, charging it over to the general public in addition to the very heavy disproportion of special assessment imposed upon those who indulge in correspondence.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator did not understand me to take any other position than the one he occupies?

Mr. VILAS. I am quite sure not, but I wanted simply to point out the fact that the argument which the Senator from Maryland made will be addressed with still greater force against some other bills in particulars where every dollar that is saved is a dollar relieved from the weight of taxation upon the public at large.

Mr. GORMAN. All I desired was to relieve the public generally from this tax of $8,000,000.

Mr. VILAS. In that particular case there is one stroke, of course, that ought to be laid for the benefit of the public.

Mr. President, I feel that I have already trespassed too long upon the attention of the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON (at 10 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.). I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BUTLER. I wanted to make some remarks on the pending amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand. I want the Senator to yield to me for only a moment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that one hour from this time we may vote upon the pending amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. I object.

Mr. WHITE. I ask if the request be made in that form that the five-minute rule be annexed to it.

Mr. ALLISON. After one hour?

Mr. WHITE. No; from this time on.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will make another suggestion. It is that after the Senator from North Carolina shall have concluded, the five-minute rule shall apply to this amendment, and that in one hour and a half from now we shall take a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CHANDLER. This whole controversy arises from the determination of the Committee on Appropriations to carry through this particular method of theirs of investigating this subject. It is nothing that comes from the House of Representatives. It is an invention of that committee, and it ought to go out of the bill. If the proposition made by the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is not agreed to, if their recommendation is not taken, there ought not to be any agreement; and I object to any agreement in connection with this bill, and I shall continue to do so.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator object to any agreement?

Mr. CHANDLER. To any agreement whatever as long as this amendment stays in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to desire to test the sense of the Senate whether the amendment shall go out? If so, it can be laid on the table, if that is the wish of a majority of the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. Of course.

Mr. ALLISON. Having made an effort to secure within a reasonable time a disposition of this amendment, when the Senate can vote it up or vote it down, or lay the whole subject on the table, if no arrangement can be made, of course I have no further suggestion to make.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, we have just had an illustration of one of the greatest troubles, if not evils, which now beset the work of this Senate. The Committee on Appropriations is attempting to usurp the rights and functions of all other committees. Here is a committee, a committee specially appointed to deal with a special matter, the matter relating to the postal system of the Government; a committee which, if not selected specially with a view to their fitness, certainly has had put upon them certain specific and special duties which makes them more familiar with postal affairs than they otherwise would be. Now, this committee is entirely ignored by the autocrats of the Senate. I hope it is not offensive when I refer to the Committee on Appropriations as the autocrats of the Senate. If it is offensive, then I regret to say that it is true, as we have had it demonstrated here in the present case.

What is the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads appointed for? Simply to confirm postmasters or reject them? Why have this farce of appointing a committee on this great and important Department of the Government, selecting men, and having them term after term give their special attention to postal matters, if their work and their deliberations and their recommendations are to be swept away with a pop of the finger by a committee that was not appointed to consider and recommend to the Senate legislation on these matters? Why not abolish, then, all committees except the Committee on Appropriations? I am sure that I do not care to serve on a committee which is simply a farce.

Mr. President, the policy of the Committee on Appropriations is bringing the hour near when the Senate will not submit longer to such methods in legislation. The self-respect of every Senator here, no matter how much he may regard the members of the Committee on Appropriations for their personal character, their great learning and experience, will force him to vote to distribute the appropriation bills and these important matters of legislation to committees specially appointed to consider them. The House has already done this, and the change works admirably. Such a change in the Senate would add to the speed and thoroughness of the work of this body.

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has been lectured this afternoon and told that it was incompetent, or at least inefficient, and that has been given as a reason why the Appropriations Committee have usurped or taken unto themselves the entire jurisdiction of this matter, without heeding the recommendation of those who have considered the matter for many days and weeks and months. We were lectured this evening, and told that we had had plenty of time and had done nothing and made no recommendations, and the inference was that the Committee on Appropriations considered us incompetent, and therefore took charge of the matter. There are two reports from the Post-Office Committee asking for action. The Committee on Appropriations charge that the majority report did not ask for action. Here is the minority report, which asks for action. It offers matters of legislation, and it offers a reform which I claim, and the claim is sustained by facts and argument in this report, will remedy the evil. I ask the Secretary to read the substitute which I submit in the minority report for the Loud bill, covering this very matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. BUTLER to the bill (H. R. 4566) to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter, viz: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That, it being the policy of the United States to carry the mails in the railway mail service in cars belonging to the Government and pay to the railroad companies mileage rates for hauling the same, the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to advertise for six months for sealed proposals to furnish to the Government first-class mail cars of the best and most substantial structure, sufficient in numbers to perform the railway mail service of the United States. At the end of such advertisement, the Postmaster-General shall open such bids and award to the lowest responsible bidder or bidders a contract for such cars, to be delivered to the Government within six months thereafter. And upon the purchase and delivery of such cars the United States mails shall be carried in said cars, and shall be hauled over the railway lines of the United States under contract with the Postmaster-General: Provided, That the charge therefor shall not be greater than is paid by express companies and other parties for similar service.

"SEC. 2. That every railroad contracting with the Government to haul its mail cars shall examine and approve the Government's cars as safe and in good condition, and the said company shall be required in the same contract to keep such cars in repair and treat them in all respects as the first-class cars of the said railroad companies shall be treated on its lines, and to be allowed a reasonable compensation therefor, to be fixed in the contract; and any damage which said cars, the persons connected therewith, or the mail matter contained therein may sustain shall be at the risk of the railroad company, for which the Government shall not be responsible. Neither shall the Government be liable for any damage to other cars in the train or to passengers or freight thereon by reason of any defect in the mail car of the United States in such train; and all of these conditions shall be made a part of the contract.

"SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Postmaster-General to cause separate accounts to be kept in his Department which shall show the following facts: First, the comparative cost per pound of handling first-class matter, constituting what is known as letter mail, and the second-class matter; second, the difference in the weight of the ordinary week-day editions of the daily newspapers and the aggregate weight of Sunday editions of such newspapers during the ensuing fiscal year; third, the weight of books, pamphlets, and periodicals, other than newspapers, that now pass through the mails at second-class rates.

"And the Postmaster-General shall investigate and report any other matters of reform upon which legislation is needed to decrease the expenses of the Department, without in any way limiting the mail facilities which are now furnished by the Government."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, there is a specific proposition for legislation, one carefully drawn, and the report sustains it with the facts, figures, and evidence sufficient, it seems to me, to convince any fair-minded and reasonable man who wants the reforms stated; and everybody here says he wants them. Why does not the Committee on Appropriations accept that or tell us where and how that proposition will not bring the reforms which they desire?

The substitute for the Lond postal bill which has just been read will stop the deficit in the Post-Office Department. It will save enough in the transportation of railway mail to not only stop the deficit and retain all the privileges of second-class matter, but also to give us 1-cent letter postage.

I, as one of the members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, should be glad to have the suggestions and advice of the Committee on Appropriations about whatever we offer. If the proposition of the minority is not competent to cure the evil, I certainly should be glad to have the suggestions and reasons of that committee as to why it will not. But, no; we hear nothing from them as to why those provisions will not correct the evils. They simply propose to take the whole matter from the hands of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, create a commission of their own, and the Post-Office Committee can run around and ask them twice a week what they are doing; the Post-Office Committee must sit down and hold its hands to hear from the Appropriations Committee as to when we shall consider other matters of reform, or as to whether we shall consider them at all.

Here is a distinct proposition from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which provides for the Government buying the postal cars necessary for the Railway Mail Service, and then for paying the railroads mileage rates to haul these cars not more than the express companies now pay for a like service. The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], who has been Postmaster-General, and who is a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, stated to-night in his speech that the postal cars could be bought and equipped for $1,800,000. The minority report of the committee also sets out these same facts and many others, which it seems that the Appropriations Committee is not familiar with. The bill which the Committee on Appropriations has reported, and which we are now considering, appropriates just twice that amount for the rent of those cars for one year. It seems to me that the advice of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads had better be listened to in that respect, if the interests of the Government are to be subserved, if economy is to be the watchword. If the Committee on Appropriations are to guard the Treasury, if they are to scrutinize and limit appropriations to the necessities and means of the Government, and no more, then why will they insist on appropriating just twice as much money for the rent of the cars as all the postal cars equipped for service would cost?

Mr. STEWART. In less than one year.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; in less than one year. Those cars will last twenty years, and yet this bill appropriates exactly twice as much for rent in one year as it would cost to buy the cars and equip them, and then have them for twenty years as the property of the Government. If we are to rent these cars, then certainly we should not pay more for their use in one year than they are worth. It is absurd; it is monstrous.

This amendment provides that the Postmaster-General shall advertise for sealed proposals to furnish those cars. It provides then that the Government shall pay a fair and reasonable rate to the railroads for hauling those cars, provided it is not more than that paid by the express companies for a like service.

The Postmaster-General has the power under existing law to stop the deficit. The deficit is caused—

First. By paying the railroads more per ton for carrying the mails than is paid by anyone else for a like service. We are paying as much now per ton as we paid twenty years ago, yet during that time freight rates have been reduced 40 per cent. and passenger rates have been reduced over 18 per cent. Everything has been reduced but the price the Government pays the railroads for carrying the mails. The Postmaster-General has the power to lessen these rates under existing law, but he does not.

Second. By paying the railroads for more weight of mail than they carry. The Postmaster-General could stop this fraud under present law if he would.

Third. By paying for the rent of the postal cars each year twice as much as it would cost to buy the cars outright. The Postmaster-General can reduce this rent if he desires.

Now, the minority has offered a substitute for the Loud bill that will remedy these evils which the Postmaster-General has failed to remedy. If the Government owns its own cars, then there can be no padding of the mails during the weighing period. There will be no rent on cars to be paid. Then the substitute provides that the Government pay no more to the railroads for hauling its cars than express companies pay for a like service.

In addition, it provides for what this proposed commission, if appointed by either amendment, can not do; it provides for information which any commission would need, and which the committee to-day needs; it provides for having this second-class mail matter weighed separately; it provides for the big Sunday and holiday editions being weighed separately, and it provides for such information as would enable us or any other committee to intelligently point to the evils and to suggest the reforms necessary to cure them. That should be enacted if the other provision is not enacted.

Instead of recognizing and accepting this business proposition, the Committee on Appropriations, after reporting a bill appropriating $30,000,000 for the railroads to compensate them for hauling the cars, appropriates $3,600,000 for rent, twice what the cars are worth, and then turns and asks that they have a commission of their own to investigate this whole matter, and take it out of the hands of the Post-Office Committee. Then they lecture us because we have done nothing.

We have done something; we have done a great deal outside of the routine work of the committee. We have investigated this question of railway transportation of the mails as thoroughly as we can with the limited information that we have been able to get from the Postmaster-General.

This is a proposition coming from the Post-Office Committee; this is a proposition which has been fully matured; it is a proposition on which the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has gathered data and information and facts to sustain it. There is also a provision that the Postmaster-General himself shall be a commission by himself, and shall report any other matters of reform which will lessen the cost to the people and not reduce the efficiency of the mail service.

Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations has just threatened us that if we detained them much longer they would shut off discussion on this whole question, move to table the amendment, and proceed roughshod over the committee and the whole Senate. I submit that is quite a spectacle in a body like this, with each Senator representing in part a sovereign State; men holding views and opinions; men who are ready to sustain their views and opinions with facts which they have labored to obtain and dug up with much research, that a committee flooded with work, a committee which has not time to consider these matters, shall take charge of this subject which belongs to another committee, and a committee which has given more attention to it than any other committee could, and then quietly and cooly inform the Senate and all Senators on other committees that "We will shut you up and cut you off when we get ready." In fact the chairman of the Appropriations Committee was about to threaten us, I think, that he was about to make the motion to-night to table this recommendation, when he looked around and saw there was not a quorum. That is the method which is adopted in everything which is offered here which the Committee on Appropriations puts its veto upon.

Mr. President, I am supporting the report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads because I am a member of the committee. Our committee has not been unanimous; there is a majority and minority report; but I think what would be better than a commission, as proposed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads or as proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, would be for the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee to be allowed to offer its own remedial legislation or give instructions to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads—and I suggest to the Committee on Appropriations to give us those instructions, if they hold the key to the Senate, and lecture us again, if they see fit, for our incompetency—to consider this matter further, investigate it, and bring in later recommendations for legislation to cover it.

I submit that if the Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in the Senate and House of Representatives are not the best and the most competent men for this work, in view of the fact that they have been serving on those committees and giving their special attention to matters on this line, if they are not the persons who are most familiar with it, who can better investigate the matters that should be investigated than anyone else, then, certainly, the men on those two committees are very inferior men and will average lower than the members of any committee in the Senate or in the other House. How can you go outside and take citizens not members of this body, how can you find members of the Committee on Appropriations who are as familiar with these matters as the members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads? The committee has proceeded along this line. If the Senate wants the committee to do something it has not done, I submit that the Senate ought to instruct by resolution or by a paragraph in an appropriation bill the two committees of the Senate and House on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to investigate this whole matter further and report to Congress at a given time.

The Committee on Appropriations proposes to investigate simply the matter of railway rates. That is an important matter and should be investigated; but even if their commission is to be appointed their commission ought to investigate further than that; they ought to investigate the question as to whether or not the Government should own its postal cars and pay the railroads mileage rates for hauling them.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] this evening quoted as high authority the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. In his testimony, which I hold in my hand, he admitted that that was a separate and distinct feature for consideration, and he treated the matter of amounts paid to railroads for weights and the question of postal cars as two separate and distinct questions.

But I submit that any inquiry that that committee or commission would make would be imperfect, and would never go to the root of the trouble unless they would inquire into the matter of postal cars and report to the Senate the facts about the rent of cars of corporations and the use of cars owned by the Government. But even if their commission was to go that far, it would not cover all the matters that have been considered by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The whole matter covered by the majority and the minority report of the committee should be covered by any commission, if it is to be appointed.

I do not fear investigation on the question of second-class matter. I court it, and I court it whenever we can get from the Post-Office Department information that my substitute calls for, to show what part of that weight is due to the holiday and Sunday editions of some daily newspapers, and what part is due to books like Coin's Financial School and other books published in serial form, which go as second-class matter.

I submit, Mr. President, that if the proposition of the Government owning its postal cars and paying no more for hauling them than do the express companies be adopted, the proposition for 1-cent postage can be adopted without increasing the appropriations for the Post-Office Department. If it can be done, as I believe it can, then I shall be glad to see that proposition for 1-cent postage included in the investigation.

I shall be glad to see the fullest investigation of these questions. If the report of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads shall be adopted, and if the substitute which we offer to the proposition of the Appropriations Committee shall be adopted, then this whole matter will be investigated, and we can set at rest once and forever all of these statements about second-class mail matter bankrupting the Government; we can set at rest every charge which has been made to discredit the ability of the Post-Office Department to conduct the postal system in a cheap and effective manner, or to place the evil where it does not belong. Let the whole matter be uncovered, and let the Senate, with all the facts before it, then proceed to legislate.

This proposition coming from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, then, includes 1-cent postage; it includes the question of railroad rates; it includes the proposition for the Government to investigate whether or not it is best for it to own its postal cars, as do the express companies, the breweries, the Fish Commission, and every other big enterprise. It covers that. It covers the question of second-class matter, and it covers every question which has been agitated through the press in drawing attention to the Post-Office Department and its management at the present time.

Why limit it? If it shall be limited, then let the committee which is specially charged with this subject investigate it. Let the Committees on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the House and of the Senate do the investigating. I should prefer even that to our own report; but that is vastly preferable to what the Committee on Appropriations offer us. Certainly the proposition which is offered by this committee should be adopted, or the committee itself should investigate this matter, if any one investigates it.

I should think the Committee on Appropriations and all of its members would be glad to be relieved of this arduous work. Why is it that they attempt to draw under their capacious wing everything within the range of human inquiry and human action? Are they jealous of any rights or privileges or power that any other committee has, or do they think they can do it better than anybody else?

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me.

Mr. BUTLER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, it must be apparent to every Senator on this floor that it will be impossible to pass the appropriation bills within the short time left of the present session unless we make progress with them. I have seen enough in the course of this debate to convince me that it is the purpose of certain members of the Senate to prolong the debate upon the pending proposition.

The Committee on Appropriations, finding that no action had been taken upon the subject of railroad transportation, there being a difference in the Committee on Appropriations as to the method of dealing with this important subject, covering nearly $33,000,000, believed it was wise to make provision for a joint committee of the two Houses to make an investigation of the subject of railway transportation and its incidents, in order to have full information upon the subject by the time the next appropriation bill for the postal service should be required to be passed by Congress. Believing that the committee sought to make a provision which would secure investigation of the subject; believing, also, that it was an intricate one and requiring the aid of experts as to the true relation between the Government and these transportation companies, they made the best provision they could upon the subject at the present session of Congress.

The Committee on Appropriations, and no member of it, so far as I know, has had the slightest desire or expectation, I may say, of participating in the examination. We provided, as we thought, for an impartial examination of the subject, as to the two great political parties, the Vice-President representing one party and the Speaker of the House representing the other, so that by the natural coincidence of the situation there would be an impartial investigation; that it would be confined practically to the great question of railway transportation, without impinging in the slightest degree upon the prerogatives or the duties or the expectations of any other committee of the body.

We had no intention or purpose in any way of infringing upon the rights of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. We had seen no reports from that committee until our suggestion of recommendations had been completed, either as respects railway cars, railway transportation, second-class matter, 1-cent postage, or anything relating to that subject, although the Congress is about to expire. Therefore, with a motive that looked to the reduction of the expenditures of the Government, we sought to bring in here for the consideration of the Senate and for its vote and its action a method of making an impartial and thorough investigation of the subject in order that the next Congress might deal with it.

Now, I am satisfied that it is impossible for us to deal with the amendment without imperiling not only this great service as respects the appropriations for it, but also not only the pending bill but the sundry civil appropriation bill, which carries with it appropriations for all the great operations of our Government, the fortifications appropriation bill, the naval appropriation bill, the deficiency appropriation bill, and the District of Columbia appropriation bill, each and all of them for the carrying on of the affairs of our Government.

Believing that these bills are imperiled by the prolonged discussion (and I find no fault with any Senator who has participated in it, because under our rules it is the right of Senators to debate these questions as long as they desire to do so), in order to eliminate one serious question from our deliberations, I move to lay on the table the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, which will carry the amendment with it.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator withhold his motion for an instant? I wish to make a suggestion. If it is possible to obtain a vote upon the pending amendment without this motion, I hope it will be done. There is a great deal of complaint, which all of us have been subjected to, regarding railroad extortion, and if the Senate can agree upon a system of examination we ought to have it, and if we can have a vote upon the amendment of the committee it seems to me it ought to be taken. If not, I agree with the Senator that he should make the motion he has indicated.

Mr. ALLISON. I have been notified over and over again that this can not be done.

Mr. STEWART. Why not ask unanimous consent?

Mr. WHITE. Why not ask unanimous consent, and if it is refused I will concede that the Senator should make his motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the sense of the Senate is to be taken upon this question, there should be a full attendance in the first place; secondly, there should be full debate upon the question, which has not been had. If the Senator from Iowa will make his motion in good faith, as I know he does, I certainly will ask Senators who are ready to speak to refrain from speaking.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to lay on the table the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations. That carries any amendments that may be pending to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask now for the consideration of the next amendment which remains undisposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 24, after the word "service," it is proposed to insert:

In the discretion of the Postmaster-General, any unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, may be used for other fast-mail facilities.

So as to make the clause read:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $171,238.75: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service. In the discretion of the Postmaster-General, any unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, may be used for other fast-mail facilities.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to strike out the clause just read, from line 17, on page 8, down to line 8, on page 9, inclusive.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask now for the consideration of the next amendment which remains undisposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 24, after the word "service," it is proposed to insert:

In the discretion of the Postmaster-General, any unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, may be used for other fast-mail facilities.

In the discretion of the Postmaster-General, any unexpended balance of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, may be used for other fast-mail facilities.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to strike out the clause just read, from line 17, on page 8, down to line 3, on page 9, inclusive.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, this is a subsidy, pure and simple. It should be stricken from the bill. Subsidies are bad enough when the people get some benefits in return for them, but they are utterly indefensible when they are voted as a free gift. I challenge the Committee on Appropriations or any Senator on this floor to give a single good and sufficient reason for appropriating this sum of $171,238.75. No estimate has been made or submitted for it. No head of any Department has recommended it. But on the other hand the head of the Post-Office Department has positively refused to recommend it. I have heard the Postmaster-General and the Assistant Postmasters-General often quoted here in this discussion so far. I have here some reports, and I hope those who have asked us to listen to the suggestion of the Postmaster-General and the Second Assistant Postmaster-General and all the generalettes will now pay due heed to what the Postmaster-General says about this subsidy.

Mr. CULLOM. It has been read a dozen times.

Mr. BUTLER. It has been read a dozen times and twenty times, and yet it has not converted the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, it has.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator vote with me on my motion?

Mr. CULLOM. I always have voted in that way.

Mr. BUTLER. Good. The Senator from Illinois will vote with me on this motion, and he always voted against this subsidy. I am glad to have such valuable authority in addition to the Postmaster-General to back up my motion.

Several Senators around me say let us have a vote and we will knock out the section and carry my motion. If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will agree to the motion, I will not detain the Senate for another minute.

Several SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. STEWART. What is the motion?

Mr. BUTLER. I have made a motion to strike out the clause which proposes to vote a special subsidy to certain railroads in addition to the enormous price that we now pay these corporations for hauling the mails. Several Senators seem very anxious to have no discussion of this matter. I should judge that they favor the subsidy, for reasons best known to themselves, or else do not understand the facts in the case. In either event discussion is very necessary. I do not desire to detain the Senate at this late hour, but unless the committee will agree to the motion, or unless there is some indication that the Senate is ready to sustain the motion, I shall detain the Senate to put on record the reason why it should be stricken out.

Mr. FAULKNER. The committee can not agree to it.

Mr. DANIEL. It is a part of the bill as it comes from the other House.

Mr. WILSON. I want to hear from the generalettes the Senator was talking about.

Mr. GORDON. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina a question? If I understand his threat aright, it is that unless the Senate and the committee yield to his demand he will kill the bill by talking it to death.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very glad to see the Senator from Georgia. I am glad to welcome him back to the Senate. I regret that he got in just in time to misunderstand me, and to suppose that I was threatening him and the Southern Railroad.

Mr. GORDON. When the Senator says that unless the committee yields he intends to do so and so, I think I am entitled to the interpretation I put upon his remarks; and I ask him for information.

Mr. BUTLER. I will be glad to give the Senator information.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will proceed. He started out with a proposition to give us information about the Postmaster-General and the generalettes. Now, I want to hear from the generalettes, and I hope the Senator will proceed.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very glad to find the Senator from Washington in the humor to be informed; and it seems that there are others who need to be informed. I will proceed to give them information which will make it impossible for them to vote for this subsidy, unless it is their purpose to take this much of the people's taxes and give it to certain railroads as a gift.

This morning I spoke at some length, showing that the rates now paid the railroads for carrying the mails were unreasonably high. I showed that we are now paying as much per ton for carrying the mails as we paid twenty years ago, yet during this time freight rates have been reduced 40 per cent and passenger rates have been reduced over 18 per cent. Besides, I showed that twenty years ago we paid the railroads more for carrying the mails that anyone else then paid for a like service. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], and others also, spoke at some length on the same line. No Senator was able to controvert a single fact and proposition which we laid before the Senate. Besides, we showed that the Government not only pays too high a rate, but that we pay for more weight than is carried. The railroads pad the mails during the weighing season of one month, and then the Government pays on that weight for the next forty-seven months. The fraud and robbery by this method alone runs up into the millions of dollars.

In short, it has been demonstrated, proved, and not questioned by anyone that we are to-day paying an exorbitant rate, nearly twice as high as should be paid to carry the mail. We now pay about $32,000,000 to the railroads for this service. One man says it is $12,000,000 too much; another says it is $10,000,000 too much; another says it is $15,000,000 too much, but every Senator on the floor admits that it is too much.

Now, that is a fact which has been demonstrated here. Everybody admits that it is too high; that the contract price which we now pay to the railroad companies for carrying the mails is too high.

The Committee on Appropriations recognized it was too high by offering to investigate the exorbitant prices paid; the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads recognized it (see majority and minority reports from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads on the Loud bill); every Senator who has spoken recognized it. Yet this morning, when I offered an amendment to this appropriation bill providing that the Postmaster-General should not pay the railroads more for carrying the mails than express companies and others pay the railroads for a like service, what did the Senate do? You voted down the amendment and gave your sanction and approval to the gigantic steal that is now going on.

Mr. President, that is not all. In addition to the heavy appropriation in this bill to pay the railroads for hauling the mails, there is another item appropriating $3,600,000 to pay the railroads for the rent of the cars in which the mail is carried. I showed this morning that that was twice as much as all the postal cars were worth. There are not more than 500 postal cars in use. These cars cost only about from $3,500 to $4,000 each. Therefore the Government could buy every one of these cars for less than $2,000,000. These cars last about twenty years, yet this bill proposes to pay $3,600,000 rent for them in one year. At this rate, in twenty years the Government would pay $72,000,000 for the use of cars that it could buy and own for less than $2,000,000. This is the most reckless and astounding business proposition that I have ever heard. Yet, this morning, when I moved to amend this item by providing that the Postmaster-General should not pay more rent than 10 per cent of the cost of the cars, what did the Senate do? It voted the amendment down. How Senators can justify their votes to their consciences and to their duty to the taxpayers is beyond my comprehension. Here we vote away millions of the people's money into the pockets of the railroads without a single reason or excuse for so doing. No Senator has dared to try to give a single reason or excuse. It is shameful, it is robbery; but this is not all.

Mr. President, the pending bill proposes that in addition to the high prices we pay for hauling mail, in addition to the high prices we pay for car rent, we shall pay a special extra subsidy over and above the high price we pay per ton for carrying the mails and the high price we pay for rent of postal cars.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is in the discretion of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it? Now let me read you what the Postmaster-General says about that.

Mr. GALLINGER. But I read the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. But what does the Postmaster-General say about this provision?

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, it is in the discretion of the Postmaster-General—

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. BUTLER. That same argument has been used here every time this subsidy has been extended. Now, what does the Postmaster-General say in his last report, for 1896? He says:

Congress has appropriated each year during the last twenty years a specialty fund for a fast-mail service from New England and New York to Southern States, reaching as far south as New Orleans. The total amount for the current year is $196,614.22.

There has been a difference of opinion as to the necessity for making these appropriations, but—as each Congress has seen proper to follow the action of the former Congress, the Department, while not recommending the appropriation, has thought it advisable to apply the fund for the purpose indicated.

And to this I call the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire—

Mr. President, there never has been a Postmaster-General, as far as I know, who has advised and recommended that subsidy. There never has been even a postmaster-generalette who has recommended or advised it. The Postmasters-General have advised against it, but their advice is never taken by Congress, and for some reason each year it made the appropriations while the Department protested, and at last the Department stopped protesting, and now the Postmaster-General simply says, "I pay it out because we recommend you not to appropriate it, and you must want me to pay it out or you would not appropriate it. Therefore I suppose I am carrying out the direction of Congress."

Mr. President, let us see what some of the Postmasters-General have said about this. I will start with Postmaster-General Wanamaker, and I could read from this back for twenty years:

In my judgment, the ordinary compensation now allowed by law should secure from railroads hearty cooperation with the Department in the establishment of such schedules as will accomplish a maximum amount of good mail service, and whenever this is done the compensation is sure to be advanced, occasioned by the natural increase in the quantity of mails transported.

The railroads associated with all large cities and trade centers of the country have an interest, independent of the compensation allowed directly by the Government, in cooperating with the Post-Office Department in its efforts to expedite the distribution of newspapers to the outlying districts early in the morning, and in the quickening of commercial mails after the close of each day's business, and it ought to be possible, within a very few years, to dispense altogether with preferential allowances for special facilities, and still be within the power of the Department to maintain and further advance the high standard that has been reached by the Railway Mail Service train schedules that now prevail.

Now, I call special attention to this closing sentence. Postmaster-General Wanamaker says:

In dwelling so fully upon the subject of allowances for special facilities, I do not wish to be understood as criticising the occasion which first led to the granting of them.

That is the Postmaster-General's report for 1890.

This is from Postmaster-General Wanamaker's report for 1891. I ask the Secretary to read the two paragraphs beginning with "No recommendation."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

No recommendation has been made for the customary special-facility allowance for the next fiscal year, because I do not believe there exists occasion for perpetuating the preferential method whereby a limited number of railroads would be paid both ordinary and special transportation and full car compensation, while other railroads, performing precisely the same character of service, can be allowed nothing more than the compensation which we are by statute permitted to pay for ordinary transportation.

The continuance of the special-facility allowance has for some years past been the source of much annoyance to the Department, and has hampered the best interests of the mail service, because railroads operating in contiguous territory, and to some extent paralleling the roads which received the extra pay, object to rendering equally good or quicker schedule mail service except they be paid corresponding rates. They ask that all be treated alike. When the special-facility payments were first started, it was well understood that they were but temporary, so as to bridge over a period until the natural growth of the mails would yield sufficient compensation to do away with occasion for additional allowances. This was as far back as 1879, since which time the aggregate yearly compensation to the railroads drawing the special-facility allowances for ordinary mail and car transportation, independent of the special service has more than doubled, so that ordinary compensation, even after the reduction of this year, will be greatly in excess of ordinary and special compensation added together ten years ago; and as most of the special-facility routes will have their compensation readjusted, commencing with July 1, 1892, when their pay, it is estimated, will be increased still further, at least 20 per cent, this office has not felt satisfied in recommending the continuance, after June 30, 1892, of any portion of the present special-facility allowance.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the Postmaster-General not only refuses to recommend an appropriation, but he states that this special subsidy business is an annoyance and a hindrance to the Post-Office Department. He states it is unjust. He does not say that men come here and lobby Congress for the special subsidies, but he calls attention to how unjust Congress is to fix a rate and then to pick out certain lines of railroads and pay them a subsidy which is not necessary to improve the service, and which, he states, is not necessary to get the fast-mail facilities; that it is an annoyance to the Department in managing the postal system.

Mr. President, was there ever a case before, besides the special mail facilities, where Congress deliberately and persistently continued to appropriate large sums of money when the Department recommended against it? Who can give any good reason for it? Who has shown that the Department did not know what it was talking about? Who has ever answered the statements of the Postmaster-General and shown how this would help the fast-mail facilities when he says it will not, and is not needed?

Postmasters-General have said year after year that it was throwing the money away. They have repeatedly stated they had rather not have it; that it was an annoyance; that it was unfair; that it was discriminating, and that they could get all the fast-mail facilities they needed under the discretion given them by the statutory law that has been read to-day—section 4003 of the Revised Statutes.

I want to know why; what influence, what pressure, it is that puts through this subsidy year after year and no reason given for it. It does not add one hour, one minute, as the Postmaster-General states, to the mail facilities; it does not make the time quicker; it does not improve the service, and yet here we vote away this money as a free gift. I think it would be just as well to move that this money be appropriated direct to the Sound Money Club in New York. Why not do that? If we are going to throw it away, if we are going to give it to railroad corporations that contribute large amounts of money to the gold-trust campaign fund, let us send it direct to the Sound Money Club of New York—this William street performance, this William street reform club that has been flooding this country with gold literature and monopoly literature, while it was charging the silver men with disturbing business by talking for financial reform. Yet that stuff has been going out as regularly as clockwork, and this very railroad here asking a subsidy has been cheek by jowl with this concern, with the gold trust of New York, of London, in trying to fasten the single gold standard on the country, and still here the Senate adds to their campaign fund, makes them a free gift, and enables this one line, if necessary, to give $196,000 to the sound-money campaign fund without taking a dollar out of their treasury. I think we had better just appropriate it to the Sound Money Club of New York and be done with it.

Here is the Postmaster-General's report—Postmaster-General Bissell—for the year 1894. I will read part of it:

In submitting the estimates for the fiscal years of 1893, 1894, and 1895 this office declined to include the item of "special facilities," for reasons heretofore stated.

He got tired of stating them. He has stated them here twice. This time he simply calls attention to the fact that he has already stated them. Then what does he say under it? That the Department declines to recommend the appropriation. But that very year Congress voted it without one particle of evidence, with the Post-Office Department asking the Government not to waste the money.

Now, here we have a deficit of $8,000,000. We have been talking to-day about how to make both ends meet, and yet here is where the Postmaster-General shows you are throwing away that much money. Then why do we vote it?

Mr. President, here is the Postmaster-General's report for 1895. He says:

In submitting estimates for the fiscal year 1896-94, 1895-96, this office has declined to include the item of special mail facilities for the reasons heretofore stated.

He was tired of stating them. He stopped stating them. He simply calls attention to the fact that he has stated them, and stated them, and stated them. What does he say right under it?

No estimate is submitted by this Department for the next years for those facilities.

He does not even submit an estimate, because it is unnecessary; it is a waste of money; it is an annoyance to the Department. A former Postmaster-General's report stated that if ever there was any necessity for this appropriation in the beginning, it was like having a protective tariff for infant industries; but after they were grown and able to stand on their feet, he did not think they needed what infant industries needed, and therefore he declined to recommend it.

I can understand how some Senators who live along the line of these railroads may have been made to feel by arguments presented to them by persons whom they know connected with the railroads that this would be a great accommodation to them and would help them in many ways. I can understand how they could be made to feel kindly toward the roads, helping it as a business proposition, probably. No doubt a great many Senators have voted for this without ever reading the Postmaster-General's report. No doubt their only information was what was stated to them by persons who were their friends, and who were the presidents of these roads or connected with them. A man naturally would feel kindly to a road running through his State and would be willing to help the road if he thought he could add some facilities to the people living in the State. This line runs through North Carolina. If the Postmaster-General was to say that this appropriation was necessary, or if there were data and facts offered to show it was necessary to improve the mail facilities of my State and the States below it and above it, then I should be one of the first to vote for it, if I was convinced it was necessary. But the facts are all to the contrary.

Mr. President, these railroad corporations stepped in the last campaign over the dead line that business corporations, that public corporations, should not dare to step over in a free country. These railway corporations, owning great public franchises, these railway corporations exercising great public functions that touch the welfare of every business as well as almost every individual in the country, instead of keeping themselves within the lines of their business as business corporations, performing a public service and receiving the protection of the law—what did they do? They entered the last campaign as a ward politician or heeler would enter it for his man. They have grown great and powerful, rich and fat, off of the substance of the land. Our people have felt so kindly toward the railroads, every State has felt so kindly toward them, we have been so anxious to extend them, to broaden their lines, to have them ramify every section of our country, that we have granted almost any and every thing that they have asked. We have granted them charters with unusual and startling privileges, we have voted them subsidies, bonds, help, protection, as no other corporation or individual in America has been favored. Under these highly favored conditions they have grown so powerful, so rich, that they felt that they were almost independent of the people in the last campaign. They defied the public and entered into a political campaign as a partisan enters into it for his candidate. They contributed in that campaign large sums of money that they had gathered from the people. They contributed it on the side that some in this Chamber favored and some opposed. They stepped over the line.

And now, Mr. President, I want to say that if they have made enough money that they feel they can throw it into a political campaign to shape the results, and if they are enough interested in the result of a political campaign to spend millions of money, then I submit that it is getting time for Congress and the people's representatives to deal with them on strictly business principles. I submit that the time has come to stop granting favors for the asking, to stop voting subsidies by the thousands and millions, but to deal with them as one business man deals with another.

The cry that these corporations raised in the last campaign was that they were interested in the laboring man; that if a free-coinage bill should be passed their employees would have their salaries reduced, and that they would have to dismiss a part of their employees. They pleaded eloquently through their circulars which they distributed and handed out with each man's pay. How many men here saw them? Every railway employee had his little gold circular stuck into his hand when he drew his pay, and he was told that it was to the interest of that employee and the company for him to vote against free silver. Mr. President, they hid their motives and purposes behind the laboring man.

Now, I took them at their word. I wanted to see what their record had been toward their employees, and I have here a little statement that is condensed from the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It contains the total number of railway employees on June 30 in each year from 1890 to 1895, inclusive. I shall ask to have the table printed in the RECORD, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in 1893 there were employed on the railroads of this country 873,602 men. In the year 1895 that number had been reduced to 785,034.

The total number of all railway employees on June 30 in each year, 1890 to 1895, inclusive, was—

1892	821,415	1895	785,034

What does the next table show? It shows that the railway mileage track had been increasing while they were decreasing their employees.

The next table shows the single-track mileage operated each year from 1890 to 1895. How much track did they have in 1890? One hundred and sixty-three thousand five hundred and ninety-seven miles. How much did they have in 1895? One hundred and eighty thousand six hundred and fifty-seven miles. They increased their mileage 17,160 miles, and reduced the number of their employees 88,568.

The single-track mileage operated at each corresponding period was—

1890	163,597	1893	176,461
1892	171,563	1895	180,657

The number of employees per 100 miles of line for these years the next table shows, ending June 30, respectively, and is stated as follows in that report. I have this table from 1890 to 1895, which I will publish in the RECORD.

The number of employees per 100 miles of line for these years, ending June 30, respectively, is officially stated to be as follows:

1892	506	1895	441

Thus it will be seen that in 1893 they had 515 men employed on every hundred miles of railroad. In 1895 they had reduced that number to 441 on each hundred miles.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator from North Carolina permit me to ask him a single question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. Why did they do it?

Mr. BUTLER. They did it to increase their own profits, without any regard to the rights of their employees or the interests of the public. One thing is certain, their action illustrates one of the beauties of the gold standard. We certainly had the gold standard, and bonds were being issued constantly. They said if we had free silver they would have to reduce the number of their employees and reduce their salaries. This table shows that they reduced the number of employees and reduced their salaries, while the number of miles of railroad operated was increasing all the time. Not only that, but another table which I will soon present shows that they increased the salaries of their officers while they decreased the salaries of their employees. They did this under the gold standard; and yet they were trying to make the people believe that they would have to do that very thing if the country adopted a free-silver law. They were trying to fool the country. The policy of the railroads under the gold standard is to do just what they are now doing, and have been doing; yet they charge that they would have to do it under free silver.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, may I be allowed to remark that I suppose the railroads hired all the employees they needed, and if they reduced the number it was because they could not make money enough to pay them? I suppose that was the reason.

Mr. BUTLER. Then why did they increase the salaries of their big officials, who were already getting from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars a year?

Mr. PALMER. I do not know that that is true.

Mr. BUTLER. It is true, and I will give the Senator the facts and tell him where I get them before I get through. I have them all here.

Mr. PALMER. That they did it is possible. I do not know why they did it.

Mr. BUTLER. The salaries of the men who were getting $50,000 a year had to be increased in hard times, and the wages of the men getting but $1.50 a day had to be reduced to $1.25.

Mr. PALMER. Why was that?

Mr. BUTLER. Because we have turned over a great public function, which is a monopoly, into the hands of private individuals and allowed them to run it according to their own greed, their own desires, and in the interests of their own pocket.

Mr. PALMER. That is no answer.

Mr. BUTLER. It is an answer, and one that they would like to dodge, but it is a true answer.

Mr. PALMER. I do not think so.

Mr. BUTLER. They run those great public functions for their own profit and for their own emolument, and not with regard, as they ought to do, to the public interest.

Mr. PALMER. Does not the Senator from North Carolina manage his own business in the same way?

Mr. BUTLER. If my business were one which concerned every citizen in America; if it were one that was important to life, liberty, and property, and the welfare of the nation; if my business were the operation of a great public function, its management should not be allowed to be dictated by my own greed and selfishness and self-interest.

Mr. PALMER. But would the Senator do it?

Mr. BUTLER. I expect that any poor, weak human nature that is clothed with the management of a great public function and is allowed to run it simply by the dictates of his own greed and self-interest would do the same thing.

Mr. PALMER. I expect so.

Mr. BUTLER. I expect so; but you must remember that the Bible tells us not only to avoid evil, but to avoid the appearance of evil. It is your fault and mine if we nurture and encourage and support a system which gives greed and self-interest a chance to oppress humanity, a chance to paralyze industry, a chance to build up one industry and tear down another. Are you and I doing our duty as good citizens when we allow this power to be put into the hands of men and to stay there unrestrained, which can close up every oil refinery in the country but one, and make an absolute monopoly out of the Standard Oil Company? That company would never be a monopoly without railway collusion. The responsibility for this rests upon the representatives of the people.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a question of order. I certainly hope the distinguished Senator from North Carolina will avoid the appearance of evil by not threatening the distinguished Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PALMER. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Washington, but, inasmuch as I have not complained, I do not know why the Senator should interfere.

Mr. WILSON. Well, Mr. President, I certainly am aware that the distinguished Senator from Illinois, who has for many years protected himself, will be able now to protect himself from the very vigorous assaults of the distinguished Senator from North Carolina who seems to have taken unto himself all the business of the United States.

Mr. BUTLER. I regret that the Senator from Washington feels the neglect that he has not been given any attention in this discussion, but I must tell him that the distinguished Senator from Illinois illustrates my point and suggestion and typifies the question under discussion better than the Senator from Washington now does, or probably will be able to do when his hairs are equally as gray as those of the Senator from Illinois. Therefore I beg to submit that I may be allowed to continue for the present to address my remarks to the Senator from Illinois so long as it is his pleasure.

Mr. WILSON. I shall not further interrupt the distinguished Senator, Mr. President, but I regret he has made any reference to my gray hairs. [Laughter.]

Mr. PALMER. No; I do not think he has. I think he refers rather to the baldness of the Senator. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON. He ought to have done so, but he did not; he knows so much upon every question, but he is as much mistaken in regard to my gray hairs as he is upon some of the questions he is discussing. I, unfortunately, have not any gray hairs; I wish I had. I was only trying to ascertain, if I could—because I rose in the first instance and requested to hear from the Senator from North Carolina—the reasons for his motion to strike out this amendment. I do not know what the Standard Oil Company has to do with it or anything of that sort. Let us reach a vote.

Mr. PALMER. The Senator need not be eager to come to the assistance of the Senator from North Carolina. I do not think he needs, and I certainly do not need, the help of the Senator from Washington. I do not ask his assistance, and unless the Senator from North Carolina has violated some rule of order of the Senate, I insist that there is no occasion for interference.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, of course I accept with all due grace the lecture of the Senator from Illinois. I can make no reply to the learned Senator, but the proceeding was so dramatic and the Senator from North Carolina was so dignified, not to say threatening, that I thought possibly the Senator from Illinois might pardon, even in a youth, some slight interference in his behalf.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator is entirely pardoned if he will simply not offend again in the days of his youth.

Mr. President, I was answering a very pertinent question propounded by the Senator from Illinois, and explaining to him why probably any man placed as the managers of great railway corporations are placed would do as they do; certainly the average man, or the majority of men, would do so; and I expect the Senator and I would do just as they do; but that would not excuse those who allowed us to do it or made it possible for us to do it.

The question is not whether we would do that, but the question is whether it is public policy for us to be allowed to do it. The question is whether or not the Government, this Senate and this Congress, should take cognizance of such conduct in men holding important franchises and managing great public functions and instruments of commerce.

The railroads entered into the last campaign, as I have stated, and did so under false pretenses. They became partisans for the single gold standard; they contributed to the campaign fund; and they not only contributed, but they tried to make their employees, whether they wanted to do so or not, vote that way—a certain kind of coercion. They abused the tremendous power that the people, in their friendly feeling toward railroads, had put in their hands, and used it to try to thwart the will of the American people on one of the most vital issues in government. I was calling attention to their conduct, and I was showing that every argument they used in the last campaign as to what those men would have to do under free silver, they had already done under the gold standard.

To proceed, these tables show an increase in mileage each year and a yearly greater number of men dismissed. More than one-tenth of the total number of men employed on the railways of the country were dismissed, while the railway mileage was increasing and the pay of the big-salaried officers was increasing. In 1895, this number of men deprived of railway employment in 1894, was only decreased by 5,426, leaving 88,568 persons, or more than one-tenth of those having work on railways in 1893, unable to return to their customary labor. Again, while from 1890 to 1893 the number employed per 100 miles of road increased from 479 to 515, it dwindled to 444 in 1894 and 441 in 1895, less than in 1890, notwithstanding the railway mileage had increased more than 17,000 miles. The notable decrease, however, is that between 1893 and 1894, when the 93,994 persons were thrown out of work, and the number of men hired per 100 miles of line diminished from 515 to 444.

The foregoing figures and those hereinafter used as the basis of calculations are taken from the report on Statistics of Railways in the Unites States for the year ending June 30, 1895, lately published by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This report gives the number of persons employed for the years above mentioned in the various branches of railway service, and the average daily rate of pay to such persons throughout the United States. In 1893 considerably increased wages were paid to different classes of these employees, and there were slight increases to some subordinate classes in 1895 over 1894, but this was offset by a number of decreases also made in that year to other than those receiving the highest grades of pay. The significant shrinkage of wages took place in 1894 along with the great reduction in number employed, above noted, and from the latest figures obtainable there does not appear to have been any material increase since in rate of pay to the great mass of railway labor or in the number of persons employed. A comparison, therefore, of the figures for 1893 and 1894 will not only show such shrinkage during a single year, but will approximately indicate the situation at a recent period as compared with that which existed in 1893.

I have here a table, which I have carefully prepared, showing the number employed in each class and the average daily compensation in dollars for the years ending June 30, 1894 and 1893. Without taking the time of the Senate to read it, I shall insert the table in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

Number employed in each class, and average daily compensation in dollars, for years ending June 30, 1894 and 1893.

Class.	1894.	1893.
General officers	5,257	6,610
Other officers	1,778
General office clerks	24,779	27,584
Station agents	28,199	28,019
Other station men	71,150	75,181
Enginemen	35,466	38,781
Firemen	36,327	40,359
Conductors	24,823	27,537
Other trainmen	63,417	72,959
Machinists	29,245	30,869
Carpenters	36,328	41,878
Other shopmen	84,359	93,709
Section foremen	29,680	29,699
Other trackmen	150,711	180,154
Switchmen, flagmen, and watchmen	43,219	46,048
Telegraph operators and dispatchers	22,145	22,619
Employees—account floating equipment	7,469	6,146
All other employees and laborers	85,276	105,166
Unclassified		284
Total	779,608	873,802

I have here another table, showing the pay that these various classes received each year, which I shall also insert in my remarks.

The table is as follows:

Class.	1894.	1893.
General officers	$9.71	$7.84
Other officers	5.75
General office clerks	2.34	2.23
Station agents	1.75	1.83
Other station men	1.63	1.65
Enginemen	3.61	3.66
Firemen	2.03	2.04
Conductors	3.04	3.08
Other trainmen	1.89	1.91
Machinists	2.21	2.33
Carpenters	2.02	2.11
Other shopmen	1.69	1.75
Section foremen	1.71	1.75
Other trackmen	1.18	1.22
Switchmen, flagmen, and watchmen	1.75	1.80
Telegraph operators and dispatchers	1.93	1.97
Employees—account floating equipment	1.97	1.96
All other employees and laborers	1.65	1.70

These tables enable us to determine from what classes men were discharged in the year ending June 30, 1894, whether the number of employees in any class was increased, what classes of employees had their wages decreased or increased during that year, and the extent of increases or reductions in force and pay in each class. It is observed that in 1893 "general officers" and "other officers" are apparently reported together, the total number being 6,610, with an average daily pay for both of $7.84, while in 1894 these two classes are reported separately. From the number given for each class of officers in 1894, and the average daily pay of each, also given, it appears that the average pay of "general officers" and "other officers" together was $8.70 per day in 1894 as compared with $7.84 in 1893, representing an average increase in officers' daily pay of 86 cents.

There is also to be noted an increase of 11 cents per day in the pay of "general office clerks," though the number in this class was reduced by 2,805. The number of station agents was slightly increased, but their pay was decreased. They reduced every class but the general officers. These are the only ones beside the general officers who were not reduced in pay. They increased their pay 11 cents, but reduced the number over 2,000. All other classes suffered a decrease, both in number and in pay in that year, except "employees—account of floating equipment," who, increasing to 7,469, obtained an advance of 1 cent per day. The increases in disbursements for "general officers" and "other officers" and "employees—account of floating equipment" amounted, on the basis of number employed and average rates of pay stated, to a total of $12,114.34 per day, or $4,421,734.10 for the year of three hundred and sixty-five days. Although "general office clerks" had their compensation raised 11 cents, the decrease in the force stated operated to diminish the total compensation by $3,539.46 per day, or $1,288,252.90 for the year.

The next table I should like to have printed shows the number of men dismissed in 1894 and to what classes they belonged. The total number dismissed is 95,922. The table will show to what class each belonged.

The men dismissed from work in 1894 came from classes as follows:

General office clerks	2,805
Stationmen (not agents)	4,031
Enginemen	3,315
Firemen	4,032
Conductors	2,714
Other trainmen	9,542
Machinists	1,624
Carpenters	5,550
Other shopmen	9,350
Section foremen	30
Other trackmen	29,443
Switchmen, flagmen, and watchmen	2,829
Telegraph operators and dispatchers	474
All other employees and laborers	20,174
Total number dismissed	95,922

The next table shows the loss to the railway's employees by being dismissed from service. There were 4,031 stationmen dismissed; the average pay of each was $1.63 a day. This made the total loss $6,578.53 a day to that class of men dismissed. I show what the salary of each of the other men in each class who were dismissed would have been. The total is over $57,000,000.

Excluding "general office clerks," who received an advance in pay, the loss per day suffered by these dismissed employees amounted, at the lower pay for 1894, to the following sums:

Stationmen (not agents), 4,031, at $1.63	$6,570.53
Enginemen, 3,315, at $3.61	11,967.15
Firemen, 4,032, at $2.03	8,184.96
Conductors, 2,714, at $3.04	8,250.56
Trainmen, 9,542, at $1.89	18,034.38
Machinists, 1,624, at $2.21	3,589.04
Carpenters, 5,550, at $2.02	11,211.00
Shopmen, 9,350, at $1.69	$15,801.50
Section foremen, 30, at $1.71	66.09
Trackmen, 29,443, at $1.18	34,742.74
Switchmen, flagmen, and watchmen, 2,829, at $1.75	4,950.75
Telegraph operators and dispatchers, 474, at $1.93	914.82
Other employees and laborers, 20,174, at $1.65	33,287.10
Loss per day	157,571.23
Loss for the year	57,513,495.30

Mr. President, just think of these men thrown out of employment and their families in want. The loss to these men thrown out of employment is $157,571.23 per day—a loss to them and their families of $57,513,495.30 a year. This done in order to increase the number of general officers and to increase the salaries of those already getting $50,000 a year. This done in order that money might be saved to contribute to the gold-bug campaign. This done to help the shylocks of two continents to win an election and get a firmer and more cruel hold upon the lifestrings of the nation. No goldite ever did anything for labor. Every goldite is for low wages and hard times.

Mr. NELSON. I raise the point of no quorum.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator has not been recognized by the Chair. He can not make that suggestion.

Mr. NELSON. I withdraw the point.

Mr. BUTLER. I am willing to have a vote taken on this proposition as soon as I can present one more important table and comment on it briefly, but I will not agree, if I can get enough seconds, for a vote to be taken without having the yeas and nays spread on the minutes, and if the yeas and nays are called——

Mr. ALDRICH. We will give you the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER. It will disclose the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Several SENATORS. No.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not ready for a vote. I am not through talking——

Mr. PALMER. I think the Senator from North Carolina has a right to proceed in his own way without being interrupted.

Mr. CHANDLER. I notice that the Senator from North Carolina understands his right very well. I only want to ask the Senator how much longer he desires to debate this matter, and when he will be willing to allow this precise question, not the whole bill, to be voted upon?

Mr. BUTLER. I would be tempted to debate this question for the next week if I thought I could kill all the steals in this bill in that way, or run them to the end of the session to kill it, because it is time for the Government to get down to sound and common-sense business methods and stop paying these subsidies. These subsidies should not be given to these corporations unless we want to make a free gift to the greatest champions of the gold standard, and those who have gone beyond their privilege and duties and their proper province. If we want to make gifts, I make the point that there are plenty of people who need the money. We can make gifts to those who need it.

Mr. President, I trust that the Senator from Minnesota will not insist upon raising the question of no quorum, because if a Senator wants to go to the cloakroom, I do not want him to hear me. If he has made up his mind whether he is going to vote for the subsidy or not, and does not want to hear the facts that I have taken the trouble to get, then I do not care for him to hear what I have to say. I am doing my duty when I present these facts to the Senate. I propose to present them. The Senate will take the responsibility of saying whether the subsidy shall be voted after the facts have been presented. My responsibility ends when I present these facts and my vote is cast.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me for one moment? Of course I am interested in the argument the Senator presents. I myself believe that the railway mail pay is excessive in this country. I believe we are paying the railroads more than we ought to pay them. Notwithstanding that fact, I am unwilling by my vote to deprive the South of the expedition for her mail which this amendment gives.

There may be difference of opinion as to whether this money is necessary; it may be excessive pay to the railroads; but nevertheless here is a fast-mail route from New York, through Washington, on down through the Senator's State, I do not know to exactly what point, Atlanta, some point in Florida, and to New Orleans, it may be. It certainly would be treated as a sectional vote if I were to vote to take away this fast-mail route to the South. I have uniformly voted for it whenever the question has been raised, and I should like the privilege of voting that way to-night.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from New Hampshire admits that we are paying an excessive price for carrying the mail; that we are paying more for the cars than we ought to pay. Then why is it not consistent and proper for him to take the position that we ought to vote against all the subsidies? Right under this provision is another for a subsidy out West and in other places. Why vote for any of the subsidies when we are already paying more than the service is worth? This subsidy does not add one particle to our mail facilities. It is not a subsidy voted to the South, or to the people along the line of the railroads; it is a clear gift in the pockets of the railroads, that is all. I do not ask it as one from the South. I represent my State in part. Whether my colleague will agree with me upon it or not, I will stand up here and give the facts and my reasons for it, and go before my constituents and get their indorsement of it. I want to say that there never has been any man here who has voted for it since the question has been mooted, when the Democratic party held its sway in the State, that he did not sooner or later have to face that question on the stump, and it was one of the most effective agencies in carrying him down. He could not give any good and sufficient reason for it. I will not call any names, but it was one of the most powerful arguments against some who were defeated who were especially prominent in support of it.

I can speak for my constituents on this subject. There are Senators here to speak for the rest of the South. I am ready to vote for it if any man can show me any reason why it is necessary to give the people of the South the mail facility that we now have. The Postmaster-General and everyone else in authority say it is not. Nobody can prove or show or ever has dared to say it was necessary.

Mr. President, I submit that if what Senators have said here to-day be true, there is not a Senator on this floor who can conscientiously, from my standpoint, vote for the subsidies in the Southwest or anywhere else. Here we are about to create a commission to try to reduce what is paid. Here is an ex-Postmaster-General himself who has told you frequently and to-day how excessive is the amount paid the railroads, and here is the proposition to add a subsidy on top of what we now pay, which is 100 per cent, almost, more than necessary.

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator explain how the Postmaster-General is compelled to expend this money in view of this proviso, to wit:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service?

Mr. BUTLER. I will answer the Senator from Montana with the mouth of the Postmaster-General. He has protested against it time and again. Different Postmasters-General have said that these subsidies were an annoyance instead of a help to the postal service. They have asked Congress time and again not to appropriate for it, that they already had proper discretion and sufficient power to pay; and now the Postmaster-General explains why he threw away the money after he asked you not to appropriate it. I ask the Secretary to read what the Postmaster-General says.

The Secretary read as follows:

SPECIAL FACILITIES.

Congress has appropriated each year during the last twenty years a specialty fund for a fast-mail service from New England and New York to Southern States, reaching as far south as New Orleans. The total amount for the current year is $100,614.22.

There has been a difference of opinion as to the necessity for making these appropriations, but as each Congress has seen proper to follow the action of the former Congress, the Department, while not recommending the appropriation, has thought it advisable to apply the fund for the purpose indicated.

Mr. BUTLER. There is the answer. Since Congress has insisted and persisted in voting it, the Postmaster-General says he can interpret it in no other way than that they mean for him to expend it. That is what he says himself in his report. That is the last report. They have given their argument time and again, until they got tired of it, and now the Postmaster-General simply refers you to the argument.

He says he does not know what else to do when Congress insists upon voting it when it is not necessary; they must mean to give it to the road, and he gives it. There is the answer.

It is said by some who oppose the gold trust, yet who favor this subsidy, that we can not afford to fight everything. That may be true in some respects, but I submit that every man who opposes the gold standard, and who sincerely favors financial reform, if only to the extent of free silver, must, if he is honest and sincere, fight any and all the allied forces that combined and concentrated their powers for the shylocks and against the interests of the people in the last campaign. Any man who is sincerely for the free coinage of silver and puts that question and the interests of the people above his own personal interests can not afford to vote for a subsidy to railroad companies that were the most active and effective agents of the gold gamblers in the last campaign. If the railroads had not gone into politics, and coerced and intimidated not only their employees but shippers and the public generally, William J. Bryan would have been elected President by a handsome majority. Shall we vote subsidies to those who are now reducing the pay of their employees in order to raise a campaign fund to help the shylocks and monopolists defeat the will of the people again in 1900? Those who are honestly against the gold standard can not make terms with the railroads without betraying the people and the cause of financial reform. The action of these railroads in the last campaign has made it necessary for every patriot to deal with them just as we must deal with the bankers, bondholders, and the gold trust.

In this connection I will embody in my remarks a leaflet sent out by the campaign committee of the People's Party showing why the railroads are in politics:

WHY THE RAILROADS ARE IN POLITICS—THE ROTHSCHILDS WRECKING AND BUYING UP THE RAILROADS IN ORDER TO CONTROL TRANSPORTATION AS WELL AS FINANCE.

In 1893 when the Rothschild combination was raiding the Treasury for gold for their gigantic Austrian speculation, at which time it was the duty of the Administration to pay Government obligations in silver, the scope of the entire scheme was not developed. The Austrian debt was changed from $2,400,000,000 of bonds payable in silver to $2,800,000,000 of bonds payable in gold. It is asserted, and it is probably true, that more than $200,000,000 was made by that single transaction. Austria was robbed and her debt practically doubled. The United States was betrayed, its Treasury wrecked, and a panic inaugurated under the pressure of which the only law on the statute book recognizing silver as money was swept away. It is estimated that during Cleveland's Administration four thousand millions of railroad and other securities have gone to the bad and that honest investors have lost that vast sum.

This was not all of the gigantic plan in which the Administration of President Cleveland played and is still playing so conspicuous a part. Nearly all of the railroads of the country were wrecked. It is stated in the public press that that same Rothschild combination, acting through their agents, Morgan and Belmont, as they have done in the $262,000,000 bond deals during Cleveland's Administration, have absorbed all the railroad transportation east of the Mississippi River, except the Pennsylvania and the Vanderbilt lines, and that they have a longing eye for the Pennsylvania, which is in danger of following in the same path that all the other great railroads have gone. The most surprising fact in all these gigantic operations is that since Bryan's nominations at Chicago and St. Louis the absorption by purchase under judicial sale of railroads has been enormous. The Reading, costing $250,000,000, and only in debt $45,000,000, sold for the paltry sum of $30,500,000. The Northern Pacific, with between two and three hundred millions of obligations outstanding, sold at judicial sale for the small sum of $13,000,000. The entire Southern system, except the Seaboard line, has been owned by the Rothschilds for several years. The Seaboard line has now been taken in by that great syndicate within the last few days. Why is it that this vast European combination is perfecting its title to American railroads just at this time? It is well known that they own railroads to wreck them; that it is their policy after a road has been wrecked and bought for a pittance to rebond and restock it, run it for dividends until the bonds and stocks can be sold, and then rewreck it and go through the same process. The activity in wrecking railroads during the present campaign is evidence that the Rothschild combination think it probable that Bryan will be elected, in which event they could stock and bond their railroads and sell them at a vast profit. In case, however, Bryan should be defeated they have another recourse. They will cut down wages to the starvation point. Such cuts would be followed by labor strikes, which would be put down by the strong arm of the Federal Government, and thus the form of our Government would be changed.

There is no doubt that it is the cherished policy of every European monarch, as well as of the great Rothschild money combination, to consolidate the Federal Government of the United States and make it a despotism. It is hard to find a money dealer on either side of the Atlantic who will not tell you that what is wanted is a strong government to make the people behave. If Bryan is elected, hundreds of millions will be made in these railroad deals in the next few years of general prosperity. If he is defeated, wages will be reduced, dividends will be made, and the stocks and bonds will be sold all the same, and millions will flow into the coffers of the gold combination.

We ask the people to watch these grand railroad deals and see what connection they have with the raiding of the Treasury by the Cleveland-Rothschild combination, which has continued from that time until now. They will appreciate why it was that this great money combination desired to wreck railroads and depress prices; it was that they might gather in, as they have gathered in, the railroads of the country and control transportation as well as finance.

This explains the pernicious activity of the railroad corporations against Bryan and silver and for McKinley and gold. In short, the gold trust is for McKinley; every railroad in the United States is for McKinley; the banks of Europe and America are for McKinley; every monarchical government in Europe is for McKinley; the sugar trust is for McKinley; the coal trust is for McKinley; the standard oil trust is for McKinley; John Sherman is for McKinley; Mark Hanna is for McKinley; Pierpont Morgan is for McKinley. We defy any man to show a trust or unlawful combination, manipulator of the currency, intriguer with Rothschild's combination, gold gambler, stock jobber or money changer who is not for McKinley. No man of them who is for McKinley ever did anything to advance the wages of labor or to benefit the masses. On the contrary, every goldite in the country is for low wages and hard times.

Therefore, it is not only to the interest, but the duty, of every patriotic American citizen to vote against McKinley and this infamous combination of trusts and monopolies behind him.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from North Carolina allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. What objection is there now to taking a vote upon the amendment immediately? It is now almost Sunday morning. Can we not take a vote before the Sabbath morning comes in?

Mr. BUTLER. If I thought it would have a very beneficial effect upon the Senate in the interest of economy, in the interest of not throwing away the people's tax money, in the interest of the economy that we have all talked for to-day—if I thought that it would cause Senators to be influenced more by the interests of the people than by the interests of the corporations, I should say, let us take the vote on the eve of Sunday morning.

Mr. NELSON. Let us try the experiment.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, the Senator almost persuades me. I shall ask permission, since I have partially covered this matter, to put into the RECORD, at the proper place in my remarks, without detaining the Senate by reading it, some other matter which I have prepared. It is a statement pertinent to the discussion to some extent, but of course it shows, and is intended to show, the position of the railroads in the last campaign; and it calls attention to the fact that we stand to-day in a different relation as a Senate to them to what we have stood before. The time has come to deal with them as business corporations and not as a matter of sentiment and favor, especially when they go into politics, as they did in the last empaign, and champion one side of the great question dividing the country.

Mr. President, when I was interrupted a few moments ago by the Senator from Minnesota raising the question of no quorum, I was discussing the amount lost each year by those who were dismissed from employment by the reduction of employees of the railroads. I have a few more words to say about that matter.

This amount, $57,513,495.30, was in a single year taken from the earnings of subordinate railway employees, not by reductions throughout these classes, but by actual dismissal of 93,117 persons, nearly all men, on whom doubtless three times that number were dependent for support. Fifty-seven and a half million dollars suddenly taken from fully 300,000 persons at the close of the nineteenth century by dismissal from a hitherto reliable and steady employment because our wretched financial system permitted a few bankers to inaugurate the "panic," destroy business confidence, and paralyze industry! Still, whatever the cause, why was it done? Why were so many made homeless and destitute, or nearly so? Why was other labor, already suffering from contracted business because of contracted currency, made to feel the weight of this added competition for employment in other branches of industry? Why, if retrenchment was imperative, was not this fifty-seven and a half millions taken pro rata, and with reference to amount of compensation received, from all classes of employees and officers, instead of depriving nearly 100,000 men of their customary livelihood? Why during this single year was the number of general and other officers employed so greatly increased, while the number of subordinate employees was so largely decreased? Why was it that during this beginning year of the panic more "officers" were required for a so greatly diminished industrial army?

But besides the dismissals from the ranks of railway employees, there were reductions in the pay of the less than nine-tenths who were retained. How much these cuts amounted to is not indicated by merely noting the lower average daily pay stated in the table above set forth, but the aggregate is easily calculated. Mr. President, I have here another very interesting table. In this computation we only include those classes from which the dismissals above mentioned were made:

Enginemen	1,773.30
Firemen	363.27
Conductors	992.92
Trainmen	1,268.34
Machinists	3,509.40
Carpenters	3,289.52
Shopmen	5,081.54
Section foremen	1,186.40
Trackmen	6,028.44
Switchmen, flagmen, and watchmen	2,160.95
Telegraph operators and dispatchers	865.80
Other employees	4,263.80
Loss per day	32,186.60
Loss for the year	11,748,109.00

During the identical year (ending June 30, 1894) when this vast sum of nearly eleven and three-fourths millions was secured by paring down the wages of subordinate employees from 1 to 13 cents a day, the aggregate amount paid to general and other officers was, upon the average stated, increased by the sum of $3,447,998.05; that is to say, nearly one-third of the eleven and three-fourths millions taken from subordinate employees was added to the salary account of the officers. This includes the salaries paid to the additional officers employed in that year. The loss to the subordinate classes arising from dismissals and reduced wages amounted, as above shown, to $69,261,604.80. After allowing for all errors resulting from the use of average rates of pay, the compensation paid to subordinate railway employees in 1894 as compared with the fiscal year 1893 was apparently diminished fully $60,000,000.

The paternal solicitude manifested by very many managing railway officials for the welfare of the subordinate railway employee during the campaign just closed, the fears they expressed that he would not vote on the side of the "sound money" which he had been receiving in such unstinted portions, and the earnest and often successful efforts of those managers to delude the employee into believing that his prosperous lot would be changed into a condition of starvation on half pay, all become really ludicrous in the light furnished by a study of the figures above given. Not less than $60,000,000 was taken from the great mass of railway employees in a single year, and beyond question a very large proportion of this sum was again "saved" in 1895 and 1896. The men who pilot the train, who govern the train, who serve the train, who switch the train, who make the track safe for the train, who repair the train, who, in fact, operate the road and compose an army of protection and safety to hundreds of millions of passengers and billions of dollars' worth of moving property, are freely made to bear the brunt of untoward circumstances. On the other hand, those who manipulate the company's finances, who devise schemes by which this or that large shipment is secured at any sacrifice of revenue, who establish a tariff of charges only to break it, who often are able to "stand in on the ground floor" in little side schemes for money getting which operate to the detriment of the road, but to the betterment of their own pockets, raise their wages, when hard times come, out of "savings" produced by shaving down the pay of subordinates or diminishing the number of men employed.

These startling figures almost persuade one to believe in the existence of a "trust" in railway pay as there is in sugar, meat, iron, coal, oil, lumber, leather, coffins, shrouds, and practically everything we need to live with or die with.

Nearly a hundred thousand men turned from work on railways in a single year! Sixty million dollars taken from subordinate railway employees in a single year! Millions of dollars added to the salaries of railway officials in the same year! How easy it is to practice economy with other people's money! All this happened before the issues of the national campaign were framed, but the conditions were continued throughout that struggle and are with us in all essential respects to-day. What was done with that sixty millions and various other millions "saved" in recent years from operating expenses of railways must be reserved for another chapter. The purpose of the foregoing is to expose one single stupendous sham, and to point out to railway employees and the public how much of prosperity and decent maintenance have been recklessly wasted to secure as good railway balance sheets as possible under the blessed sound-money conditions that have had full sway in the United States in recent years.

Now, how can any Senator who opposes the gold standard vote to turn over the money taxed from the people to these gold-bug corporations? It is a gift. No gold Senator can do it unless he thinks it right to subsidize these corporations out of the public Treasury to enable them to contribute more next time to the gold-bug campaign.

Mr. President, I am sorry that I did not have these statistics in the last campaign. I have prepared them since. They would have answered all of the demagogy and humbuggery that the railroads used to fool their employees and to help to fool the country. In spite of their power and the money that they now wring from us in their tolls and fares and that we vote to them in subsidies, we hope to get the truth to the people before the next election, and to redeem the country in spite of them and their power thrown against the interest of humanity.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment, but I feel constrained, as a representative of one of the Southern States, to explain why I, who am perhaps as radical a man in my views on the question of subsidies and of the rule of corporations and the influence and control they exert in legislation, which was discussed by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, think it is absolutely just and proper that the motion to strike out should not prevail, and that the subsidy proposed should be continued in the appropriation bill.

Our mail facilities in the South are none too good. It is well known that the policy of the Government in distributing mail through the country is to reach into the remotest sections without regard to cost. You send the star routes into the backwoods if there are but a dozen people there, although it may cost forty or fifty or a thousand times more than the revenue derived from the cancellation of stamps. Why do you do it? Because people in those remote settlements have some rights.

Now, when you consider the fact that by reason of its dense population and wealth and the amount and rapidity of travel on the trains which accommodate the traveler between the Eastern and Western sections of this country north of the Ohio and then compare it with the sparse settlements in the South and the inability of the railroads to furnish fast trains and pay expenses, you see at once the analogy between supplying the remote settlements with star routes without regard to cost and the case we are now considering. If you deny the Southern people and those cities mentioned in the amendment this fast train, you delay the mails from twelve to fourteen hours to the great injury of ten or twelve States.

Mr. BUTLER. It will bring nothing to the Southern people; every dollar of this subsidy will go into the pockets of the railroads. You say it will add to our fast-mail facilities. I deny it. Where is your testimony and your evidence? Show a particle.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not a question of testimony or evidence. It is a question simply with the Postmaster-General. If he does not think it is right and proper, he is allowed under the statute not to spend this money. If he will not do his duty, it is not our fault.

Mr. BUTLER. How would the distinguished Senator——

Mr. DANIEL. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that he is required not to spend it unless he believes in his own judgment that it is necessary.

Mr. TILLMAN. You mean to saddle the responsibility on us, because it is in an appropriation bill, and you want the Postmaster-General to say because we put it there he must spend it.

Mr. BUTLER. He has the courage to advise you not to do it, and that is as much courage as it would take to vote against a subsidy if he were a member of this body. And when he has had the courage to do that you go and vote it and tell him to spend it, and he explains in his report that he throws it away because you voted it in spite of his recommendation to the contrary.

The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, who has been Postmaster-General, explained to-day how it was that the Postmaster-General was placed in an awkward situation in attempting to carry out the law or do his duty when he had to contend single-handed without the help of Congress against these combined monopolies who have such a hold upon our country and its interests. He explained to-day fully the difficulties he had to meet with as Postmaster-General, and it made me tremble for the Government to see a man with his firmness and courage stand up here and acknowledge and admit the difficulties that a Cabinet officer has in carrying out and doing his duty unless Congress will come to his back and prevent the railroads and combined trusts and monopolies from centering their pressure upon him.

Mr. TILLMAN. When there are so many other villainies in this bill, so many iniquities, I accept the payment for the transportation of the mails which the Senator pointed out, and I am unwilling, with all the villainies in this appropriation bill, to vote against this one for my own section of the country to give it rapid mail facilities.

Mr. BUTLER. Your argument would be, if my son steals, do not condemn him; if somebody else's son steals, then condemn him.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am tired of so much sentimentality in the South and no practicability. I think if we have got to have these iniquities we should have our share of the benefits.

Mr. BUTLER. That is a nice grab game. I have heard that before, when spoilsmen say, "What are we here for but for the spoils?" Each one grabs what he can, and let the devil take the hindmost.

Mr. TILLMAN. The South always has taken the hindmost.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from South Carolina will be joining the tariff barons here in a few days and saying, "Show me how I can loot the country for South Carolina. I am one of your gang."

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg your pardon, but I will join with the representatives of the tariff barons in giving this country all the tariff physic that it can be gagged and forced to take down. That is the only way to bring the people to their senses and lead them to a change in the financial policy as a means of relieving the ills we suffer.

Mr. BUTLER. Then the gentleman's argument is for us to increase these appropriations, and instead of voting $196,000, let us vote away $196,000,000, to let the country see how unworthy we are as their representatives.

Mr. TILLMAN. You will not get relief until you convince the masses of the people that there are a lot of robbers here representing the other robbers, and that they must change the personnel of this body.

Mr. BUTLER. And the Senator from South Carolina is joining in the scramble, and says, "Let me share the booty while the robbery is going on. Let me in and I will be one of the robbers to convince the people that we are all robbers."

Mr. TILLMAN. We of the South all pay our share of taxes. We send North every year one hundred and fifty or seventy-five million dollars, and most of it never comes back. Why not let us have the $171,000 for improved mail service?

Mr. BUTLER. Every one of these excessive charges that is paid for carrying the mails over the country and for rent of postal cars that the Senator speaks of is paid to Southern railroads. They get all the excessive pay we were talking about to-day; they get all the excessive pay for postal cars that we were talking about to-day. But you are not satisfied with that excessive pay. You want to put a subsidy on top of it and in addition to that.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to stop the whole business, but we can not do it; and I do not believe in depriving our people of this small benefit because of opposition to the policy pursued in conducting the Government.

Mr. BUTLER. Then let us vote against all subsidies. There are only a few in this bill. Let us vote against them, West as well as South, and do our duty. This is not a subsidy for the benefit of the people. It is a subsidy for the benefit of the railroad kings, for them and them alone. It should not pass. You know it is wrong.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment, but I feel constrained, as a representative of one of the Southern States, to explain why I, who am perhaps as radical a man in my views on the question of subsidies and of the rule of corporations and the influence and control they exert in legislation, which was discussed by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, think it is absolutely just and proper that the motion to strike out should not prevail, and that the subsidy proposed should be continued in the appropriation bill.

Our mail facilities in the South are none too good. It is well known that the policy of the Government in distributing mail through the country is to reach into the remotest sections without regard to cost. You send the star routes into the backwoods if there are but a dozen people there, although it may cost forty or fifty or a thousand times more than the revenue derived from the cancellation of stamps. Why do you do it? Because people in those remote settlements have some rights.

Now, when you consider the fact that by reason of its dense population and wealth and the amount and rapidity of travel on the trains which accommodate the traveler between the Eastern and Western sections of this country north of the Ohio and then compare it with the sparse settlements in the South and the inability of the railroads to furnish fast trains and pay expenses, you see at once the analogy between supplying the remote settlements with star routes without regard to cost and the case we are now considering. If you deny the Southern people and those cities mentioned in the amendment this fast train, you delay the mails from twelve to fourteen hours to the great injury of ten or twelve States.

Mr. BUTLER. Deny it how, Governor? Where is your testimony and your evidence? Show a particle.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is not a question of testimony or evidence. It is a question simply with the Postmaster-General. If he does not think it is right and proper, he is allowed under the statute not to spend this money. If he will not do his duty, it is not our fault.

Mr. BUTLER. How would the distinguished Senator——

Mr. DANIEL. I call the attention of the Senator from South Carolina to the fact that he is required not to spend it unless he believes in his own judgment that it is necessary.

Mr. TILLMAN. You mean to saddle the responsibility on us, because it is in an appropriation bill, and you want the Postmaster-General to say because we put it there he must spend it.

Mr. BUTLER. He has the courage to advise you not to do it, and that is as much courage as it would take to vote against a subsidy if he were a member of this body. And when he has had the courage to do that you go and vote it and tell him to spend it, and he explains in his report that he throws it away because you voted it in spite of his recommendation to the contrary.

The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin who has been Postmaster-General explained to-day how it was that the Postmaster-General was placed in an awkward situation in attempting to carry out the law or do his duty when he had to contend single-handed without the help of Congress against these combined monopolies who have such a hold upon our country and its interests. He explained to-day fully the difficulties he had to meet with as Postmaster-General, and it made me tremble for the Government to see a man with his firmness and courage stand up here and acknowledge and admit the difficulties that a Cabinet officer has in carrying out and doing his duty unless Congress will come to his back and prevent them from centering their pressure upon him.

Mr. TILLMAN. When there are so many other villainies in this bill, so many iniquities, I accept the payment for the transportation of the mails which the Senator pointed out, and I am unwilling, with all the villainies in this appropriation bill, to vote against this one for my own section of the country to give it rapid mail facilities.

Mr. BUTLER. Your argument would be, if my son steals, do not condemn him; if somebody else's son steals, then condemn him.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am tired of so much sentimentality in the South and no practicability. I think if we have got to have these iniquities we should have our share of the benefits.

Mr. BUTLER. That is a nice grab game. I have heard that before when spoilsmen say, What are we here for but for the spoils? Each one grabs what he can, and let the devil take the hindmost.

Mr. TILLMAN. The South always has taken the hindmost.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from South Carolina will be joining the tariff barons here in a few days and saying: "Show me how I can loot the country for South Carolina. I am one of your gang."

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg your pardon, but I will join with the representatives of the tariff barons in giving this country all the tariff physic that it can be gagged and forced to take down. That is the only way to bring the people to their senses and lead them to a change in the financial policy as a means of relieving the ills we suffer.

Mr. BUTLER. Then the gentleman's argument is for us to increase these appropriations, and instead of voting $196,000, let us vote away $196,000,000, to let the country see how unworthy we are as their representatives.

Mr. TILLMAN. You will not get relief until you convince the masses of the people that there are a lot of robbers here representing the other robbers, and that they must change the personnel of this body.

Mr. BUTLER. And the Senator from South Carolina is joining in the scramble, and says, "Let me share the booty while the robbery is going on."

Mr. TILLMAN. We of the South all pay our share of taxes. We send North every year one hundred and fifty or seventy-five million dollars, and most of it never comes back. Why not let us have the $171,000 for improved mail service?

Mr. BUTLER. Every one of these excessive charges that is paid that the Senator speaks of is paid to Southern railroads. They get all the excessive pay we were talking about to-day; they get all the excessive pay for postal cars that we were talking about to-day. But you are not satisfied with that excessive pay. You want to put a subsidy on top of it and in addition to that.

Mr. TILLMAN. I should like to stop the whole business, but we can not do it; and I do not believe in depriving our people of this small benefit because of opposition to the policy pursued in conducting the Government.

Mr. BUTLER. Then let us vote against all subsidies. There are only a few in this bill. Let us vote against them, West as well as South, and do our duty. You know it is wrong.

Mr. ALLISON (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes a. m., Sunday, February 28). Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a vote shall be now taken upon this amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina to strike out the clause which has been read.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope we shall have a roll call.

Mr. ALLISON. The yeas and nays will be taken on the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BATE. Let the amendment be read. I ask that the clause proposed to be stricken out be reread.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out after line 16, on page 8:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from New York and Washington, to Atlanta and New Orleans, $171,238.75.

Mr. BATE. That is sufficient. I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). Under the circumstances, owing to the condition in the Senate this evening and the fact that this is not a political question, I will not regard my pair, and vote "nay."

Mr. McBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. My colleague [Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. The Senator from Wisconsin and I have arranged to transfer our pairs, and I vote "nay."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], but inasmuch as he and I agree on this subject, I desire to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair upon all subjects with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Upon this question I do not know how he would vote, but I believe that under existing conditions he will justify me in violating the pair to vote "nay," as I do.

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. I do not know how he would vote on this subject if he were present. I should vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when Mr. WALTHALL'S name was called). I was requested by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] to state that he is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I have again to announce my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], and to state that he is detained from the Chamber by sickness to-day. [A pause.] I am informed by his colleague [Mr. CALL] that he would vote "nay," and therefore I will vote.

Mr. CALL. I think my colleague would vote "nay," under the circumstances.

Mr. WILSON. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the negative). I permit my vote to stand, although the Senator with whom I am paired is absent. I understand that he would vote the same way I do if present.

Mr. McMILLAN (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. Believing that he would vote as I do, I will let my vote stand.

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. I voted, but I do not know how he would vote if present, and I shall have to withdraw my vote. [A pause.] I am advised that the Senator with whom I am paired would vote "nay" upon this proposition, so I will allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 8, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—8.

Baker,	Berry,	Chilton,	Pettigrew,
Bate,	Butler,	Lodge,	Vilas.

NAYS—41.

Allen,	Cullom,	McBride,	Roach,
Allison,	Daniel,	McMillan,	Shoup,
Bacon,	Dubois,	Martin,	Squire,
Brice,	Faulkner,	Nelson,	Stewart,
Brown,	Frye,	Palmer,	Thurston,
Burrows,	Gibson,	Peffer,	Tillman,
Call,	Gordon,	Perkins,	White,
Cannon,	Gorman,	Platt,	Wilson.
Carter,	Hawley,	Pritchard,
Chandler,	Hill,	Proctor,
Cockrell,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,

NOT VOTING—41.

Aldrich,	Gray,	Mills,	Teller,
Blackburn,	Hale,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Turpie,
Blanchard,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Wis.	Vest,
Caffery,	Harris,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Walthall,
Clark,	Irby,	Murphy,	Warren.
Davis,	Jones, Nev.	Pasco,	Wetmore,
Elkins,	Kenney,	Pugh.	Wolcott.
Gallinger,	Kyle,	Sewell,
Gear,	Lindsay,	Sherman,
George,	Mantle,	Smith,

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the committee amendment. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "service," line 24, insert the words:

In the discretion of the Postmaster-General, any unexpended balance of appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, for necessary and special facilities on trunk lines, may be used for other fast-mail facilities.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa in charge of the bill if the appropriation for $80,000 for the Oceanic Steamship Company is not a new appropriation of a subsidy in addition to what has heretofore been paid them?

Mr. ALLISON. It has been paid for two years.

Mr. VILAS. It is a continuation of the same payment?

Mr. ALLISON. It is a continuation of the same payment.

Mr. VILAS. In that case I will not stop to contest it now at this late hour of the night, although I would like to call attention to the fact that that company is not within the category of those entitled to the subsidy under the general act for that purpose, and having been invited by the Post-Office Department to bid it was unable to do so, having but two vessels of American registry.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

Mr. HILL. I hope not to-night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. ALDRICH. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will allow me a moment. Is the bill before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has not submitted the motion for the reason that the Senator from New York addressed the Chair upon the bill.

Mr. HILL. I was about to make a suggestion that we ought not to proceed with the bill to-night.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from New York that it is not my purpose to finish the bill to-night. I think it is absolutely impossible to do that.

Mr. HILL. Yes; I think so myself.

Mr. ALLISON. But I should like to make progress with it, and any sharply contested matter in the bill I will allow to be passed over until to-morrow. I trust that we shall make progress with the bill to-night, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. GORDON. If the Senator from Iowa will allow me to make a suggestion, would it not be wiser for us to meet earlier in the morning, and get some sleep to-night?

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is necessary that we should make progress with the bill to-night, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to make one suggestion. Can there not be a unanimous-consent agreement that no other business shall be considered to-night except this bill?

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no. Then everybody would go away.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is a fair proposition.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Why not agree to that?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator ask to have the suggestion submitted?

Mr. VILAS. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that no other business shall be considered except the sundry civil bill at the session to-night before a recess or adjournment is taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits the request of the Senator from Wisconsin. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BATE. I suppose nothing will be done except the reading of the bill. There will be no contest over the amendments to-night.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senate that if any Senator for any reason is compelled to be absent from his seat this evening and to-morrow, and will state that fact, I shall be willing that it may be reopened to that extent. What I desire is that we shall make progress with the bill. Certainly, I do not desire that any Senator shall be deprived of his proper right to discuss the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Then all Senators will go away.

Mr. ALLISON. I think if Senators will trust me about this bill there will be no special harm done with it.

Mr. FRYE. That is all right.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa allow me to make a suggestion to expedite business?

Mr. ALLISON. I will.

Mr. NELSON. I suggest that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a very good suggestion, and I intended to make it myself. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. I also ask that the committee amendments may be considered first.

Mr. CULLOM. That is right.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that the request submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin has been agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. QUAY. What is the request?

Mr. FRYE. That was agreed to, I understand.

Mr. QUAY. What is the request?

Mr. FRYE. That no other business shall be done to-night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will ask the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. QUAY. I thought he withdrew his request?

Mr. CULLOM and others. No, no.

Mr. VILAS. A good many Senators desired that that request should be made. I am not desirous to do anything against the wishes of those who are in charge of the bill. I thought it would facilitate action upon the bill.

Mr. QUAY. I understood that I had removed the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin to proceeding in the ordinary way. I was mistaken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the reading of the bill be proceeded with?

Mr. FAULKNER. The request of the Senator from Wisconsin has not been submitted, or else it has been agreed to, and we want to know which.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair again submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Wisconsin. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. What is the request?

Mr. FAULKNER. I understand the request is that there shall be no other business than the sundry civil bill until either adjournment or recess.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the reading may be interrupted, in order that at this time we may settle the question of a recess. I hope that unanimous consent will be given that when we take a recess it will be until 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Iowa that when the recess is taken to-night it be until 3 o'clock this afternoon. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed.

Mr. HILL. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I move that when a recess be taken to-night it be until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. HILL. I raise the question of no quorum.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Carter,	Jones, Ark.	Quay,
Allen,	Chandler,	Lodge,	Roach,
Allison,	Chilton,	McBride,	Shoup,
Bacon,	Cockrell,	McMillan,	Squire,
Baker,	Cullom,	Martin,	Stewart,
Bate,	Daniel,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Berry,	Dubois,	Palmer,	Tillman,
Brice,	Faulkner,	Peffer,	Vilas,
Brown,	Gibson,	Perkins,	White,
Burrows,	Gordon,	Pettigrew,	Wilson.
Call,	Gorman,	Platt,
Cannon,	Hawley,	Proctor,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I desire to state that I have moved on several occasions for an executive session of the Senate, and my motion has been interfered with by appropriation bills. I do not wish to antagonize the appropriation bills, but I think that the Senate should have an executive session, and I think we should fix a time, so that Senators may know when it is going to be held, that they may be present. I am not asking that any particular action should be had in executive session, but that there should be an executive session to dispose of whatever executive business is before the Senate.

That is nothing but common fairness, and my request should not be refused. If the ordinary and usual request of a Senator is refused, he naturally feels as though he must antagonize those who antagonize him. I am not asking that any particular nomination shall be confirmed; I am simply asking that there shall be an executive session, and that an opportunity shall be afforded to pass upon various nominations. If some nominations are to be confirmed, the appointees will have to give their bonds, and they must have them returned before Congress adjourns, as everyone knows. I do not think we ought to do by indirection what we will not do directly.

It is for that reason that I have suggested that we ought not to go on with this bill, at least until there can be some understanding with regard to when we are going to have an executive session. Every time when an appropriation bill is reported and passed another one is put immediately in its place, and if I remain silent, I shall be cut off then by saying, "You can not have an executive session now, because we have an appropriation bill before the Senate."

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator must see that I am facilitating just what he wants by asking that this appropriation bill be now considered.

Mr. HILL. When this bill is disposed of, the Senator will ask to take another appropriation bill up immediately.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; but these bills must be passed within a day or two, in order that they may go to the other House and become laws. The next bill which will probably be considered will be the naval appropriation bill, which will take, I hope, a very short time. Then the deficiency bill will be considered, or the fortifications bill, and probably the District of Columbia appropriation bill will be the last one considered, though it is important to consider it early, I know. Certainly, whatever is done to-night will facilitate just what the Senator from New York desires, because I must submit that these appropriation bills are more important than by any possibility prolonged executive sessions can be. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's desires about an executive session.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will make a suggestion. The time is very precious to-night. We might have made very considerable progress with this bill even while we have been talking. There will be no difficulty about having an executive session on Monday. I do not know what good will result from talking about it now. I myself would agree to give unanimous consent for an executive session at some hour agreeable to the Senator in charge of the appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to address a suggestion to the Senator from New York. The question that ought to be settled is the question of the recess to-night. It has been suggested that the recess should be until 3 o'clock this afternoon. As the Senate knows, I have voted steadily for executive sessions, and I am willing to give notice now that two hours after we reassemble in the afternoon, say at 5 o'clock, I shall move an executive session.

Mr. HILL. I am obliged to the Senator, but I hardly think we can have it this afternoon. I do not believe we can get a sufficient number of Senators here.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then we can not do any business.

Mr. CULLOM. Say on Monday.

Mr. CHANDLER. I give notice, then, that I will make the motion within two hours after the reassembling of the Senate.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I should like to ask whether there is not an agreement that nothing shall be done except to proceed with the consideration of the sundry civil bill to-night?

Mr. HILL. I am not asking for an executive session; but I want to see fair play in the spirit of fairness that usually characterizes me. I do not want to be obstreperous about it. I do not want to compete with appropriation bills, and yet all the time they are put in my way.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the Senator will permit me, I will state frankly that if we could have had a full Senate this evening, there would have been a motion made to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HILL. I do not think that the evening is the proper time. There are some gentlemen in the Senate who are rather old, and it would be a hardship on them.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not think we can have an executive session before Monday.

Mr. HILL. Why can not there be a general understanding that on Monday at 1 o'clock we shall go into executive session? Why not have that, if you intend to give an opportunity to attend to executive business?

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator ask for unanimous consent?

Mr. HILL. I suggest that we fix some time, so as not to take advantage of the absence of any Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. The difficulty is owing to the morning hour consuming the time until 1 o'clock, and if we go into executive session at 2 o'clock, that practically ends the legislative business of the day.

Senators will bear in mind that for the last week or ten days we have only been considering appropriation bills in the evenings. Business of one kind and another—I need not go into a statement of what it has been—has intervened to occupy hours and hours. I have protested against it, knowing that we would be in the situation we are to-night unless we progressed with the appropriation bills.

Here is a proposition that we shall go into executive session at an early hour on Monday, which means that the day will be gone. If the Senators will allow the appropriation bills to be placed in a position where they can be considered in the other House and dealt with there, there will be plenty of time to hold the executive session they desire, if they are disposed to go into it. I should be willing to consent to a later hour on Monday for an executive session, so that the day will not be wholly occupied with that business.

Mr. HILL. I suggest 4 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I shall be willing, so far as I am concerned, to give way at 4 o'clock, although I think that is a very dangerous business.

Mr. COCKRELL. There will be no trouble about that.

Mr. ALLISON. We shall be here, and there will be an all-night session, practically, on Monday.

Mr. HILL. Then at 6 o'clock we shall take a recess anyhow. That is the difficulty about it. Why not make it 4 o'clock? One hour is just as good as another for appropriation bills if we can keep a quorum. I ask unanimous consent that on Monday at 4 o'clock the Senate go into executive session.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Is not that a violation of the previous unanimous consent?

Mr. CHANDLER and Mr. HILL. No.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We agreed to-night that we should do nothing but consider the appropriation bill, and now we are agreeing as to what shall be done on Monday. That is certainly doing something which is palpably a violation of the agreement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from New York, that at 4 o'clock on Monday the Senate go into executive session. Is there objection?

Mr. BROWN. As I understand it, we have already agreed by unanimous consent that we shall do no other business than that connected with this appropriation bill to-night. Immediately thereafter we are asked to perform one of the most important functions of the Senate, to wit, make an order absolute to go into a particular class of business on Monday, at 4 o'clock. I consider at least that is a violation of the agreement, and I object.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I give notice that I shall move on Monday at 4 o'clock that the Senate go into executive session.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask unanimous consent that when we take a recess it shall be until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest that it is necessary in that connection probably to fix an hour at which we shall take a recess, because we may be in a position at the hour we desire to take a recess when there will be no quorum, and we shall have to adjourn, as it would require a quorum to take a recess.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no; we can fix the time for the recess now.

Mr. ALDRICH. The only agreement is that when we take a recess we shall take it to a certain time. It requires a quorum to take a recess at the time.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, if there is that difficulty, I will propose to fix the hour for taking a recess at half past 2 o'clock to-night until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

Several SENATORS (to Mr. ALLISON). Then make the motion.

Mr. ALLISON. I move, then, that at half past 2 o'clock we take a recess until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Public buildings," on page 2, after line 23, to insert:

For post-office and court-house at Charleston, S. C.: For completing the approaches and grounds around the building, $12,000.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, in line 26, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "twelve" and insert "fourteen;" so as to read "$14,000."

Mr. ALLISON. The estimate of the Department is that this work can be done for $12,000. I hope the Senator will not insist on his amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. I beg the Senator's pardon. He is in error. The Supervising Architect has written a letter in which he states that $12,000 is not sufficient, and that it will be necessary to have $14,000 in order to complete the work.

Mr. QUAY. I invite the attention of the Senator from Iowa to this proposed amendment. The facts are that this amendment, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, appropriates for the post-office at Charleston. The committee addressed a communication to the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, who, after the amendment had been referred to the Committee on Appropriations inserting $12,000, advised us that it would require $14,000 to do the work. I trust the Senator from Iowa will permit the amendment to prevail.

Mr. ALLISON. On that statement, I shall not object to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And not to exceed $20,000 of this sum may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be used to purchase additional land for the site of said building.

So as to make the clause read:

For public building at Helena, Mont.: For continuation of building under present limit, $100,000, and not to exceed $20,000 of this sum may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be used to purchase additional land for the site of said building.

The amendment was agreed to.

Lighting the Executive Mansion and public grounds: For gas, pay of lamplighters, gas fitters, and laborers; purchase, erection, and repair of lamps and lampposts; purchase of matches, and repairs of all kinds; fuel and lights for office, office stable, watchmen's lodges, and for the greenhouses at the nursery, $13,000: Provided, That for each 6-foot burner not connected with a meter in the lamps on the public grounds no more than $20 shall be paid per lamp for gas, including lighting, cleaning, and keeping the lamps in repair, under any expenditure provided for in this act; and said lamps shall burn every night on the average from forty-five minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise; and authority is hereby given to substitute other illuminating material for the same or less price, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose: Provided, That before any expenditures are made from the appropriations herein provided for, the contracting gas company shall equip each lamp with a self-regulating burner and tip, so combined and adjusted as to secure, under all ordinary variations of pressure and density, a consumption of 5 cubic feet of gas per hour.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 9, after the word "night," to insert "which shall cover the entire cost to the United States of lighting and maintaining in good order each electric light in said parks;" and in line 12, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That all wires shall be placed underground, and that the conduits, wires, lamp posts complete, shall be furnished by the electric-light company without expense to the United States, and that 25 cents per lamp per night shall cover the entire cost to the United States of lighting and maintaining in good order each electric light in the parks mentioned.

And insert:

Provided, That hereafter there shall be no extension of electric-lighting service, and it shall be unlawful to open any of the streets, roads, avenues, alleys, or other public highways, or any of the parks or reservations in the District of Columbia for the purpose of laying electric wires, cables, or conduits therein until specifically authorized by law.

So as to make the clause read:

For lighting 32 arc electric lights in Lafayette, Franklin, Judiciary, and Lincoln parks, three hundred and sixty-five nights, at 25 cents per light per night, which shall cover the entire cost to the United States of lighting and maintaining in good order each electric light in said parks, $2,920: Provided, That hereafter there shall be no extension of electric-lighting service, and it shall be unlawful to open any of the streets, roads, avenues, alleys, or other public highways, or any of the parks or reservations in the District of Columbia for the purpose of laying electric wires, cables, or conduits therein until specifically authorized by law.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment on page 81, from line 7 to line 24, inclusive, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over, if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 83, line 11, before the word "thousand," to insert "and fifty;" and in line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which not less than $50,000 shall be expended at the military post at Spokane, Wash.;" so as to make the clause read:

For the construction of buildings at, and the enlargement of such military posts as, in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, $450,000, of which not less than $50,000 shall be expended at the military post at Spokane, Wash.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 15, after the word "available," to insert: "And not more than $10,000 shall be expended for the completion of a road, beginning on the Ishawood River, at the east line of the forest reserve, adjacent to the Yellowstone Park on the east and continuing up said river as nearly as practicable across the forest reserve of the national park, south of the Yellowstone Lake, and to a junction with the present park road system;" and in line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improvement of the Yellowstone National Park: For the repair and maintenance of existing roads and bridges and improvement and protection of the Yellowstone National Park, to be expended by and under the direction of the Secretary of War, including not exceeding $5,000 to be immediately available; and not more than $10,000 shall be expended for the completion of a road, beginning on the Ishawood River, at the east line of the forest reserve adjacent to the Yellowstone Park on the east, and continuing up said river as nearly as practicable across the forest reserve of the national park, south of the Yellowstone Lake, and to a junction with the present park road system, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 12, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

And the Secretary of War may lease the lands of the park at his discretion either to former owners or other persons for agricultural purposes, the proceeds to be applied by the Secretary of War, through the proper disbursing officer, to the maintenance of the park.

So as to make the clause read:

Gettysburg National Park: For continuing the work of establishing the National Park at Gettysburg, Pa.; for the acquisition of lands, surveys, and maps; constructing, improving, and maintaining avenues, roads, and bridges thereon; making fences and gates, marking the lines of battle with tablets and guns, each tablet bearing a brief legend giving historic facts and compiled without censure and without praise; preserving the features of the battlefield and the monuments thereon; providing for a suitable office for the commissioners in Gettysburg; compensation of three civilian commissioners, clerical and other services; expenses, and labor; the purchase and preparation of tablets and gun carriages and placing them in position, and all other expenses incidental to the foregoing, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "three hundred and seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving Hudson River, New York: Continuing improvement, $375,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that amendment be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over, without objection.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 88, line 17, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving harbor and bay at Humboldt, Cal.: Continuing improvement, $300,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that may be passed over also. We have reduced the amount reported from the House.

Mr. WHITE. The request is that the amendment shall go over, I understand?

Mr. ALLISON. That it shall go over until this afternoon. I desire that the others shall be read, so that we shall not be obliged to recur to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 88, line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving channel in Gowanus Bay, New York: For improving Bay Ridge Channel, the triangular area between Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels, and Red Hook and Buttermilk channels in the harbor of New York, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 88, line 24, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Savannah, Ga.: For continuing improvement, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 1, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cumberland Sound, Georgia and Florida: For continuing improvement, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 6, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Portland, Me.: For continuing improvement, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 8, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Rockland, Me.: For continuing improvement, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 10, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Boston, Mass.: For continuing improvement, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 89, line 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "four hundred and twelve thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Buffalo, N. Y.: For continuing improvement, $412,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 89, line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four hundred and fifty thousand six hundred and sixty-eight" and insert "three hundred and thirty-eight thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Harbor of refuge, Delaware Bay, Delaware: For continuing construction, $338,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 89, line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Winyaw Bay, South Carolina: For continuing improvement of harbor at Winyaw Bay, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 90, line 1, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Sabine Pass, Texas: For continuing improvement of harbor at Sabine Pass, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 4, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Cleveland, Ohio: For continuing improvement, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "three hundred and seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Duluth, Minn., and Superior, Wis.: For continuing improvement, $375,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 90, after line 11, to insert:

Improving harbor at Oakland, Cal.: For continuing improvement under present limit, $200,000. And the provision of the "Act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1896, relating to improving harbor at Oakland, Cal., is hereby amended to read as follows

"Improving harbor at Oakland, Cal.: Continuing improvement under existing project, $20,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute work on said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $666,000: Provided further, That in making such contract or contracts the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than 25 per cent of the whole amount hereby authorized to be expended."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. At this point I would suggest to the chairman of the committee that I should like to insert an amendment with which the Senator from Iowa is familiar, which gives Mr. Rogers, a member of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, who was appointed upon the Santa Monica and San Pedro board, the same privileges accorded to Admiral Walker, to wit, the right to collect the amount of money, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, which he may expend for his maintenance during his service there. I believe there is no objection to the amendment, as it simply puts him upon the basis upon which we put Admiral Walker the other day by a bill which passed both Houses of Congress. It is a very small matter, and I presume there is no desire to discriminate against him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. After line 6, page 91, it is proposed to insert:

The officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey detailed to serve on the board to locate a deep-water harbor for commerce and of refuge at Port Los Angeles, in Santa Monica Bay, California, or at San Pedro, in said State, which board was created by an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1896, United States Statutes at Large, page 213, shall receive from the appropriation in said act provided with relation to said harbor, in addition to his mileage provided for in section 1560 of the Revised Statutes, and notwithstanding its provisions, such a per diem allowance for subsistence as the Secretary of War may deem proper.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not object to the amendment, as it is only allowing to this officer what has already been allowed to Admiral Walker; but I desire to say that it is my wish that no amendment shall be offered to the bill to-night that has not been considered by the committee. I merely give that notice now.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest that the amendment might be considered as agreed to, having been read, so that we may not have to go through with it again hereafter. I think no one will have any objection to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. My object is that we may be able to say to those Senators who are not present at this late hour that there has nothing been done upon the bill to-night that does not appear either in our printed amendments or in the printed bill.

Mr. WHITE. Let it be understood, then, that when this point in the bill is reached, this amendment shall be considered in its regular order, being considered as open, not to go in the bill at this time, but that it will be resuggested to the Senate when we consider the bill again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will appear.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee what was done with the amendment on page 54 in regard to continuing investigations in regard to Alaska seals?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was adopted.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to have the amendment reconsidered, as I wish to move a substitute for the whole paragraph this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks that the amendment on page 54 be reconsidered.

Mr. ALLISON. By unanimous consent that may be done.

Mr. NELSON. That does not apply after the words "ninety-eight" in line 15.

Mr. ALLISON. No; the Senator from South Dakota desires to offer a substitute for the first portion of that amendment.

Mr. NELSON. From the end of the fifth line down to the word "and," in line 15.

Mr. WHITE. From the end of line 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-eight," in line 15.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not know that I care anything about the claim that seems to have been put in here.

Mr. ALLISON. These are not claims. They are accounts allowed to these officers who went out to these islands last year.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I did not object to it if it was a claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota desire that the amendment be reconsidered?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Yes. From line 6 to line 15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be reconsidered.

Mr. PETTIGREW. And let the item be passed over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over without action.

Mr. ALLISON. It is reconsidered by unanimous consent.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 91, line 8, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Grays Harbor, Washington: For continuing improvement of harbor and bar entrance, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 91, line 16, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Locks and dams in Allegheny River, Pennsylvania: For continuing improvement by construction of locks and dams at Herr Island, above the head of Six-Mile Island, and at Springdale, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 91, after line 16, to insert:

Improving the Great Kanawha River, West Virginia: Completing improvement, $273,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 91, line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving upper Monongahela River, West Virginia: For continuing improvement by the construction of six locks and dams, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. SQUIRE. At line 7, page 9, after conference with the chairman, I wish to introduce an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. There is an agreement that the committee amendments shall be first considered. The Senator did not hear me say a moment ago that it is my wish that no amendments shall be offered to-night that are not found in the printed bill.

Mr. SQUIRE. I might pursue the same course the Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] did, and offer the amendment for consideration hereafter.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that would confuse the action on the bill more or less. I trust the Senator will not press it now.

Mr. SQUIRE. All I want is to get it before the Senate at the proper time, and I thought I could do as the Senator from California did just now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 91, after line 22, to insert:

Improving the Ohio River: For continuing construction of Dams Nos. 2, 3, and 4, between Davis Island Dam and Dam No. 6, $400,000; and the provision in the river and harbor appropriation act of June 3, 1896, authorizing contracts to be made for improving Ohio River by the construction of dams Nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for the whole or any part of the material and work as may be necessary to prosecute work on said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $1,999,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That in making such contract or contracts the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than 25 per cent of the whole amount authorized to be expended."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 92, after line 17, to insert:

Improving Kentucky River, Kentucky: For completing locks and dams Nos. 7 and 8, $300,000; and the provision of the "Act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1896, relating to improving Kentucky River, Kentucky, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute work on said improvement in accordance with the present project for same, to be paid for as appropriatons may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $1,349,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided, That of the amount authorized to be expended, $83,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in addition to the $50,000 herein appropriated in continuing construction and completion of Lock and Dam No. 7, by contract or otherwise: Provided further, That in making such contract or contracts the Secretary of War shall not obligate the Government to pay in any one fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1897, more than 25 per cent of the whole amount authorized to be expended."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Yazoo River, Mississippi: For continuing improvement of mouth of Yazoo River and harbor of Vicksburg, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 93, line 23, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Bayou Plaquemine, Louisiana: For continuing improvement, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 94, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cumberland River above Nashville, Tenn.: For continuing improvement by construction of locks Nos. 5, 6, and 7, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 94, line 6, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Falls of Ohio River at Louisville, Ky.: For continuing improvement, including Indiana Chute Falls, $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 94, line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert:

In pursuance of the provisions of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and improvement of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1896: and it is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of the said provisions of said act relating to the improvement of said Chicago River, that all of the work in the improvement of said river which was recommended or suggested to be done in the interest of commerce by Capt. William L. Marshall, of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, in his report of August 9, 1893, may be done: Provided, That the total cost of such improvement or work shall not exceed the limit provided for in said act.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Chicago River, Illinois: For continuing improvement from its mouth to the stock yards on the South Branch, and to Belmont avenue on the North Branch, $113,000, in pursuance of the provisions of "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and improvement of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1896; and it is hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of the said provisions of said act relating to the improvement of said Chicago River that all of the work in the improvement of said river which was recommended or suggested to be done in the interest of commerce by Capt. William L. Marshall, of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, in his report of August 9, 1893, may be done: Provided, That the total cost of such improvement or work shall not exceed the limit provided for in said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 95, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one million" and insert "seven hundred and fifty thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Illinois and Mississippi Canal: For continuing construction, $750,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment in relation to the Illinois and Mississippi Canal, which has just been stated, goes over without action.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 95, line 7, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving waterway from Keweenaw Bay to Lake Superior, Michigan: For continuing improvement of water communication across Keweenaw Point, $300,000.

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment should also go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 95, line 13, after the word "cents," to strike out:

And of the sum heretofore appropriated and authorized to be expended and contracted for during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1898, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, the said Secretary of War is directed to expend so much as may be necessary, not exceeding $100,000, to prevent the Mississippi River from breaking through into Cache River at or near a point known as Beach Ridge, a few miles north of Cairo.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio River to St. Paul, Minn.: For continuing improvement from the mouth of the Ohio River to the mouth of the Missouri River, $673,333.33.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will go over without action.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 96, line 16, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And of the sum heretofore appropriated and authorized to be expended and contracted for during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1898, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, the said Secretary of War is directed to expend so much as may be necessary, not exceeding $100,000, to prevent the Mississippi River from breaking through into Cache River at or near a point known as Beach Ridge, a few miles north of Cairo.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Mississippi River: For continuing improvement of Mississippi River from Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including salaries, clerical, office, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Mississippi River Commission, $2,583,333; and of the sum heretofore appropriated and authorized to be expended and contracted for during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1898, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, the said Secretary of War is directed to expend so much as may be necessary, not exceeding $100,000, to prevent the Mississippi River from breaking through into Cache River at or near a point known as Beach Ridge, a few miles north of Cairo.

Mr. ALLISON. That should be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 97, after line 9, to insert:

A sum not exceeding $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the money heretofore appropriated for the construction of reservoirs at the head waters of the Mississippi River, may be used and is hereby made available for the payment of damages for lands and tenements overflowed or injured by the construction of a reservoir and dam at Gull Lake, Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Going back to page 96, there is an amendment there to which I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee. The Committee on Commerce recommended the insertion of that amendment, in the first instance, to the Committee on Appropriations. We afterwards had a meeting of the Committee on Commerce, and decided to rescind that, and asked the Committee on Appropriations to keep it out. I do not know whether that action was communicated to the Committee on Appropriations or not, but that is what the Committee on Commerce finally did.

Mr. ALLISON. It was not communicated to our committee.

Mr. NELSON. Well, I have done my duty.

Mr. ALLISON. I have requested the Chair to pass that amendment over, and it has been passed over.

Mr. NELSON. If it has been passed over, very well; I do not want to delay matters.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 97, in line 9, after the word "Nebraska," I move to insert "to be immediately available;" so as to make the appropriation for continuing improvement of the Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City, Iowa, immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 97, after line 16, to insert:

And hereafter the Secretary of War shall annually submit estimates in detail for river and harbor improvements required for the ensuing fiscal year to the Secretary of the Treasury to be included in, and carried into the sum total of, the Book of Estimates; and all such river and harbor estimates shall be considered and reported upon in a separate bill by the committee of each House having charge of river and harbor improvements.

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment should go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 99, after line 15, to insert:

Road to national cemetery, Pensacola, Fla.: For the purpose of shelling or otherwise improving to completion the roadway from Pensacola, Fla., to the national cemetery near that city, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 99, after line 21, to insert:

Road to national cemetery, Springfield, Mo.: For the construction and completion of an extension of Phelps boulevard, the Government road from Springfield, Mo., to the national cemetery near that city, beginning at the north end of said boulevard and extending north to East Walnut street, a distance of about 834 feet, $2,700, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That a right of way 25 feet in width is donated to the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 101, after line 9, to insert:

For constructing an additional building for the Garfield Memorial Hospital, $35,000: Provided, That said hospital shall dedicate to the District of Columbia the ground for widening Florida and Grant avenues in conformity with the adopted and recorded plans of highway extensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 103, after line 3, to insert:

Military road, Wyoming: For the construction of a military road from Fort Washakie, Wyo., by the most practicable route near the Wind River and to the mouth of the Buffalo Fork of Snake River, near Jacksons Lake, in Uinta County, Wyo., to be expended under the direction of the War Department, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 103, after line 10, to insert:

Deep Waterways Commission: For surveys and examinations (including estimate of cost) of deep waterways and the routes thereof, between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic tide waters, as recommended by the report of the Deep Waterways Commission transmitted by the President to Congress January 18, 1897, $150,000. Such examinations and surveys shall be made by a board of three engineers, to be designated by the President, one of whom may be detailed from the Engineer Corps of the Army, one from the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and one shall be appointed from civil life.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 103, after line 22, to insert:

Improvement of Pearl Harbor: For the improvement of the entrance to Pearl Harbor, Hawaiian Islands, according to the report of Rear-Admiral J. G. Walker, submitted in Senate Executive Document No. 42, Fifty-third Congress, third session, $50,000, to be expended by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, after line 3, to insert:

Memorial bridge across Potomac River: To enable the Chief of Engineers of the Army to make the necessary surveys, soundings, and borings, and for securing designs and estimates for a memorial bridge from the most convenient point of the Naval Observatory grounds, or adjacent thereto, across the Potomac River to the most convenient point of the Arlington estate property, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, after line 23, to insert:

For brick water-closet building, $1,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 107, to insert:

For building for out-ward of hospital, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

That the Joint Committee on Printing shall cause to be prepared requisite plans for the necessary additions and improvements to the Government Printing Office which shall be fully adequate to meet all the present and future requirements of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 135, line 12, after the word "ninety-seven," to insert:

,and the time for such distribution by members of Congress reelected shall continue during their successive terms and until their right to frank documents shall end. And no copyright shall issue to any person for said compilation or any part thereof, but said compiler shall prepare a full table of contents and a complete index for such compilation, and he shall be paid therefor by the Public Printer, out of the appropriation for public printing and binding, such sum as the Joint Committee on Printing shall decide to be just and proper.

So as to make the clause read:

And provided further, That the time within which members of the Fifty-fourth Congress who are reelected to the Fifty-fifth Congress are required to designate persons to whom said compilation shall be sent, be, and same is, extended to include the term of the Fifty-fifth Congress; and that the time within which members of the Fifty-fourth Congress who are not reelected to the Fifty-fifth Congress are required to designate persons to whom said compilation shall be sent be, and is hereby, extended to the 1st day of December, 1897. That the time allowed members of the Fifty-fourth Congress to distribute public documents now to their credit, or the credit of their respective districts in the Interior or other Departments, and to present the names of libraries, public institutions, and individuals to receive such documents, be, and the same is hereby, extended to December 1, 1897, and the time for such distribution by members of Congress reelected shall continue during their successive terms and until their right to frank documents shall end, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m., Sunday, February 28, 1897). In accordance with its order, the Senate will now take a recess until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 27, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PRINTING OF COMMERCIAL RELATIONS FOR 1895 AND 1896.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PERKINS], chairman of the Committee on Printing, moves to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print for distribution by the Department of State, 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations for 1895 and 1896, and (in separate form) 10,000 copies of the Review of the World's Commerce, etc., being part of said Commercial Relations.

The report (by Mr. PERKINS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration House concurrent resolution No. 73, to print for distribution by the Department of State 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations for 1895 and 1896, and (in separate form) 10,000 copies of the Review of the World's Commerce, etc., being a part of said Commercial Relations, recommend that the same be agreed to.

This resolution is suggested by the President in a message transmitting a letter from the Secretary of State, communicated to the House of Representatives February 26, 1897, and ordered printed.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of the work under this resolution at $6,500.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

There was no demand for a second.

Accordingly (two-thirds voting in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

EXPENDITURES IN THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, submitted a statement of expenditures of the contingent appropriations for the Navy Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and asked that it be printed as a House document.

Mr. DOCKERY. What expenditures are reported here?

Mr. THOMAS. The contingent expenditures of the Navy Department, the contingent miscellaneous expenditures of the Hydrographic Office, and the contingent miscellaneous expenditures of the Naval Observatory.

Mr. DOCKERY. Has it been customary to print this?

Mr. THOMAS. It is customary to print it for the benefit of the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the printing as a House document will be ordered.

There was no objection.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUBLIC LANDS FOR CANALS, ETC.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to permit the use of the right of way through the public lands for tramroads, canals, and reservoirs, and for other purposes," approved January 21, 1895, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following: "That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him, to permit the use of right of way upon the public lands of the United States, not within limits of any park, forest, military or Indian reservations, for tramways, canals, or reservoirs, to the extent of the ground occupied by the water of the canals and reservoirs, and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof, or 50 feet on each side of the center line of the tramroad, by any citizen or association of citizens of the United States, for the purposes of furnishing water for domestic, public, and other beneficial uses.

"SEC. 2. That rights of way for ditches, canals, or reservoirs heretofore or hereafter approved under the provisions of sections 18, 19, 20, and 21 of the act entitled 'An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1891, may be used for purposes of a public nature; and said rights of way may be used for purposes of water transportation, for domestic purposes, or for the development of power, as subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation."

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second, in order to secure an explanation of the bill.

Mr. BOWERS. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] asks that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Also:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the two Houses of Congress 10,000 copies of the tariff hearings of the Committee on Ways and Means during the second session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, of which 3,250 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 6,750 copies for the use of the House.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3608) setting apart a plot of public ground in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for memorial purposes under the auspices of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman from California yield to me, so that I may make a motion with reference to a bill that has just come over from the Senate—in reference to the Indian appropriation bill. I simply desire to move, Mr. Speaker, that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments to the Indian appropriation bill, and ask for a conference.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, pending that——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

Mr. FLYNN. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order on the bill under Rule XX:

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

There is an amendment in that bill as it passed the Senate which changes the Territorial boundaries of Oklahoma and takes out 4,000 square miles of country and attaches it to the Indian Territory. I want it considered in the House if it is considered anywhere, Mr. Speaker; and I submit that point of order, if the Chair will hear me.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; the Chair will listen to the gentleman.

Mr. FLYNN. In the provisions of a bill I had the honor to have passed, the Senate amended it, and it came back here, and the Chair held under this rule that it was necessary, as it contained new matter, that it should be considered in Committee of the Whole, and it was referred to the committee; and after it came from the committee it went to the Calendar. The same provision——

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is impossible for us to hear what the gentleman is saying.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order, and gentlemen will cease conversation.

Mr. FLYNN. Under Rule XX, where any new legislation has been added to a House bill, as has been done in this Indian appropriation bill, it is not subject to be referred to a committee of conference where new legislation that the House is entitled to consider in the Committee of the Whole has been added to it by the Senate. I made that point upon a very similar bill. I am specially interested in this bill, because of the fact that it undertakes to dismember the Territory which I have the honor to represent. Therefore, I make the point that under that rule this bill is not subject, under that point, as my attention has been called to it, to go to a committee of conference, notwithstanding the fact of the request of the Senate, and although they have appointed conferees, as previously held on the bill H. R. 3656.

The SPEAKER. On what ground does the gentleman make it a matter to be considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. FLYNN. Under this rule, that it contains new matter, which, if originating in the House, would make it subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. How would it be subject to the point of order if it originated in the House?

Mr. FLYNN. It would be new legislation on an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. It has not that meaning under the rule.

Mr. FLYNN. In addition to its being new legislation, there are other new appropriations in this bill.

The SPEAKER. But new legislation on an appropriation bill is not subject to the point of order that it must be considered in the Committee of the Whole. It is subject to the point of order that it can not be considered at all. But new legislation coming from the Senate is not treated in that way.

Mr. FLYNN. If the Speaker will pardon me, there are additional appropriations all through this bill, in amendments placed on it in the Senate, which are not proper on an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. That may be, but the gentleman made his point of order that this particular amendment should be considered in Committee of the Whole. Now, will the gentleman state upon what ground?

Mr. FLYNN. It makes new appropriations, and fixes a new court there, that would involve a charge upon the Treasury if no other; but in addition to that, there are lots of other appropriations in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Those items, if that be true, could be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FLYNN. But not this one. This one is obnoxious to the point of order. It contains a proviso for the establishment of a new court.

The SPEAKER. It simply provides that two terms of the United States court shall be held.

Mr. FLYNN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that that is a matter that would go to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. FLYNN. Does the Chair think that a term of the United States court can be held without any charge on the Treasury?

The SPEAKER. It has already been provided for. That has been done often.

Mr. FLYNN. I beg the pardon of the Speaker, there has never been a term of the United States court held there.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not remember ever having a case where an increase in the sittings of the United States court should go to the Committee of the Whole. If the gentleman can point out any such instance, the Chair would be glad for him to do so.

Mr. FLYNN. Then, in order to save the point, I will make it on another appropriation, made in reference to a provision for distributing the pay to the Creek Indians out of the Treasury, $300,000.

The SPEAKER. Where is that amendment?

Mr. FLYNN. It was offered last night in the Senate. I will find the RECORD directly.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Chair will permit me, I will put my motion in another form. I will move to suspend the rules, which I believe I have a right to do, and nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference thereon. I assume that that motion is not subject to any point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, moves that the rules be suspended, that the Senate amendments be nonconcurred in, and that a committee of conference be asked for.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know how a suspension of the rules can do away with the rule which I have cited.

The SPEAKER. The suspension of the rules does away with all of them.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the rules were suspended, the Senate amendments were nonconcurred in, and the House asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, and Mr. PENDLETON.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH PUBLIC LANDS FOR CANALS, ETC.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, the whole purpose of this bill is to amend the law, which now permits the use of a right of way "for tramroads, canals, reservoirs, and other purposes," by adding a provision that it may be given also "for domestic purposes."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. What is meant by "domestic purposes"?

Mr. BOWERS. Furnishing water for use for domestic purposes in houses and such uses. The existing law has been strictly construed. The bill was referred to the Interior Department, and the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner both suggested amendments. The bill has been amended in accordance with their recommendations and is now fully approved by the Department. The amendment is quite necessary. We may now cross public lands, but this does not give any right to cross reservations or parks or anything of that kind. It simply gives this permission for domestic purposes.

The rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH FORT MORGAN RESERVATION.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, being a bill (H. R. 10304) to repeal chapter 1061, Fiftieth Congress, approved October 1, 1888, being an act to grant right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That chapter 1061, Fiftieth Congress, approved October 1, 1888, being an act to grant the right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Where does that bill come from?

Mr. HULL. It is recommended by the War Department.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has been prepared by the War Department, and it is very anxiously urged that it be passed now, so that the fortifications of Mobile Bay may be proceeded with. If gentlemen desire it, the report can be read, which gives a very full explanation of the whole situation. This railroad company has not entered upon the reservation at all or taken any steps to avail itself of the right of way, but in January of this year the Board of Fortifications located three batteries right on the line that has been granted as a right of way, and the authorities of the War Department believe that this repeal is necessary in order to prevent any trouble which might arise hereafter from the railroad company claiming the ground under the act passed by the Fiftieth Congress. This bill is recommended by the engineers of the Army and by the Secretary of War.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What committee reports the bill?

Mr. HULL. The Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would be glad to hear the report read, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HULL. Let the report be read in full.

The report (by Mr. HULL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10304) entitled "A bill to repeal chapter 1061, Fiftieth Congress, approved October 1, 1888," being an act to grant right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile, and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes, having considered the same, recommend that it do pass.

[House Document No. 228, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 28, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit, herewith, a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated January 13, 1897, recommending the repeal of the act approved October 1, 1888 (H. R. 10679, Fiftieth Congress, first session), copy inclosed, granting to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company certain rights of way through the military reservation of Fort Morgan, Ala., bearing an indorsement from the Major-General Commanding the Army, concurring in the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers.

Very respectfully,
DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith letters of Mr. J. D. McCormick, of December 12, 1896, and January 2, 1897, concerning the right of way through the Fort Morgan Military Reservation, granted by act of Congress approved October 1, 1888, to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company.

The locality of which Mr. McCormick desires Coast Survey map is embraced in Chart No. 168 of that survey, Mobile Bay and entrances. This chart is not distributed by this Department, but it may be purchased from the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, Washington, D. C., at 50 cents per copy.

The act of Congress mentioned (copy inclosed) grants to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company a right of way through the Fort Morgan (Ala.) Military Reservation, on a line described in the act, with terminal facilities and the right to erect a wharf and to fill into the water along the said right of way, "and thus acquire additional space and to enjoy other riparian rights." This act does not require the approval of the Secretary of War of the rights granted, except as to the location and dimensions of the wharf and buildings thereon and such docks as he may permit to be erected along the right of way; nor does it contain any limitations as to the time of commencing or of completing work. It is provided in the act that Congress may at any time cancel the concession granted by it. So far as is known to this office, the act has not been repealed nor amended.

At the time of the consideration of this act in 1888 the probability of construction of modern works of fortification at Fort Morgan was remote. Since that time, however, extensive works of defense have been commenced and are now in progress there, and a garrison or a post guard probably will be stationed there.

In my opinion, under the conditions now existing, and likely for some time to exist, at Fort Morgan, no railroad company should be permitted to extend its road so far through the reservation. It is believed that there is ample space outside and to the eastward of the military reservation for the purposes of the railway company.

The reason for desiring to enter upon the reservation is because of the greater ease of reaching deep water with a wharf, and therefore a decrease of construction expenses. No compensation of any kind is offered to the United States for this valuable concession.

The records of this office do not show that the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company has availed itself of any of the privileges granted by the act mentioned, although a period of more than eight years has elapsed since the passage and approval of the act.

A blue print showing the Fort Morgan Reservation, the proposed location of the batteries (A, B, and C), and the right of way granted to the railway company is herewith. It will be noted that, should the road be built, access to the reservation on the bay or sheltered front will be entirely cut off excepting at the site of the present Government wharf. The difficulty of guarding the reservation and the defensive works there against trespass by an undesirable class of people will be largely increased.

I have the honor to recommend that Congress be requested to repeal the act of October 1, 1888, hereinbefore referred to, and to cancel all concessions thereby made to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company. Should it seem desirable later to permit access to the reservation on lines under the control of the Secretary of War, such access can be granted by revocable lease, under act of Congress approved July 28, 1892 (27 Stat. L., 321), under terms which would permit at least a partial control over the operations of the lessees, and some compensation to the United States for the privilege granted. As the care of the reservation and of the defensive works when built will be in the charge of troops, it is suggested that the matter be referred to the Commanding General of the Army for his consideration.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
W. P. CRAIGHILL,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Engineers.

Hon. DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

[First indorsement.]

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, Washington, January 21, 1897.

Respectfully returned to the honorable the Secretary of War, concurring with the Chief of Engineers in the within recommendation.

NELSON A. MILES,
Major-General Commanding.

An act to grant the right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there is hereby granted to the Birmingham, Mobile and Navy Cove Harbor Railway Company the right of way through the military reservation at Fort Morgan, Ala., for roadbed, tracks, side tracks, and terminal facilities, not exceeding 50 feet in width, along the northern high-water line of said reservation and extending from the eastern boundary of the said reservation westward along the shore to a point 100 feet east of the east side of the present Government dock, at or near which point the said company may erect a wharf, after the Secretary of War shall have approved of the location and dimensions thereof, with such sheds and buildings as can be accommodated thereon, and the said company shall also have the right to fill into the water along the right of way so granted, and thus acquire additional space and to enjoy other riparian rights: Provided, however, That no buildings or other incumbrances shall be erected on said right of way except upon said wharf, but the Secretary of War may give permission for the erection along said right of way of a dock or docks upon limitations to be prescribed by him: And provided further, That Congress may at any time cancel this concession, and the President may, when in his judgment necessity demands, destroy any structures hereby authorized.

Approved October 1, 1888 (25 Stat. L., 500).

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH FORT SPOKANE MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a Senate bill (S. 3561) to grant a right of way through the Fort Spokane Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby granted to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company a right of way 100 feet wide, on such route as the Secretary of War may designate, through the Fort Spokane Military Reservation, in the State of Washington. If said railroad shall not be built across said reservation within three years next after the passage of this act this grant shall absolutely cease and determine.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a second, in order to have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the Government is now erecting a post at Spokane Falls, in the State of Washington. The Secretary of War reports that if we do not grant this right of way, under the restrictions provided in the bill it will be necessary for the Government to build a temporary road into the reservation for the purpose of carrying supplies during the construction of the post. The Secretary further reports that the road will be a permanent benefit to the post in the delivery of supplies. If gentlemen desire it, I ask that the report from the War Department, which is very short, be read. I think it will give all the information desired on this subject.

Mr. TERRY. Ought not this bill to contain the usual provision, reserving to the Government the right to cancel this concession? We have just had before us a bill to repeal one of these concessions.

Mr. HULL. This bill was prepared at the War Department; and it provides that the Secretary of War shall regulate where this road shall run.

Mr. TERRY. I think the bill ought to contain such a provision as I have indicated. The bill which we had under consideration a few moments ago illustrates the importance of a reservation of this kind.

Mr. HULL. After the report is read, if the gentleman desires to offer an amendment, I shall have no objection. I have presented the bill just as it has been sent to us by the War Department. The bill has already passed the Senate; and I suggest that at this late day of the session it would be well not to add an amendment, unless it be considered very vital. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. HULL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10062) to grant a right of way through the Fort Spokane Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company, having considered the same, recommend that the bill do pass, and attach hereto as a part of the report the letter of the Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 20, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith House bill 10062, Fifty-fourth Congress, "to grant a right of way through the Fort Spokane Military Reservation," etc., which has been referred to me for information.

This Department not only has no objection to the passage of the bill, but recommends its favorable consideration. The route proposed to be designated, and which is understood to be satisfactory to the railroad company, will insure railroad facilities for the post now building at Spokane, and which would otherwise be constructed at Government expense. The route will also be more direct and convenient in other respects than now exists.

Very respectfully,

DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. JOHN A. T. HULL,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

Mr. TERRY. I move to amend the bill by adding these words:

Provided, That the right to repeal, alter, or amend this act is hereby reserved.

Mr. HULL. I hardly think that amendment is in order. I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HYDE], who, I think, can satisfy the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] as to the propriety of this bill.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, this reservation is a large one; and the route over which the railroad company expect to build this road will not interfere with the use and occupation of the reservation by the Government. The reservation was donated to the United States. I am familiar with it. It is located within 3 miles of the city of Spokane, where I live. The difficulty in regard to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Arkansas is that its adoption would probably result in the failure of the bill. The bill already provides that the Secretary of War shall fix the location of the road, and that it must be built within three years. It will be an advantage to the Government to have the road built, because it will facilitate access to the reservation, there now being no railroad less than 3 miles distant from the reservation. I hope the gentleman will not press the amendment.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I have no idea that the adoption of this amendment by the House will defeat the passage of the bill, because bills granting concessions to companies of this kind can always get consideration at either end of this Capitol. I have no doubt that this amendment could be concurred in five minutes after the return of the bill to the Senate. I think the provision an important one to the Government. In the action we have just taken with regard to Fort Morgan, we have seen the importance of a reservation of this kind. While, looking at the matter from the present point of view, it may appear that we shall never need to cancel this concession, yet circumstances might change so as to make it very important to the Government to repeal this act. I insist upon the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to say a word to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY]. The Secretary of War recommends the passage of this bill. This is a new post. The site was donated to the Government by citizens of Spokane. The reservation is a large one. It seems inevitable that we should construct a small post there. Let me say to my friend that, having a fairly full knowledge of the matter, I do not think any trouble will ever result from the action proposed. In fact the tendency and necessities of the Government with regard to posts are toward the seaboard. It is inevitable—and no doubt proper enough—that we should erect a small post on this reservation. But, after all, when this small post is completed, it will probably be larger than it ever will be again.

Mr. TERRY. Does my friend from Illinois think that this amendment would endanger the enactment of the measure into a law?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I do not know. These are the closing hours of the session, and the Senate, if it performs its functions in the passage of appropriation bills, has apparently on its hands as much as it can get through with between now and the adjournment.

Mr. TERRY. I have so much confidence in the judgment of my friend from Illinois, and he has appealed to me so strongly, that for his sake, and in view of the special circumstances stated by him, I withdraw the amendment.

The question being taken, the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

SUGAR LOAF RESERVOIR SITE, COLORADO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move that the rules be suspended so as to pass with amendments the bill (S. 2232) to vacate Sugar Loaf reservoir site, in Colorado, and to restore the lands contained in the same to entry.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. LACEY. The gentleman's motion is to pass the Senate bill with amendments, and those amendments appear in the bill by interlineation.

The bill as amended was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public land embraced in the reservoir site known as Sugar Loaf Reservoir site, No. 5, located in Lake County, Colo., which was withdrawn from entry and settlement under the provisions of the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved October 2, 1888, is hereby restored to the public domain, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of the same at public auction, after three days' notice by advertisement, at a price not less than $2.50 per acre, under such regulations as he may prescribe, so as to secure the early building and permanent maintenance of a reservoir for the storage of water to increase the flow of the Arkansas River as contemplated by the Government in reserving the reservoir sites of the arid region. But nothing herein shall prevent the purchasers or their assigns from using said water for mechanical, manufacturing, or other purpose, which does not materially lessen said contemplated increased flow: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive the State of Colorado of the control of the water in any reservoir which may be constructed on this site by any person or corporation or association, under the regulations provided by the State laws in such cases.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, in order to have an explanation, I demand a second.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent is asked that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to have read, in his time, the report of the Interior Department upon this subject, because I regard it as a matter of some importance that the House should act understandingly upon this question. Whoever owns the reservoir sites controls a very large acreage of the surrounding land. I believe Congress some years ago passed an act reserving these reservoir sites from entry.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will explain that. I ask for the reading of the report in my time.

Mr. SAYERS. We do not want, in the closing hours of this Congress, to undo what Congress deliberately did several years ago.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will explain that fully.

Mr. SAYERS. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. SHAFROTH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2232) entitled "A bill to vacate Sugar Loaf Reservoir site in Colorado and to restore the lands contained in the same to entry," respectfully report:

Under and by virtue of acts of Congress, passed October 2, 1888, and August 30, 1890, various reservoir sites were reserved by the United States from entry under the public-land laws. It is difficult to find the purpose of the Government in reserving these reservoir sites, unless it was in contemplation of entering upon a system of internal improvements in constructing reservoirs for the purpose of irrigating the public arid lands. The Government has done nothing since that time toward making such improvements. It is manifestly unfair that the Government should prevent the utilization of reservoir sites, unless it intends to improve the same.

The Sugar Loaf Reservoir site is situate about 6 miles from Leadville, Colo. Over 600 acres situate in the center thereof was taken up under the land laws of the United States and patents thereto issued prior to the time it was reserved by the Government. It is not likely that the Government, under those conditions, would ever utilize this reservoir site even if it should enter upon a policy of building reservoirs.

The bill simply restores the land embraced in such site not heretofore patented to the public domain, subject to disposal according to existing law at double the ordinary Government price.

The Interior Department has approved the passage of this bill, as shown by the letter hereto annexed.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of this bill.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 12, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference from Department, for report in duplicate and return of papers of a letter of Hon. H. M. TELLER, inclosing copy of a bill (S. 2232) requesting the opinion of the Department whether it would be in the interest of the Government to have a reservoir constructed upon this site by private parties.

The bill is entitled "A bill to vacate Sugar Loaf Reservoir site in Colorado and to restore the lands contained in the same to entry," and provides "that the public land embraced in the reservoir site known as Sugar Loaf Reservoir site, numbered 5, located in Lake County, Colo., which was withdrawn from entry and settlement under the provisions of the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government, approved October 2, 1888, is hereby restored to the public domain, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to dispose of the same at the price of $2.50 per acre under such regulations as he may prescribe: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive the State of Colorado of the control of the water in any reservoir which may be constructed on this site by any person or corporation or association, under the regulations provided by the State laws in such cases."

The reservoir site designated covers an area of 1,914.96 acres, of which about 1,058.13 are subject to reservation, the remaining 856.83 acres having been taken up under the public-land laws.

The reservoir site was recommended for segregation by the Director of the Geological Survey October 11, 1889, and October 28, 1889. The segregation was approved by the Secretary of the Interior August 13, 1894. The land involved was, by virtue of that approval, reserved under the terms of the act of October 2, 1888 (25 Stat. L., 505-526), as amended by act of August 30, 1890 (26 Stat. L., 371-391).

The records of this office show that on October 24, 1892, an application for right of way, under sections 18 to 21, act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 1095), for a reservoir by certain individuals was rejected, and that on October 1, 1895, another application under the same act was rejected, this office holding that sites segregated under the terms of the acts of 1888 and 1890, supra, were not subject to appropriation under the act of 1891, supra. No appeal was taken from either of these decisions.

It is apparent that the purpose of the bill is to cause the lands embraced in the Sugar Loaf Reservoir site to be appropriated for the purposes contemplated by their segregation, to wit, for irrigation, and that the bill is intended to afford relief which was denied by the action of this office in holding that these sites were not subject to appropriation and use for reservoir purposes under the act of March 3, 1891.

Since the decision above referred to was rendered, I rendered a decision on November 23, 1895, upon the application of the Blue Water Land and Irrigation Company, a copy of which is herewith transmitted, in which it was held that the act of March 3, 1891, was intended to provide the means for the utilization of those sites and that it fulfilled the purposes contemplated by their segregation.

To allow these sites to be appropriated under the act of March 3, 1891, would, in my opinion, be more in accordance with the purpose of Congress in providing for their segregation, to wit, the construction of reservoirs for the reclamation of arid lands, but if it should be held that these lands can not be appropriated under that act I recommend the passage of the bill, for the reason that it is apparent that the Government will not undertake to construct reservoirs upon these locations, and the only manner in which they can be utilized, or the objects contemplated by their segregation accomplished, will be to allow them to pass into the hands of private parties for the purpose of constructing reservoirs thereon.

E. F. BEST,
Assistant Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, this bill as it passed the Senate provided that this reservoir site should be opened to public entry for reservoir purposes at $2.50 per acre. The Committee on Public Lands of the House approved the bill in its form as it came from the Senate. Since that time it has been suggested that perhaps the reservoir site was more valuable than $2.50 per acre, and therefore that the Government should get the best price that it could, and so we have thought it best to put in an amendment, which is as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to dispose of the same at public auction, after thirty days' notice by advertisement, at a price not less than $2.50 per acre.

And in order to be sure that this water which would be conserved in this reservoir would be of great benefit for irrigation, the following amendment was also added:

So as to secure the early building and permanent maintenance of a reservoir for the storage of water to increase the flow of the Arkansas River, as contemplated by the Government in reserving the reservoir sites of the arid region; but nothing herein shall prevent the purchasers or their assigns from using said water for mechanical, manufacturing, or other purposes which do not materially lessen said contemplated increased flow.

Now, it seems to me that this is eminently a just bill. Here is a reservoir site which can be used not only for irrigation purposes, but the water can also be used for mechanical purposes. It would be wrong for the Government to reserve this site and not permit the water to be used for mechanical purposes, when at the same time its use would benefit irrigation.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. SAYERS. If the bill should become a law with the amendments that you contemplate, is there any probability of the reservoir site getting into the possession of a company which would monopolize the water?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It could not monopolize the water. Under the laws of our State no man or company has an ownership in water. He can utilize it. He can take the water and use it for mechanical purposes, but he is bound to turn it back into the stream, and those who have lands to be irrigated in the valleys below have a right to appropriate the water for that purpose, according to certain laws existing in that State.

Now I should like to yield to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. We passed a reservoir bill the other day, which has passed the Senate and gone to the President. I should like to ask the gentleman if that does not cover this case?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It does not.

Mr. LACEY. I was about to explain that very matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Very well.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago this House passed a bill in regard to reservoir sites, opening them up under the right-of-way act of 1891. That, however, is for irrigation purposes. This particular reservoir is 140 miles from any locality where water can be used for irrigation. Consequently the site is not immediately available for that purpose. The reservoir site consists of about 1,900 acres, of which 800 acres are already occupied. The core or center of the reservoir site is now flooded, and this proposition is to enable the present occupants to enlarge their occupation, so as to take in the balance of the site, raising the height of the dam and impounding that much more water. This can not be done under the law that we passed the other day, for the reason that the water is to be used in the first instance for power purposes at the city of Leadville, while the bill which we passed the other day provides for the use of water for irrigation purposes alone. In order to protect the use of the water for irrigation purposes, the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] has been incorporated in the bill which he moves to suspend the rules and pass.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it not true that the State of Colorado and its representatives, both in this House and in the other branch, have been the most earnest propounders of this general system of irrigation; and is it not also true that these reservations have been made largely through the instrumentality of the representatives of that State?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, I can not say as to that. These reservoirs were set aside under an act of Congress passed in 1888.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will now ask the gentleman, then, if it is true, some reason for the change of policy. Why is it that you want to gouge out here and there for the particular advantage of private individuals?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that the reason, no doubt, why the measure for the preservation of reservoir sites was deemed in the first instance a proper measure is that the reservoir sites were opened to private entry by homesteaders and preemptors. They could be located upon by any person desirous of taking up a homestead or a preemption claim, which was evidently improper. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will give me his attention. Since the land laws of the United States permitted a person to locate a homestead in a reservoir site, it was manifestly improper that that should be done; and the intention, no doubt, in the passage of the act was to make a reservoir site subject to entry only for a reservoir. Following that there was legislation permitting the occupation of reservoir sites, passed in 1891; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office held that under the law every reservoir site that had been reserved was open to public entry, but the Secretary of the Interior held otherwise. The Department requested legislation, and there was some legislation passed through this House the other day making reservoir sites open to entry for irrigation purposes only. Now, the object of this bill, and the reason why it is a special bill, is that this particular reservoir is high up in the mountains, and as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] has stated, this reservoir is 140 or 150 miles from any land that can be irrigated by the water from it; but the water can be used there for generating power. The power conveyed through electrical appliances will be of great advantage for use in the mines at Leadville and for the purposes of manufacturing.

Mr. BOWERS. And it does not lessen the amount of water for irrigation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. And it does not lesson the amount of water for irrigation purposes. Now it seems to me that, under these circumstances, there ought not to be any objection made.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I heard the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, say that half of this land had already been taken.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Eight hundred acres was taken up before the reservoir was reserved by the Government by preemptors and homesteaders, and patents were issued to them by the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. And they have built a dam?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I understood the gentleman from Iowa to say that the dam was there and that the water company had taken the earth there.

Mr. LACEY. The additional share was to be used for reservoir. The dam itself is in the center now occupied.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It can not be any detriment to anybody.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then I understand the gentleman to say that it does not give a monopoly to the company there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. This bill opens it up to competition and to bidding at public auction; and then it fixes the minimum price for the land at $2.50 per acre. The land can not be used for any other purpose, and is not worth 10 cents an acre for agricultural uses. There can not be a monopoly, because under the laws of the State of Colorado the waters are for the people, and the county commissioners of the county where the water is used fix the price of the water.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit this suggestion? Is not your purpose now to use this water for mechanical and other purposes absolutely destructive of its use for irrigation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no.

Mr. HEPBURN. The theory of irrigation is this: You store the water there in these great reservoirs to use in time of drought or in the summer season.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then it is taken for purposes of irrigation?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. HEPBURN. But according to your argument, you want to use that water in the winter time, so that you are absolutely preventing the storage of the water in any great quantity.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In reply to the gentleman, I wish to say this: That during the winter months there is plenty of water, and consequently they can run their machinery by the overflow water from the dam. They will need all the waters stored to run their machinery during the summer months when the lands need the water most for irrigation, and consequently both purposes are served.

Mr. HULL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HULL. I understand that the proposition is to use simply the overflow. You do not propose to draw the water entirely out of the reservoir?

Mr. SHAFROTH. In this way we shall no doubt get a great increase in the waters that are available for irrigating purposes, but at the same time the people desire to use this water for mechanical purposes also. My colleague, Judge BELL, represents the entire irrigating district below this reservoir site, and this bill as amended is perfectly satisfactory to him, and I now yield to him.

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, this bill originally was antagonized by me because it did not provide that the water should be used in such a way as not to interfere with the contemplated increased flow of the Arkansas River during the dry season. I introduced a bill which was in conflict with this, providing that Congress should cede this reservoir to the State of Colorado, so that the State itself might improve it instead of leaving it to be done by private individuals. We sent that bill to the Secretary of the Interior and he reported upon it, saying that private individuals owned the bottom of that reservoir and had owned it before it was set apart for that purpose, and that they opposed the ceding of the reservoir to the State of Colorado or to anybody else unless the parties to whom it might be ceded would come forward and buy out the individuals that had located and patented the bottom of the reservoir before it was set aside for this purpose. The only reason why this is a special case is that private individuals now own the bottom of that reservoir. The place where the dam ought to be built is on the public domain. If the owners of the bottom owned the place to build the dam, they would be independent, but they do not own the point where the dam should be built.

They do not want this water for irrigation purposes at all. They want it for the purpose of establishing a great electric plant, and they desire to hold the water back until the time of scarcity. From the 1st of March until about the middle of July the water is overflowing in the Arkansas. Nobody needs it. What these people desire is to keep back the water until August, to store it up for the purpose of running their machinery in August and September. That is their object. They propose to turn it loose in a regular stream from the 1st of August until the last of September, a so that it will inure to the benefit of the people on the lower river.

Mr. HEPBURN. There are certain persons who hold the lower levels now, are there not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then no one can utilize this site without overflowing those lower lands?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. No, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then there is no probability of any competition in this matter, is there?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. No, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then what is the use of talking about the fairness of an auction sale?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. I do not think there is anything in that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The reason for that provision is the Senate bill provided a rate of $2.50 an acre, but various objections were made by gentlemen who thought that the land was worth a great deal more, or might be, and in order to satisfy them that provision about an auction sale was put in. I wanted the bill to go through just as the Senate passed it, but at the same time this amendment was thought wise under the circumstances, though I do not believe the land will bring more than $2.50 an acre.

Mr. BRUMM. May it not bring less?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The minimum price fixed is $2.50 an acre, while the minimum price of the public lands in that district is $1.25 an acre.

Mr. FARIS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. FARIS. You say they are desirous of storing this water for the purpose of running a great electric plant?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. FARIS. To whom do you refer by "they?"

Mr. BELL of Colorado. I refer—and it is just as well to be plain about this—to the men who own the bottom of this reservoir; and I want to state further that, if I remember aright, there are several reservoirs on the head of the Arkansas River, not one of them improved, and probably every man in this House will be dead and buried before any other reservoir than the one we are now considering will be improved. I am told it will take some $300,000 to build this dam, and those who are familiar with mining know that it is absolutely necessary, in order to mine cheaply, that you shall have one great power plant which will lease a wire to every mine in the district, so that one man, or one set of men, can supply a thousand mines with power much cheaper than each one can supply itself. But I support this bill upon only one ground. The farming lands are all in my district, on the lower part of the river, and we are in favor of getting this dam built, so that we may have the benefit of this water without any cost to ourselves. But the object of these other parties is different from ours. Their object is to use this water at the same time that we want the increased flow of the Arkansas River. When they increase the flow, we get the benefit of it.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. How is that secured?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. The bill itself provides that this water shall not be used in any manner to interfere with the increased flow of the Arkansas River, as contemplated in the act establishing this reservation system. Let me tell the gentleman also that this land is not worth 25 cents an acre for any purpose except as a reservoir; and there are a number of others right there that anybody can take who wishes to do so.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Has not the gentleman already stated that the bottom of this reservoir is private property and not controlled by the Government as part of the reservation?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Yes, sir; and the Department reported to the Committee on Public Lands that before this land should be ceded to Colorado the State should be required to buy the interest of those private individuals. But the other day I abandoned my bill looking to that end when I got through an amendment on a general bill providing that the State might take possession of any unappropriated reservoir.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. What I want to know is this: If the bottom of that reservoir is private property, how are you going to make it public property?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. There were about 800 acres, as I remember, patented by private individuals for the purpose of storing this water before the reservation was made. When the surveyors got there, they set apart 1,900 acres, taking a great rim and a place below for a dam. When the private individuals concluded to build a dam, the proper place for a dam was found to be on Government property which has been reserved.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. I again ask the gentleman this question: If those private individuals have the interest stated in that property, how is this bill going to make it public property?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. It does not interfere with that at all.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Then you propose to give these individuals the privilege of adding to their private property by buying additional land?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Yes, sir; by buying enough additional land to make their present property available.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. And this additional land will all be private property and under the control of these private individuals?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Yes; but subject to the control of the State and to the provisions of this bill.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. Subject to the laws of the State so far as they may affect the use of the land for irrigation purposes?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Yes, sir; and subject to the conditions of this grant.

Mr. LACEY. When these parties take this additional land from the Government and make this enlargement, they do so subject to regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. LACEY. So that there is additional protection in the way of securing this land for irrigation purposes?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Let me make a further explanation. Here is a point that some gentlemen do not seem to grasp readily, because they are not familiar probably with the conditions there. We in my district have desired this land for storing water for irrigation purposes. I have antagonized this bill until this amendment which I have framed myself was put on, because I represent the irrigation interest. I had a bill antagonizing this measure and trying to have this reservoir site set apart to the State. But I secured an amendment to this bill providing that the private owners should not interfere with our irrigation operations or with the increased flow of water which was contemplated when this land was set apart as a reservoir site.

Now, in this bill we have provided everything necessary to make this reservoir inure to the benefit of the farmer without the farmer expending any money. At present we can not use this reservoir site unless we are informed that we put up this $300,000. These men have agreed to put in the cost for the mere purpose of having this water run through their mill wheel, which will not materially lessen the flow.

Mr. HENRY of Indiana. With whom do they make that agreement?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. It is in the bill. I wrote the amendment myself which has been put on the bill; that is, they must comply with the law in building and maintaining a reservoir as contemplated by the original act reserving this ground.

Mr. BOWERS. The proposition is just this, is it not, that all the power derived shall be subservient to irrigation——

Mr. BELL of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOWERS. That the supply of water for irrigation shall not be lessened; that these parties may develop that power without decreasing the irrigation facilities. That is the proposition, is it not?

Mr. BELL of Colorado. It is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. This reservoir site is situated in my district. We want the water for mechanical purposes. Gentlemen in other districts want it for irrigation purposes. It can be made to serve both purposes. The bill has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands. I ask for a vote.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. SHAFROTH to suspend the rules and pass the bill as amended was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

PATENTS TO CERTAIN LANDS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass, with the amendments recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands, the bill (S. 824) to require patents to be issued to land actually settled under the act entitled "An act to provide for the armed occupation and settlement of the unsettled part of the peninsula of Florida," approved August 4, 1842.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That patents shall be issued to the persons in possession and occupation of all land settled upon under the act entitled "An act to provide for the armed occupation and settlement of the unsettled part of the peninsula of east Florida," approved on the 4th of August, A. D. 1842, where the land has been in the occupation and possession of the person who actually settled thereon, his widow, or heirs at law or assigns, from whom a right of possession to said land under said act has been derived for the period of twenty years next preceding the approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That the right and title of all persons embraced in the first section of this act is hereby confirmed to them, their heirs and assigns, to the 160 acres embraced in the original settlement under the said act of Congress.

SEC. 3. That proof of the possession and occupation of said land for the period of twenty years, and of the fact of application for settlement under the said act of Congress, shall be held to be conclusive, as against the United States, of settlement under the said act of Congress, and of compliance with all the requirements of said act.

SEC. 4. That all persons claiming the benefit of this act shall be required to make the proof required herein within two years from the date of its approval, before the officers who are authorized to take similar proofs under the homestead laws; and the requirements of these laws, as to notice, contests, appeals, and the course of procedure, shall, wherever they are applicable, apply to all cases arising under this act.

SEC. 5. That nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to interfere with any valid adverse right, asserted under any law of the United States, to any of the lands settled upon under the armed occupation acts.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, in order that there may be some explanation of the bill, I demand a second.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN] asks consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, many years ago, while Florida was a Territory, a law was passed by Congress called the "armed occupation act," under which any individual who desired so to do could go into that Territory and settle upon any of the lands therein, and after having made certain improvements and having made proof of settlement, cultivation, and improvement for five years, could obtain a patent to the land. This act was passed for the purpose of encouraging people to go into that Territory and take armed possession of the vacant lands there, the whole southern portion of the Territory being in the possession of the Seminole Indians. A great many people availed themselves of the provisions of this act and went onto lands selected by them, mainly in the southern and middle portions of Florida, cultivated the same, made proof, and some of them obtained patents. This was anterior to the civil war. In some cases, however, the proof made was never sent to the Land Office at Washington, but during the civil war was carried about, first to one place and then to another, until finally lost or destroyed, so that it can not now be found. Hence these people have never been able to obtain patents to their lands. This bill is for the purpose of permitting them or their descendants—who I am informed are not more than one hundred in number—to make final proof again and obtain patents to the lands on which they or their predecessors have lived in good faith during all these many years.

Mr. DOCKERY. Is this bill approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; and if the report were read, it would show that it also meets with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. He recommends its passage with certain amendments, which have been adopted by the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. And the bill is unanimously recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; unanimously recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. SPARKMAN. There is a committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. That has been read.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. Section 5 was added by the House committee.

The SPEAKER. That has been read.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the Senate bill as amended.

Accordingly (two-thirds voting in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the bill, as read, passed.

ADDITIONAL LAND OFFICE, MONTANA.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 1743) to establish an additional land office in the State of Montana.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all that portion of the State of Montana bounded and described as follows: Beginning at a point on the national boundary line where the same would be intersected by the range line between ranges 14 and 15 west of the Montana principal meridian when projected (this line being the present boundary between the Helena and Missoula land districts); thence south on said range line between ranges 14 and 15 west to the southeast corner of township 22 north, range 15 west; thence west on township line between townships 21 and 22 north to the southwest corner of township 22 north, range 23 west; thence north on range line between ranges 23 and 24 west to the sixth standard parallel north; thence west on said standard parallel to the southwest corner of township 25 north, range 26 west; thence north on range line between ranges 26 and 27 west to northeast corner of township 26 north, range 27 west; thence west on township line between townships 26 and 27 north to the northeast corner of township 26 north, range 30 west; thence north on range line between ranges 29 and 30 west to northeast corner of township 27 north, range 30 west; thence west on township line between townships 27 and 28 north to the northwest corner of township 27 north, range 31 west; thence north on range line between ranges 31 and 32 west to the seventh standard parallel north; thence west along the seventh standard parallel north to the western boundary of the State; thence north on said boundary line to the northwest corner of the State on the national boundary line on the forty-ninth parallel, north latitude; and thence east on said national boundary line to the place of beginning, be, and the same is hereby, constituted a new land district, to be called Flathead land district of the State of Montana, and the land office for said district shall be located at the town of Kalispell.

SEC. 2. That the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, is hereby authorized to appoint a register and receiver for such land district, who shall discharge like and similar duties and receive the same amount of compensation as other officers discharging like duties in the other land offices of said State.

Mr. TERRY. For the purpose of having an explanation, I ask for a second.

Mr. HARTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I presume a second was demanded in order that some interrogatories might be submitted. I am ready to answer any which may be submitted, if I can.

Mr. TERRY. I want an explanation of the purpose of the bill.

Mr. HARTMAN. The bill is reported favorably by the Committee on the Public Lands. It passed the Senate on the 5th day of last March. It has the indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior and of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

I will state to the gentleman that the bill proposes to create a new land district in the northwestern part of Montana, in which proposed district there are 5,500,000 acres of land. The way the district is now located with reference to railroad facilities, a large number of the inhabitants, probably three or four thousand, who have business to do with the land office are compelled to travel from 150 to 400 miles in order to get to Missoula, where the land office of this district is now situated.

Mr. TERRY. Then the purpose of the bill is to accommodate the people out there?

Mr. HARTMAN. It is.

Mr. TERRY. And not for the purpose of creating any new office?

Mr. HARTMAN. Not at all. It creates a new office, but that must be done in order to accommodate these people.

Mr. TERRY. Can the gentleman advise me as to how these offices will be filled? Will they be filled under the civil service?

Mr. HARTMAN. I know nothing about that and I care nothing about that, excepting that I do want the office established for the accommodation of the settlers who are establishing their new homes in that country and developing it.

Mr. TERRY. You are pretty certain that you will have nothing to say about who they shall appoint?

Mr. HARTMAN. I am pretty certain that I shall have nothing to say about who shall be appointed; and I am frank to say I do not care about who is appointed, so long as the appointees are competent and proper persons.

Mr. CANNON. How many land offices are there in the State of Montana?

Mr. HARTMAN. There are five; and there are 145,730 square miles in the State, or 92,000,000 acres of land.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say to the gentleman that, without having knowledge sufficient to antagonize this bill, in the State of Illinois, in which there is hardly 40 acres of land upon which an honest man can not make a living for his family, and which was settled and the land entered and sold substantially before the days of railroads, as I recollect, there never were but two land offices in the State.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, my, yes!

Mr. CANNON. I think that is right.

Mr. HARTMAN. I am not able to dispute the statement of the gentleman; but I will say this, that in point of area the State of Illinois is very small compared to the State of Montana. I want to state to him that the State of Montana contains more acreage than all the New England States, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland, by nearly 11,000 square miles.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that exactly; but, after all, that argument is fallacious, for the reason that the gentleman's State does not contain land, over 12 or 15 per cent of it, that under the most favorable circumstances can be used by the human animal.

Mr. HARTMAN. The gentleman is mistaken about that. But I want to say further that there is no reason why we ought not to have this additional land office. Your people were able to travel right across the prairie. We have got to travel along the water courses as they come through the mountain gorges and through the mountain canyons.

Mr. LACEY. Let me suggest to the gentleman that this new place will also be on the line of the Great Northern Railroad, and a person living upon the line of that road can not reach the present office with the convenience that he could reach Kalispell. By reason of the construction of that great road it becomes a common central point for a radius of 300 or 400 miles in diameter, and before this road was built the other locations were as near as this would have been.

Mr. HENDERSON. How far will this office be from the nearest one?

Mr. HARTMAN. It will be about 300 miles, the way they have to travel; and in many instances the present office is from 150 to 400 miles from the homes of settlers.

Mr. LOUD. Will the gentleman have read the language in which the Interior Department indorses this?

Mr. HARTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LOUD. They have a great many ways of indorsing propositions.

Mr. HARTMAN read:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 17, 1896.

SIR: In compliance with your request of the 13th instant for suggestions on Senate bill 1743, to establish an additional land office in the State of Montana (at Kalispell), I inclose herewith a copy of a letter on the subject by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in which he states that "the bill now submitted conforms to the suggestions made by this office, and there is no objection to its enactment."

I concur in the Commissioner's report.

Very respectfully, HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS, House of Representatives.

Mr. LOUD. What were the suggestions made by the office?

Mr. HARTMAN. If you want it, I will read what the Commissioner of the General Land Office says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE, Washington, D. C., March 16, 1896.

SIR: I have received, by your reference for report, a communication from Hon. J. F. LACEY, chairman House Committee on the Public Lands, dated the 13th instant, inclosing a copy of bill (S. 1743) to establish an additional land office in the State of Montana, passed by the Senate March 5, 1896, upon which any suggestions which this office may deem proper are requested by the committee.

In reply, I have the honor to state that a bill for the purpose indicated was submitted to this office on January 30, 1895, from the Senate Committee on Public Lands, but as the description of the boundaries of the proposed district was mostly on imaginary lines, this office suggested that it be amended to conform to the lines of established surveys, and that if this were done it was believed that the new district would serve a great convenience to the public, and would meet the approval of this office.

It appears that the bill now submitted conforms to the suggestions made by this office, and there is no objection to its enactment.

Very respectfully, S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. LOUD. I will suggest to the gentleman that we almost daily recommend persons to high political offices on just such recommendations—noncommittal.

Mr. HARTMAN. If the gentleman will not include me in that statement, that may be so.

Mr. HENDERSON. I regard Judge Lamoreux as one of the most conservative men we have in the public service.

Mr. LOUD. But he has not said anything.

Mr. HENDERSON. I regard that letter as being conclusive that this ought to be done.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to have that statement put with the letter for future reference.

Mr. HENDERSON. Judge Lamoreux is a man of very few words, one of the most painstaking men we have in the service, and if he saw any objection to the bill he would have pointed it out.

Mr. HARTMAN. If there be no other questions, I will ask for a vote.

The question was taken on suspending the rules and passing the bill; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I demand the regular order.

BOTTLING DISTILLED SPIRITS IN BOND.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8582) to allow bottling of distilled spirits in bond.

The bill and Senate amendments were read.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

MILITARY NATIONAL PARKS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7320) to prevent trespassing upon and provide for the protection of military national parks.

The bill and Senate amendment were read.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendment and agree to the conference requested.

The motion was agreed to.

The following conferees were appointed: Mr. HULL, Mr. CURTIS of New York, and Mr. TYLER.

JURISDICTION OF POLICE COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3623) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to define the jurisdiction of the police court of the District of Columbia," etc., with amendments of the Senate thereto.

The bill and amendments were read; and the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. LAWRENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill S. 3721, being a bill the like of which has been reported favorably by a committee of this House, which committee now directs that the bill be called up.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be read.

The bill (S. 3721) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River was read.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if this bill contains the usual provision in regard to telegraph and telephone lines?

Mr. SHERMAN. It contains all the usual provisions of a bridge bill. It has been submitted to the War Department and approved by that Department, and has been favorably reported by the House committee. I have the report here, if the gentleman from Arkansas would like to hear it.

Mr. TERRY. I do not care about hearing the report. I just want to know whether the bill contains the usual provision in regard to telegraph and telephone lines.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the bill does contain that provision.

Mr. TERRY. I did not hear it in the reading of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it will be found in section 3.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman has the bill there. I wish he would examine and see if it contains that provision.

Mr. SHERMAN (after examining the bill). I do not find it at this moment, though I thought I saw it in the bill when I read it before.

Mr. TERRY. If it is not there, it ought to be inserted.

Mr. SHERMAN. If it is not in the bill, I am ready to accept such an amendment, if the gentleman desires to offer it.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I trust the gentleman from Arkansas will not insist on offering an amendment. This bill has passed the Senate and we have reached so late a period of the session that if it is sent back now we may not be able to have it disposed of before the adjournment. The bill as it stands has been approved by the Secretary of War and probably contains all requisite provisions.

Mr. TERRY. I am only surprised that the absence of that provision should have escaped the vigilance of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, because such a provision is usually inserted in all these bills, and should be in this one; but I have no desire to obstruct the passage of the bill. Therefore I will not insist on the amendment, but will content myself with directing the attention of the honorable chairman of the committee to the point.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER directed the Clerk to call the committees.

Mr. SHERMAN (when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Interstate Commerce Committee, I call up the bill (H. R. 10367) to revise and reenact a law to authorize the Pittsburg, Monongahela and Wheeling Railroad Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela.

The bill was read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], who will explain the object of this bill.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this is simply a bill to extend the time for the completion of this bridge. The parties who are interested in it have met with some obstacles in the way of prosecuting their work, and under the original act they would have to stop work at this time. The object of this bill is to extend the time so that they may have an opportunity to complete the bridge in accordance with the original requirements.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce supposed that they had already made provision for bridges enough to cover the entire Monongahela River and turn it into a tunnel [laughter], but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] succeeded in discovering a place where another bridge might be located. This is the result of his explorations, and the report of the committee is unanimous. [Laughter.]

Mr. DALZELL. "The gentleman from Pennsylvania," knowing what the intention of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was, has been assiduously endeavoring to help them to carry out that intention. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] whether it would not be well to offer an amendment now providing for bridging over the whole Monongahela River? [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman from New York is not discussing the "Monongahela" that he is familiar with. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I should not presume to discuss that kind in the gentleman's presence. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I do not think it will be necessary to take the course suggested by the gentleman from New York, because I do not suppose there is space enough left for another bridge. [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE OVER THE ST. LOUIS RIVER.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the same committee, I call up the bill (H. R. 10362) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894, as amended by an act approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the completion of the bridge authorized to be constructed under an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota," approved April 24, 1894, as amended by an act approved August 4, 1894, entitled "An act to amend an act to authorize the construction of a steel bridge over the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin," be, and the same is hereby, extended until the 1st day of August, A. D. 1897.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is merely an extension of time for this construction from the 24th day of April in this year until the 1st day of August. The bridge is nearly completed now. This bill does not in any way change existing law, and the original act contains all the usual safeguards.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ANTITICKET SCALPING BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now call up House bill No. 10090, to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be the duty of every common carrier subject to the provisions of said act to regulate commerce to provide each agent who may be authorized to sell tickets or other evidences of transportation, subject to said act, of the holder's right to travel on the line of such carrier, or on any line of which such carrier's line shall form a part, with a certificate setting forth the authority of such agent to make such sales; which certificate shall be attested by the signature of said common carrier, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, by the signature of one of its principal officers and by its corporate seal, and shall be posted in a conspicuous place in the office or place of business of such agent in such manner as to be in full view of the purchasers of tickets.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any person not possessed of such authority, so evidenced, to sell, barter, or transfer, for any consideration whatever, the whole or any part of any ticket, pass, or other evidence of transportation, subject to said act to regulate commerce, of the holder's right to travel on any line of any common carrier subject to the provisions of said act: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to a purchaser of a ticket in good faith for personal use in the prosecution of a journey.

SEC. 3. That any person or persons violating any of the provisions of, or neglecting to comply with any of the requirements of, the preceding sections of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which the offense was committed, be subject for each offense to a fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment for a term of not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 4. That every common carrier subject to the provisions of said act to regulate commerce that shall have sold any ticket or other evidence of transportation, subject to said act, of the holder's right to travel on its line, or on any line of which it forms a part, shall, if any part of such ticket be unused by the purchaser thereof, redeem the same upon presentation thereof by the purchaser at the general office of such carrier, at a rate which shall be equal to the difference between the price paid for the whole ticket and the cost of a ticket of the same class between the points for which said ticket was actually used. If the point at which the purchaser of said ticket shall have terminated his journey be not the place where the general offices of the carrier selling said ticket are located, and the agent at such point, either of the carrier selling the same or of any carrier over whose line said ticket reads, shall, upon the surrender of the unused portion of said ticket within thirty days after the purchaser of said ticket terminates his journey, give to such purchaser a receipt therefor, describing said ticket and stating the point or place where the journey terminated, and said carrier selling such ticket shall, upon presentation of said receipt, pay over to said passenger, or upon his order, the amount thereupon found due.

SEC. 5. That if any person shall falsely make, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be made, forged, or counterfeited, or willingly aid or assist in falsely making, forging, or counterfeiting any passage ticket, pass, or other evidence of transportation, subject to the act to regulate commerce, or transportation in imitation of, or purporting to be in imitation of such transportation issued by a common carrier or common carriers, subject to said act, for travel over its line, or over any line of which its line shall form a part, or who shall knowingly alter any genuine ticket, pass, or other evidence of transportation, subject to the act to regulate commerce, or issue, publish, or sell, or attempt to issue, publish, or sell any such altered genuine ticket, pass, or other evidence of transportation, subject to the act to regulate commerce, or any such falsely made or counterfeited passage ticket, pass, or other evidence of transportation, subject to the act to regulate commerce, as aforesaid, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $3,000 for each offense, and shall be imprisoned, in the discretion of the court, for a term not exceeding two years.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I raise the question of consideration against this bill.

Mr. TERRY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear it.

Mr. TERRY. Is this question to be submitted without debate?

The SPEAKER. Without debate.

Mr. TERRY. I ask this further parliamentary inquiry: Whether it would be in order to antagonize the consideration of this bill——

The SPEAKER. It would not be.

Mr. TERRY. By a proposition to consider another bill on the same Calendar?

The SPEAKER. It would not be. The question is, Will the House consider this bill?

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. NORTHWAY and others called for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 73, noes 50.

Mr. TERRY. Let us have tellers.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 34 voting in favor thereof, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 153, nays 70, not voting 132; as follows:

So the House decided to consider the bill.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. HARMER with Mr. HUTCHESON.

Mr. BROMWELL with Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. PICKLER with Mr. MINER of New York.

Mr. KULP with Mr. SHAW.

Mr. MAHON with Mr. OTEY.

Mr. BARRETT with Mr. CATCHINGS.

For this day:

Mr. HUFF with Mr. RUSSELL of Georgia.

Mr. HULICK with Mr. SWANSON.

Mr. MCCLURE with Mr. MCLAURIN.

Mr. WILBER with Mr. MILES.

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. LESTER.

Mr. OTJEN with Mr. BERRY.

Mr. HAINER of Nebraska with Mr. DENNY.

Mr. ARNOLD of Pennsylvania with Mr. HART.

Mr. HICKS with Mr. WASHINGTON.

Mr. HUNTER with Mr. YOAKUM.

Mr. LINTON with Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi.

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. BELKNAP with Mr. RUSK.

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. OWENS.

Mr. REYBURN with Mr. DINSMORE.

Mr. SETTLE with Mr. MILES.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois with Mr. LATIMER.

Mr. WADSWORTH with Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. WELLINGTON with Mr. SULZER.

Mr. TRELOAR with Mr. SORG.

Mr. MCCORMICK with Mr. COCKRELL.

Mr. MERCER with Mr. MCCLELLAN.

On this question:

Mr. QUIGG with Mr. NORTHWAY.

Mr. POOLE with Mr. PUGH.

Mr. COLSON with Mr. SAYERS.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendments as committee amendments to the bill.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire the report read before any amendment is read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HEPBURN). The report can be read in the gentleman's time when he is recognized. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 2 as follows:

"Strike out all after the word 'provided' and insert:

"'That the purchaser of a transferable ticket in good faith for personal use in the prosecution of a journey shall have the right to resell same to a person who will, in good faith, personally use it in the prosecution of a journey.'

"And add thereto the following:

"'And provided further, That nothing in this act shall prevent the properly authorized agent of any transportation company from purchasing from the properly authorized agent of any other transportation company a ticket for a passenger to whom he may sell a ticket to travel over any part of the line for which he is the properly authorized agent, so as to enable such passenger to travel to the place or junction from which his ticket shall read.'"

Mr. BOWERS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOWERS. I want to know if it is in order to present amendments after a request has been made for the reading of the report and before the matter is properly before the House? I have asked that the report of the committee be read, and now the gentleman is offering amendments before that is done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has no right to have this report read, except in his own time, and the Chair announced to him that in his own time, when he was recognized, he could have the report read.

Mr. BOWERS. Well, I may never be recognized, and I supposed it was the right of the House to have the report read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The report is printed.

Mr. BOWERS. I make the point of order that amendments are not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CROWTHER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CROWTHER. At what period in the discussion of this measure will amendments be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. They are in order whenever a gentleman is recognized and has the floor. There are amendments pending, however. The Clerk will continue the reading of the amendments proposed by the committee.

Mr. MOODY. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be read from the beginning.

Mr. SPALDING. We failed to hear them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the Clerk will report the first amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendments already read were again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the first amendment.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Is it proper to offer an amendment to a section before the section has been read? We have not had any debate upon the bill yet.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not desire a vote upon the amendments now. I offer the amendments now and ask that they be read. When the reading is finished, I shall move the previous question, and then see if we can not obtain some arrangement for a discussion of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was too hasty. These amendments are now offered for information, after which the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in section 4, in line 5, page 2, after the word "shall," the following: "If the whole of such ticket be unused, redeem the same, paying therefor the actual amount at which said ticket was sold, or."

Insert in section 4, in line 23, page 3, after the word "due," the following: "Provided, That all of the common carriers subject to the provisions of this act shall, if presented within thirty days after this act takes effect, redeem all valid unused tickets of their issue then lawfully in the possession of any person."

Mr. SHERMAN. I move the previous question on the bill and the amendments to its passage.

Mr. BOWERS (speaking at the same time). I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I assume that the gentleman can not take me off the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] moves the previous question on the bill and amendments to its passage.

Mr. BAILEY. I hope the gentleman from New York is not going to try to pass a bill of this importance in this way.

Mr. SHERMAN. I stated a moment ago that after making this motion I should attempt to get some arrangement entered into by unanimous consent to give more time for discussion than is allowed under the previous question. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. NORTHWAY. But I submit, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. TERRY. What time is the gentleman willing to concede for the discussion?

Mr. SHERMAN. What time does the gentleman want?

Mr. TERRY. I think we ought to have about four hours.

Mr. SHERMAN. Would not the gentleman like four days? We have lots of time, within a few days of the close of the session.

Mr. TERRY. I am making a modest request. My friend suggests four days. This is a very important measure. It changes the entire purpose of the interstate-commerce act. It is a bill to strengthen the hands of the railroads.

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not yield to the gentleman further. I desire to consent to anything that is in reason, but when four hours are asked for, we can not do it.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time during this Congress that we have seen the gentleman in charge of a measure move the previous question and then say after we carry it we will agree upon a time, when he knows a single objection would prevent any agreement being carried out.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman has not asked that thing. The gentleman is moving the previous question. The simple proposition is that we are now trying to agree upon some time.

Mr. COX. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. If the matter in regard to time is agreed about, and the previous question is ordered, is the bill then open to amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. COX. Then the whole object is to cut off amendments to the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed in an hour and a half, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ELLETT], and one half by myself; and that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments offered by the committee.

Mr. COX. And no other amendments to be allowed?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir.

Mr. BOWERS and Mr. MAHANY. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in one hour and a half, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Virginia and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York. Is there objection?

Mr. POWERS and Mr. MAHANY. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. TERRY. Let me suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that he ought to give at least three hours. This is a very important matter, and if the bill is right it surely should stand the light of discussion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will make one more request in reference to this discussion. I see the gentleman from Missouri desires to make an inquiry.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to know whether I understand the gentleman in charge of this bill correctly. Do I understand that his proposition is to debate this bill for a time that may be agreed upon, and also that he proposes that there shall be no opportunity to amend the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. That was the proposition. The gentleman correctly understands it.

Mr. COX. That is what he meant?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think it is not particularly fair to refuse the right to offer amendments except to the committee, and those amendments have now been read.

Mr. BLUE. The gentleman from New York——

Mr. SHERMAN. I modify my request by making it two hours, but otherwise that the request be as it was originally stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the debate be limited to two hours——

Mr. ELLETT. Mr. Speaker, it is an extremely undesirable thing to cut off all possibility of amendment after a thorough discussion of the subject-matter of this bill. What is the use of discussion if there can not be opportunity for amendment?

Mr. CANNON. Regular order!

Mr. NORTHWAY. I understood that the amendments were only read——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BAILEY. I will object unless——

Mr. COX. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not make objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the previous question be ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question upon the bill and amendments.

Mr. MILNES. Pending that motion, I desire to move that this bill be recommitted with instructions to strike out——

The SPEAKER. The bill has not reached the point when that motion will be in order. The Chair will recognize the gentleman when that point is reached.

Mr. MILNES. A parliamentary inquiry. Is not a motion to commit in order pending a motion for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. A motion to commit will be entertained when the bill has been ordered to be engrossed. Then the Chair will submit that motion.

Mr. NORTHWAY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Do I understand that the Chair is putting the motion on the amendments? I understand that there are no amendments pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that there were amendments pending.

Mr. NORTHWAY. They were read for information.

The SPEAKER. The committee amendments are offered with the bill, and have been read to the House already.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Is that in order before we read the sections to which they apply?

The SPEAKER. The bill was all read, the Chair understands.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Oh, no; we have not read the sections.

The SPEAKER. No; because that is done in Committee of the Whole. The bill is not read by sections in the House.

Mr. MILNES. A parliamentary inquiry. Would it be in order to move that we go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. TERRY. I appeal to the gentleman to give at least three hours for debate.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion for the previous question.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Speaker, before we pass that point, I ask by unanimous consent that there be three hours for the consideration of this bill, an hour and a half on a side. It is an important bill, and while I am for the bill myself, I do not like it to be passed without the gentlemen opposed to it having an opportunity to be heard.

The SPEAKER. Unless the gentleman withdraws the motion for the previous question the Chair will have to put it.

Mr. SHERMAN. "The gentleman" can not withdraw it except on a proposition for two hours' discussion.

Mr. TERRY. I appeal to the House in the interest of fair play——

The SPEAKER. The question is on the demand for the previous question.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, a motion to adjourn was made by the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS], which I understand is in order.

The SPEAKER. At what time?

Mr. MAGUIRE. Immediately after the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves——

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I had the floor at the time, and I did not yield to the gentleman from California to make any motion. No such motion was made by any gentleman properly on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman would have the right to make the motion after the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] had submitted his motion for the previous question.

Mr. SHERMAN. But he did not do it at that time. If my memory serves me correctly, he attempted to make the motion while I occupied the floor, and while we were attempting to make some arrangements about the time for discussion.

Mr. BOWERS. I make the motion to adjourn now, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to make that motion.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BOWERS. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. MILNES.

Mr. CANNON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Does not the demand for the yeas and nays supersede the demand for tellers?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. CANNON. Well, that demand was made by the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 56, nays 175, not voting 124; as follows:

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. AITKEN with Mr. CULBERSON, for this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] in charge of the bill; or, rather, the demand for the previous question having been made, the question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I rise to a privileged motion, Mr. Speaker. I move to lay the whole matter on the table.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that that motion is dilatory.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I make the motion under subdivision 4 of Rule XVI.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. The gentleman's motion is dilatory, and I make that point against it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that the motion of the gentleman from California is dilatory. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. NORTHWAY. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 131, nays 80, not voting 144; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

The following additional pairs were announced:

On this vote:

Mr. THOMAS with Mr. WHEELER.

For the rest of the day:

Mr. CORLISS with Mr. MCCLELLAN.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan with Mr. JONES.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. MAHANY. I call for a division.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I rise to a question of privilege. There has been no debate on this bill in any form. The previous question having been ordered, we are entitled, as I understand, to a certain length of time for debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that there had been debate.

Mr. NORTHWAY. There has been no debate whatever, as I understand.

The SPEAKER. If that is the case, and the right of debate is claimed, there must be twenty minutes' debate on each side.

Mr. NORTHWAY. I think we are entitled to that.

The SPEAKER. Certainly. The Chair supposed that there had been debate while he was absent. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] is recognized.

[Mr. SHERMAN addressed the House. See Appendix.]

[Mr. WHEELER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I reserve the balance of my time, and ask that the opponents of the measure shall occupy their time; and then I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to close the debate.

Mr. ELLETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, since I have been in Congress I have had the honor to serve on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. In the Fifty-third Congress there were two propositions pending before that committee. One was to amend the interstate-commerce law in various respects, and particularly to enable the railroads at competitive points to enter into pooling arrangements. The other was substantially the bill that is now pending before the House. I supported the pooling measure, for the reason that in my judgment it would give stability to rates at the competitive points and would have the effect of reducing rates at noncompetitive points. I therefore supported the pooling measure; and I opposed what was known as the "anti-scalping" bill. Now, so far as the fourth section of this bill is concerned, which provides for the punishment of anyone who forges a pass or a railroad ticket, no member would go further in voting for a measure such as that than I would. But this bill, in its main features, Mr. Speaker, has but one object, and the House may as as well understand it now. It is simply to protect the railroads in discriminating against noncompetitive points. The railroads themselves have created the conditions out of which the scalper makes his money. If the railroads did not discriminate against noncompetitive points, the business of the scalper would go. He could not exist an hour if the railroads ceased to discriminate against localities that are not competitive points.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one further objection that I have to this bill, and that is in respect to the penalties imposed. The third section of the bill provides that a person or persons violating the preceding section shall be subject to punishment. That does not include the railroad corporation itself. The duty imposed upon the railroads is embodied in the fourth section of the bill, which is not covered by the penal section. I wish to impress upon the House just for a moment the effect of this bill. Let me make a single illustration. If you were at Chicago to-day and wanted to buy a ticket from Chicago to New York by way of Washington, you would be charged $18 for the ticket. If you wanted to buy a ticket from Chicago to Washington only, you would be charged $17.50. Now, under existing conditions when the traveler gets to Washington, on his way to New York, he stops over here, the balance of his ticket gets into the hands of a ticket broker, and it is sold to some one wanting to travel from Washington to New York, the fare from Washington to New York being, I believe, $6.50.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ELLETT. I give the gentleman time to cover that point.

Mr. PATTERSON. Now, should the traveler, paying $18 for a ticket from Chicago to New York, come to Washington, and there stop his journey, there would only be due him under this bill the sum of 50 cents. The agent here would give his receipt for the ticket, and at some time in the future the railroad company's main office would refund 50 cents. That is the meaning of this bill. In my judgment, this bill has but one effect, and that is simply to permit the railroads to discriminate against noncompetitive points, and to protect them in so doing. [Loud applause.]

Mr. ELLETT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY].

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] refers to the fact that many petitions have been received in favor of this bill; and no doubt many well-meaning people have been deceived, but he must recollect that the real nature and purpose of this bill have been carefully disguised. These petitions were formulated and circulated by the railroads. The petitions coming from my district refer to it as a bill for the "protection of the public, and to prevent counterfeiting railroad tickets." Nearly all of them sent to me were printed on the same kind of paper and on the same typewriter, and mailed in a railroad envelope. The real title of the bill, Mr. Speaker, correctly stated would be, "A bill to strengthen the hands of the railroad pools and force all railroad companies to stand up to the pool against the people." Any man who will carefully read the bill with a discernment and understanding that can read "between the lines," will see that it means nothing else, and that such is its real object. "Protection of the public," indeed! Whoever heard of the railroads going to all the trouble they have in this matter to put through any legislation for the protection of the public?

In order to perceive more clearly the ulterior effect and purpose of this measure, it is necessary to consider the conditions that have given rise to the business of ticket brokerage. Years ago, when there were fewer railroads, whenever there was a proposition to regulate their freight or passenger rates by law, or a railway commission, the favorite and stock-in-trade argument against it was that it would "discourage railroad building," and that if you would let them alone, we would "get more roads," and the "natural law of competition would reduce rates," just as it is now argued that by protective tariffs you encourage the building of more factories, and thereby bring down the price of manufactured goods; but as in the case of manufacturers, trusts and combinations were made to hold up prices, so in the case of railways, pools and combinations were entered into to nullify as far as possible the natural law of competition.

If the weaker lines, in order to obtain as much local business as possible, attempted to stand out against the great trunk lines or stronger roads, a rate war would be inaugurated against them, and sooner or later they would be driven to the wall and forced to go into the pool and surrender all independent action of their own. Here, for instance, are two lines from Chicago to Kansas City; one is 525 miles in length, the other only 458. The shorter line, having the advantage of quicker transit, is, naturally, the stronger. It can leave Chicago at 6 o'clock in the evening and reach Kansas City at 8.30 in the morning. A train on the long line, leaving Chicago at the same time, does not reach Kansas City until 4.30 in the evening. The quicker transit line sells a ticket to Kansas City for $12.50. The longer line, in order to obtain business, is willing to sell a cheaper ticket, and get a cheaper class of business, from a class of people who have "more time than money." God knows, Mr. Speaker, there are plenty of that class in this country now, but the pool compels the long line to charge $12.50, just the same as the short line.

Now, while the rate war is going on, to force the weak line into the pool, tickets from Chicago to Kansas City can be bought for $3, and by ticket brokers the same as anyone else. The war rate is $3. The regular rate from Chicago to Kansas City is $12.50. The regular rate from New York to Chicago is $20, and from New York to Kansas City by way of Chicago is $31.50. A party goes to the New York railroad office and finds the price of a ticket to Kansas City is $31.50. He goes to the ticket broker, who says: "I will get you to Kansas City for $25." How does he do this? Does he have to forge or counterfeit a ticket or perpetrate a fraud? He simply goes to the railroad office and buys a ticket from New York to Chicago for $20, hands that to his customer, and gives him a prepaid order on his broker in Chicago for a ticket from there to Kansas City, for which the Chicago broker charges the New York broker $4, or $1 more than the $3 it cost him. Each broker makes $1 and their customer saves $6.50. And yet we are told that a bill to destroy ticket brokers is a bill to "protect the traveling public!"

In the case just given the broker has taken advantage of a rate war, where stronger lines are engaged in driving weaker ones into a pool to force up rates against the traveling public. Naturally the strong lines are indignant that the ticket brokers should be hanging on their flanks on such occasions. It makes the process of forming pools a little more costly. Again, when the weak line has been driven into the pool and forced to charge $12.50 for a ticket from Chicago to Kansas City, just the same as the quicker transit line, it soon finds its passenger business falling off, but it dares not sell at its railroad office a ticket for less than the rate fixed by the pool. But it naturally seeks to evade its tyranny and does so through the medium of the ticket broker, who gets it custom by disposing of its tickets at lower rates.

The stronger line, through the natural promptings of greed, resorts to similar tactics, and so the front door of the ticket broker's office becomes the back door of the railway offices, through which a number of them are sneaking out to evade the requirements of the pool. Destroy the ticket broker, and you strengthen the hands of the pool and defeat the very purpose for which the Interstate Commission was organized. And yet we are gravely told that "the Interstate Commission has recommended the passage of this bill!"

Now, let us take another case, where the railroads are engaged in discriminating in favor of a large city against a smaller one. The regular rate for a ticket from Chicago to New York by way of Washington is $18, and the regular rate from Chicago to Washington is $17.50, or only 50 cents less from Chicago to Washington than from Chicago to New York by way of Washington. And yet if you buy a ticket from Washington to New York you will have to pay $6.50 for it. A traveler wants to come to Washington, and goes to the railroad office and finds the ticket will cost him $17.50, or nearly as much as a ticket to New York, which is only $18. He goes to a ticket broker, who says: "I will get you to Washington for $14." Does the broker forge or counterfeit a railroad ticket? He simply goes to the railroad office and buys a ticket to New York by way of Washington, sells that to the traveler for $19, and says, "Here is an order on my broker in Washington to pay you a rebate of $5 on presentation to him of the Washington to New York part of this ticket." The Washington broker afterwards sells that ticket for about $5.75 to some traveler going to New York, and makes for himself about 75 cents by the operation and saves the traveler about the same amount.

In this case the ticket broker has taken advantage of the fact that the railroads are discriminating against Washington, and to the extent above stated he has modified that discrimination, which the Interstate Commission, with all its power and expense to the Government, has never been able to do. And yet we are gravely told that the Interstate Commission, organized to prevent discriminations, has recommended the passage of this bill, and that "good people and church people, all over this land, have petitioned us to pass it!"

It is perfectly evident, Mr. Speaker, that the wrongful acts of the railways themselves have furnished business for the brokers. The scalper's business is simply the outgrowth of the railway discriminations and railway pools, and yet the proposition of this measure is to lop off the outgrowth and leave the railways undisturbed to continue in their wrongful acts. The pretense that the scalper promotes unjust discrimination by enabling people to purchase tickets at less than lawful rates is perfectly absurd. The Interstate Commission has established no legal rates, and the so-called "published rates" are simply those established by the unlawful pools themselves; so that the real substance of this complaint is that the broker is the medium by which the pool rates may be evaded; and that is the precise reason why the railways are seeking to have his business outlawed. Equally absurd is the talk about "preventing counterfeiting." There is already abundant law to punish that, and if the ticket brokers have been guilty of that offense, why is it that none of them have ever been convicted? Are the railroads too poor to employ detectives to catch and able counsel to convict them? Do they need an act of Congress and the help of the Federal Treasury to punish counterfeiters?

Coming now to another feature of this most remarkable measure, we find that it proposes to prohibit absolutely any ticket broker from engaging in his usual calling and occupation, and to punish him by a fine of as much as $1,000, and by imprisonment as much as one year, if he does so engage. Mind you, it not only proposes to visit this punishment upon those who have been guilty of selling false, forged, or counterfeited tickets or some other act of fraud or dishonesty, but also upon each and every ticket broker who dares to carry on his usual business, even in the manner I have before stated. Is it right or is it constitutional to so punish an American citizen? Upon this point I only deem it necessary to quote from an eminent law writer who is recognized as an authority upon such matters. He says:

> It is not contended that the business of ticket brokerage is in itself of a fraudulent character. The business can be honestly conducted by honest men. It is only claimed that in its prosecution the business presents manifold opportunities for the commission of fraud. As has already been stated, the police regulation of an employment may extend to any length that may be necessary for the prevention and suppression of fraud in its pursuit; but an honest man can not be denied the privilege of conducting the business in an honest and lawful manner because dishonest men are in the habit of practicing gross and successful frauds upon those with whom they have dealings. If that were a justifiable ground for abolishing any business, many important, perhaps some of the most beneficial, employments and professions could be properly prohibited. There is no profession or employment that furnishes more abundant opportunities for the practice of frauds upon defenseless victims than does the profession of the law, and that profession has its ample proportion of knaves among its votaries, although the proportion is very much smaller than is popularly supposed. But it would be idle to assert that, because of the frequency of fraudulent practices among lawyers, the State could abolish the profession and forbid the practice of the law. There is no difference in principle between the two cases. The business of ticket brokerage does afford many opportunities for fraud and deceit, and it may on that account be placed under strict police surveillance. But the business serves a useful end, when honestly conducted, and the constitutional liberty of the ticket broker is violated when he is prohibited altogether from carrying on his business. (Tiedeman's Limitations of Police Power, page 203.)

Now, Mr. Speaker, with whom did this proposed legislation originate? It originated with the powerful railroad corporations of this country. When was it ever known that they came to Congress asking for any legislation that was in the interest of the public? Can any man name a single measure that those railroad companies have ever asked for that was in the interest of the public? Whenever they ask for legislation in the interest of the public, the leopard will change his spots and the Ethiopian the color of his skin. It is an old maxim, "Beware of the Greeks when they come as messengers bearing gifts!" And when the railroad companies come here and ask for legislation professedly in the interest of the people, let the representatives of the people beware of the Trojan horse!

I tell you, sir, that the effect of this legislation will be to strengthen the hands of the railway pools and to weaken every power that now resists them. This measure may become a law, Mr. Speaker; I recognize the strength of the influences and forces that have been mustered to its support.

I make no quarrel with nor challenge the motives of anyone who may differ from me on this or any other subject; but, entertaining the views and opinions that I do, I would be recreant to my sense of duty if I did not oppose it, and I would resign my seat in Congress before I would vote for the passage of such a bill as this.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who speak upon the bill be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MAGUIRE. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that debate has been cut off, I ask that all members have leave to print on this question.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the same restriction be put upon this proposed leave that was made in a similar motion the other day, limiting the time to five days and confining the leave to print strictly to this question.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I interpose an objection to the last request, not to that of my colleague on the committee.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the request of the gentleman from California, and the Chair will put the request of the gentleman from New York, that members who have spoken upon this question have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD during the next five days. Is there objection?

Mr. MAGUIRE. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from California.

Mr. ELLETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY].

Mr. NORTHWAY. Mr. Speaker, I shall not have time to discuss the various phases of this bill within the limit of five minutes, but I desire to call attention to one or two points. The bill as it stands provides for pains and penalties to be inflicted on innocent passengers, but nowhere in the bill is there any provision for any pain, fine, or anything else in the nature of a penalty upon anyone connected with the railroad company, for refusing to do anything that he is called upon to do under the bill. If the ticket agent refuses to give you your receipt, there is no penalty, no fine, but the poor passenger can be sent to the penitentiary for a year, or assessed in damages for $1,000, for a single violation of this proposed law.

Let me call attention to the fact that this bill is the result of an organization on the part of the railroad companies to engage in pooling in the selling of tickets. It is said that a railway company has the right to write "nontransferable" on your ticket and that then you have no right to sell it. Why do they not undertake to do it? I will tell you. It is for two reasons. First, they are afraid that the law would not back them up in it, and second, they know that the people would not submit to it unless there was a law compelling them to do so. And here, in an amendment which has been put in to-day—not printed so that we can read it—is the very language which will ruin every passenger who desires to sell a ticket. The amendment reads:

> Strike out all after the word "Provided," in the second section, and insert "That the purchaser of a transferable ticket in good faith for personal use in the prosecution of a journey shall have the right to resell the same to a person who will in good faith personally use it in the prosecution of the journey."

Pass this bill with that provision, and then two strong railroad lines competing between two points will write upon their tickets "not transferable;" and then, the railroad companies having Congress to back them up by the forms of law, the passengar dare not sell his ticket to anybody, not even to his own wife or child, to make a return journey. You may pass such a law—you will put it through, in all human probability—but I warn you that you will hear from it inside of a year. [Applause.]

There is another thing to which I wish to call attention. The amendment which I have just read provides that if the ticket is transferable the holder of the ticket may have the right to resell it to a person who will in good faith personally use it. Suppose I purchase a ticket and can not complete my journey; suppose I sell it in good faith to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] or any other gentleman. Suppose that the person to whom I sell the ticket does not use it himself, but sells it to somebody else. What happens under this amendment? I am liable to be sent to the penitentiary for a year and fined to the amount of $1,000, because in the contemplation of this amendment I have violated the law, for, though I am allowed to sell the ticket, I must sell it to a person who will in good faith personally use it. I am obliged, therefore, to see that the man to whom I sell the ticket does use it in good faith. The effect of this bill, then, is simply to stop the reselling of tickets in any form—to give a railroad company the benefit of all the unused portion of a ticket, or to compel you to sell that unused portion to the company.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], in defending the fourth section of this bill, states that you may return your ticket to an agent of the railroad company, and may take his receipt, and that he will then forward the ticket to the main office of the company, get the money for it, and give it to you. Sir, that is not in the bill. The provision is that the agent will give you a receipt, which will be redeemed when presented at the home office. The burden is thrown upon all passengers of taking the chance of losing these certificates. Some of these unused portions of tickets may be worth only 20, 30, 40, or 50 cents; and the holder of them must take the chance of sending them a thousand miles, and of losing them in the mails.

All these burdens are heaped upon passengers; and they are all for the benefit of the railroad companies. You may pass this bill if you wish to do so. You have the full power to pass it. But I urge you to think the matter over after you have passed the bill, and see whether you have acted in the interest of the public. We are here to act for the patient, nameless millions—not for corporations. The corporations have no difficulty in getting a hearing. I doubt whether in my own county there is an employee of a railroad company who has not joined in petitioning for the passage of this bill; and three or four preachers who have been threatened that their tickets may be taken from them if this thing is persisted in have also sent in their petitions.

Think of it! In my own village a petition was gotten up, signed by all the railroad employees there, while the entire public having no connection with railroad corporations thundered against the measure and were indignant and outraged at the means by which it was worked up. Railroad men! You have 100,000, you can probably have a million, people signing these petitions—members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, railway trainmen, station agents, etc.; they are all signers of these petitions, of course. The supporters of this bill kindly inform us that this is a measure in the interest of the people. Sir, there was never an assault made by moneyed powers upon the rights of the millions that was not accompanied by the sweet assurance that it was for the benefit of the dear people. Injustice always comes clothed in the garb of justice, that it may more surely stab to the death that in whose name it fraudulently appeals.

Do you think that this mighty lobby (the most powerful I have ever seen about the Capitol) is here in the name of the people? Do you think the railroad companies who are urging clergymen, many of whom are carrying in their pockets tickets purchased largely below ordinary rates, to sign printed petitions furnished for the purpose by such companies, asking members of Congress to support this pending measure, are doing so for the benefit of the traveling public? But we are told that this measure will, if enacted into law, work no hardship, because it provides that the company selling a ticket shall redeem any unused portion of such ticket. Do you not know that such a provision is but a snare?

How is it proposed to redeem the unused portion of a ticket? Mark the exceeding liberality of the measure. The passenger who desires to have redeemed the unused portion of a ticket must step into the office of the company where he breaks his journey, surrender his ticket, and receive (mark how kindly considerate the company is) a receipt from the company's agent which, when presented to the home office of the company, will entitle him to receive in return for such unused ticket a sum of money which equals the difference between the amount paid for such ticket and the fare one way between the starting point and the station where such receipt is issued. The home office may be a thousand miles away, but the passenger must take the chances of having his receipt lost or stolen and also of the refusal of the company to redeem such receipt. The amount may be small and the trouble great, but no matter, for we are told that the public may be ——.

Why should not such agent, instead of giving a receipt, pass out the small amount of change needed to redeem such ticket and so save the passenger from further trouble?

Why, of course it is easy to understand why, because many of such receipts being for small sums will never be presented for redemption, and so the company will save all such amounts.

Let me state a case to show how this bill, if enacted, will operate against the passenger.

The price of a round-trip ticket between this city and New York is $10, while the price of a ticket from this city to New York is $6.50. Suppose a passenger who holds a round-trip ticket when he reaches New York desires to go to some other part of the country and so will not need the return portion of his ticket.

Now, he can sell such unused portion to a broker or some other person for probably $5, for anyone who buys it will save on his fare from New York to Washington $1.50.

But let this bill but become law and such passenger can not sell his ticket to a broker without becoming liable to a penalty of not to exceed $1,000, and an added penalty, if the court sees fit, of imprisonment in the penitentiary for one year.

Under this enactment such passenger can dispose of his unused ticket to the company selling it for just $3.50 only, for that is the difference between the price paid for the ticket, $10, and the price of a fare one way, $6.50.

So this law will cheat, that is the proper word, the passenger out of $1.50 worth of property which he has honestly bought and paid for, and which he should have the undoubted right to sell as he sees fit just as much as he should have the right to sell his horse or cow, but in the selling of which to a broker, under this law, he lays himself liable to be treated as a felon and confined in the penitentiary for one year, and his family robbed of a thousand dollars to pay his fine. In the name of justice, is there no limit to this outrage?

Do you suppose the people will tamely submit to such unwarrantable interference with the right of contract and with the right to honestly buy and as honestly sell property?

They may be long-suffering, but the time comes when, in the wild rush of passion and prejudice, they will strike back such blows of retaliation, unjust it may be, as will injure these great corporations and so indirectly injure the public. But these companies must remember then that they were the aggressors, and that the people will not tamely submit to being branded as felons and incarcerated in felons' cells for honestly disposing, as they may see fit, of that which they have bought of the companies who seek to brand them as felons or incarcerate them in a felon's cell.

I will join in any just measure which will punish all persons for frauds practiced upon these companies, and for every improper or unlawful use of a ticket, but I will ever protest, while I represent the intelligent constituency I do, against any and all infringements upon the people's rights. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELLETT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY].

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, I have known hours and sessions and days and weeks of this Congress to be frittered away upon trivial and unimportant questions; yet I see members of the Republican party, fresh from the triumph of a national election, "railroading" through this bill which concerns the rights and interests of the whole traveling public, and in a special manner the great business communities, in so far as it affects the convenience of commercial travelers—we behold, I say, the majority of this House rushing this bill through under a gag law which prevents anything like an adequate discussion of the merits or demerits of the measure. It almost seems as if what our opponents charged against us in the last campaign is about to be verified by our official conduct here, that the saturnalia of corporate greed, under the direction of the Republican party, is to take possession of the Republic. [Loud applause.]

I have no time in the two minutes allotted me to do more than adduce one argument against the adoption of this bill; and that is an argument to the force of which the history of my own State bears record. The people always keep their obligations to the railroads; the railroads, if they can avoid it, very seldom honor their obligations to the people. [Applause.] In making that statement I hope I am too intelligent to be animated by any unworthy prejudice against these great agents of civilization, which bind together the cities, States, and sections of our country in the fellowship of progress.

But facts are facts. The railroad magnate came to the constitutional convention of New York, and said: "If you abolish the free-pass system now in vogue, we will reduce the passenger fares at once and the public will appreciate the boon." Thereupon the people of the State of New York, through their constitutional representatives, enacted a law forbidding officers or employees of the State to ride upon free passes. That law has been in operation for three years or more, but up to date there has not been the slightest indication on the part of these railroads that they would fulfill their part of the agreement and reduce passenger rates for the benefit of the people.

Mr. Speaker, there is no opportunity to discuss the spurious petitions adduced in favor of this iniquitous measure, but, as a more than sufficient offset, I submit a list of twenty-six representative American journals which have denounced the bill now before us. They are as follows: New York Times, Syracuse News, Denver Republican, New York Evening News, Omaha World-Herald, Chicago Journal, Toledo Commercial, Staunton (Va.) Argus, Kansas City Star, Arkansas Gazette, Charleston Post, Detroit News, Dallas Herald-Times, Memphis Commercial-Appeal, Louisville Courier-Journal, Chattanooga Times, Duluth Evening Herald, Cleveland Plain Dealer, Wheeling Register, Sioux City Journal, Richmond State, Cleveland Leader, Roanoke Times, Baltimore Herald, New York World, St. Louis Star. These are by no means all. Throughout the land, wherever the people have been able to make their wishes heard, there is an ever-increasing chorus of protest against the passage of this legislation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELLETT. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MAGUIRE].

[Mr. MAGUIRE addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. ELLETT. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. It is not right, Mr. Speaker, to pass a bill of this importance without the privilege of debate and the opportunity to offer amendments. This practice in recent years has become so familiar to this body that it seems no longer to occasion comment or criticism. From the extreme of unlimited debate the parliamentary pendulum has swung to the other equally reprehensible extreme of practically no debate at all upon great questions. The rule of this body is the arbitrary will of a majority buttressed upon the expression of committees only. The House has substantially relinquished its functions as a deliberative body. Committees rule here ofttimes by the wanton application of the previous question. The individual Representative is minimized. The House of Representatives itself no longer attracts the attention of the country as in other days. The scepter has indeed departed from Judah. When issues affecting the Republic are considered, the body at the other end of the Capitol, in the main, challenges the attention of the country.

How often have we witnessed the passage of bills carrying enormous liabilities—in one instance of more than seventy-five millions, in another exceeding fifty millions—at railroad speed. Over and over again the passage of measures affecting all the people is accelerated with parliamentary whip and spur.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, is of vital moment to the traveling public. It also affects the vast railway system of the United States, and yet it is to be rushed to a vote without offering an opportunity to perfect it by amendment and with the limitation upon debate of twenty minutes all told.

I would not, sir, knowingly do injustice to any railroad. I would deal with them as I would deal with the people. Both are alike entitled to equal and exact justice from Congress. Neither should ask or receive an unfair advantage.

The railroads should have an equality of opportunity in so far as legislation can properly promote such a policy. The people demand and must be accorded a like privilege.

Along the lines of legislative action which are in harmony with this fundamental doctrine of the Republic I desire to move. I will go no further to promote the interests of any class of our people, it matters not how worthy they may be. In the brief moment so kindly yielded by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ELLETT] I only desire to add a single word.

An appeal comes from one of my warmest friends urging me to support this bill; but, sir, as I understand its provisions, it seems that I should surrender my commission as the Representative of the splendid Third Missouri district rather than support the vicious principle involved in this measure. [Applause.] In my judgment its effect will be to stifle competition and legalize railroad pooling as to passenger rates. I shall oppose the bill, and I hope the House will vote it down. [Applause.]

Mr. ELLETT. Mr. Speaker, it is with great reluctance that I presume to differ with the Interstate Commerce Commission and my colleagues of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I have always made it a rule to concur with the majority of the committee when I differed with it in minor details or nonessentials, but when I differ on what I consider to be some essential principle of equity or justice, it is my duty as a Representative to do all in my power to sustain what I deem the right and vigorously oppose the wrong. Hence the minority views set forth by myself in opposition to House bill No. 10090.

The reasons why I do not think this bill should become a law are as follows, viz:

First. It is highly improper to rush so important a measure as this through the House with virtually no debate thereon.

Second. The committee has had no information upon the subject except that which comes from the published reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission, which show that they are based on reports received from railroad officials who are interested parties. The representatives of ticket brokerage, which this bill proposes to destroy, have been given no opportunity of a hearing either before the Interstate Commerce Commission in reply or before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Third. The bill would destroy a business of thirty years' standing, which is in the interest of the public in that it promotes healthy competition in passenger traffic and prevents the carrying out of illegal compacts.

Fourth. By the destruction of the business named the public would be compelled to pay higher rates for passenger fares without receiving a benefit in return for this deprivation.

But first let us consider the legal objections to this bill and then we will take up other reasons why it should not become a law.

First legal objection.—The restraints and prohibitions which this act seeks to impose upon the right of a holder of a railroad ticket to sell or transfer it for a consideration are not valid.

An ordinary railroad ticket purports upon its face to be good in the hands of the holder. The original purchaser may never use it, but one of the essential qualities of the ticket which he has bought is its transferability. This quality is part of the consideration of his purchase. Hence the recognized legal right of the purchaser who has paid value for the ticket which he holds to sell it for value. It may be bought and sold as freely as any other chattel or evidence of right which passes by delivery. Owing to a variety of causes, a lawful traffic has sprung up in this article of recognized and known value—and in all large cities—where the buyer and seller call in the aid of the broker, in dealing in almost every article of traffic, the holder will always find a market for his unused ticket at the office of the ticket broker. The farmer who sells his grain upon the market, the corporation that issues its stock, and the railroad company who sells its ticket entitling the holder to a passage, each transfers to the purchaser a species of property, with the right impressed upon it to dispose of it to anyone for whatever he pleases.

The third absolute right of every Englishman—is that of property, which consists in the free enjoyment and disposal of all his acquirements without control or diminution save by the laws of the land.

Says Blackstone—

And Chancellor Kent says:

The exclusive right of using and transferring property follows as a natural consequence from the perception and admission of the right itself. * * * The power of alienation of property is a necessary incident to the right.

Transferability and value can not, therefore, be taken from the owner of a ticket by an act of Congress unless the expressions "the law of the land" and "due process of law" mean, among other things, an act of Congress.

Judge Comstock says in Wynehamer vs. The People (13 N. Y., 392):

To say, as has been suggested, that "the law of the land" or "due process of law" may mean every act of the legislature which deprives the citizen of his rights, privileges, and property leads to a simple absurdity. The Constitution would then mean that no person shall be deprived of his property or rights unless the legislature shall pass a law to effectuate the wrong, and this would be throwing the restraint entirely away.

And Chancellor Kent says (2 Com., 13):

The better and larger definition of "due process of law" is that it means law in its regular course of administration through courts of justice.

Suppose the farmer procures the passage of a law that all products of the farm sold and not eaten by the purchaser shall be returned to him for redemption at cost price, a parallel absurdity would be presented. Are the restraints and prohibitions which this act seeks to impose upon the right of the holder of a railroad ticket to sell or transfer it for a consideration valid? One of the fundamental limitations upon the power of Congress is that which provides that the citizen "shall not be deprived of his property without due process of law." It is well settled that an act of Congress is not "due process of law." (See Amendments Constitution, Article V.)

"Property," within the meaning of this provision, is "everything which has an exchangeable value." (Swayne, J., 16 Wall., 127.) The right of property has been defined as "the exclusive right of using and disposing of a thing as one's own." (Bouvier's L. Dict., volume 2, 346.) Its "free use, enjoyment, and disposal." (Blackstone's Com., volume 1, 138.)

"The power of alienation," says Chancellor Kent (Kent's Com., volume 2, 310), "is a necessary incident to the right." An examination of the provisions of this act will show that in a majority of cases it is substantially destructive of this "right of alienation." The right of property must embrace not only the thing itself, but its ordinary and essential characteristics, of which the power of sale is one. The protection of property must necessarily extend to that essential and valuable right, and every law which makes it criminal for him to exercise that right deprives him of his property "without due process of law."

It is difficult to distinguish such a law from a law which would prohibit the buyer of a barrel of flour from selling it to anyone but the manufacturer, and everyone from selling it but the manufacturer's agent. If it is in the power of Congress to retain for the railroad company by penal statute the control of and exclusive right to repurchase the transferable ticket which it has issued, it would seem to be in its power to extend the same protection to each peculiar interest, and thus bind the hands of the citizen in the interest of every monopoly.

Second legal objection.—This act confiscates the property of the citizen without just compensation.

"Congress in exercising supreme control over the regulation of commerce can take private property only on payment of just compensation." (Monongahela Navigation Co. vs. U. S., 148 U. S., 312.)

Any law which prohibits the citizen from engaging in a lawful occupation is invalid.

Third legal objection.—This act does prohibit anyone from engaging in an occupation which, in my judgment, is a lawful one. It not only prohibits citizens from engaging in that occupation in the future, but deprives those who have already engaged in it of their chosen means of livelihood. Because these tickets are transferable and the proper subjects of purchase and sale, and owing to the differences in rates which railroads have established at different points, charging at one point one price and at another another price for traveling the same distance, a regular traffic in them has grown up.

In all our large cities there are firms engaged in buying and selling railroad tickets as a regular occupation. They have offices and have invested their means in a stock in trade. They have acquired whatever special knowledge is necessary for its successful prosecution. Their business is open and their places of business are known to the traveling public. For years past the business has been as much the chosen occupation of a class of citizens as the business of buying and selling grain or any other merchantable commodity. There has been nothing hitherto in the nature of the business which has made it contrary to law. Those engaged in it buy and sell an article which is in its nature a lawful subject of purchase and sale. Their business is a lawful one. The effect of this law is to prohibit it. All citizens are forbidden by law from engaging in it, and those who have chosen it as an occupation, if they obey this law, will be compelled to abandon it.

The right to pursue a lawful occupation is a fundamental right of the citizen. If a constitutional guaranty were needed for its protection, it is found in that provision of the bill of rights which guarantees to him "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

The theory upon which political institutions rest is that all men have certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that in the pursuit of happiness all advocations, all honors, all positions, are alike open to everyone. (Cummings vs. State, 4 Wall., 321.)

There is no more sacred right of citizenship—

Says Justice Bradley—

than the right to pursue unmolested a lawful employment in a lawful manner. It is nothing more nor less than the sacred right of labor. (Live Stock Assen. vs. Crescent City, 1 Abb. U. S. R., 398.)

And in the famous Slaughterhouse Cases (16 Wall., 122) it is decided that—

A law which prohibits a large class of citizens from adopting a lawful employment or from following a lawful employment previously adopted does deprive them of liberty as well as property without due process of law. Their right of choice is a portion of their liberty; their occupation is their property.

In Arrowsmith vs. Burlington (4 McLean, 497), the court says, "A freeman may buy and sell at his pleasure. This right is not of society, but from nature. He never gave it up."

The right of every citizen to pursue a lawful occupation is guaranteed to him by the fundamental law.

There is no right so essential to his happiness, or so intimately connected with the enjoyment of the property which he may acquire. If Congress can constitutionally prohibit him from carrying on the business of buying and selling railroad tickets, it can prohibit him from buying and selling grain, stocks, provisions, or any other article of trade. So long as he carries on his business by honest and fair means, it is as much entitled to the protection of the law as any other lawful occupation.

There is undoubtedly vested in the legislatures of the States an undefined power known as the police power, which extends to all regulations affecting the health, good order, or morals of society.

It is, however, well settled that the legislative power can not give to an act the character of a police regulation by calling it such. The law must relate to a subject which is the proper subject of police regulation. The legislative branch of the Government can not, under pretense of police regulations, encroach on the rights of the citizen.

It has been claimed by the promoters of this bill that it was designed to prevent fraud upon travelers by persons falsely representing themselves as the agents of railroads. But such is not the design or scope of the act. If it prohibited such false representations and provided for their punishment, it would be a legislative exercise of police power. Instead, however, of providing for the punishment of those who make use of fraudulent methods of carrying on the business, it prohibits the business itself.

The fact that misrepresentation can be made use of in buying and selling an article is no justification for a law which prohibits its purchase and sale altogether.

But enough as to the law. Now let us look to the facts relating to this proposed bill.

The facts clearly establish that a large majority of the people are benefited by and therefore favor the ticket brokerage business, as the people secure cheaper tickets through the people's agents—the ticket brokers. The only interests benefited are the amalgamated railroad systems, who desire to monopolize the entire railroad business of the country; therefore, it is a case of the people versus these strong lines.

Not all railroads favor this bill. Weaker and independent lines know that ticket brokerage alone saves them from the three powerful passenger associations or trusts, and the bankruptcy and final absorption which would follow if they were absolutely under the dictation of these associations. This check upon the concentration of all the railroads of the country in a few hands is one of the greatest benefits derived by the people through ticket brokerage. A striking illustration of this is when weaker lines are boycotted by order of the associations. But for ticket brokerage the weaker lines would get no through passengers and would consequently have to stop their trains. In all such cases the interests of the broker and the people carry them to the support of the boycotted line and enable it to successfully resist the boycott.

Another valuable consideration to the public is the unsurpassed convenience and generality of information the many brokers' offices throughout the country afford the traveling public. I knew a business man to be in New York with a return Baltimore and Ohio coupon to Washington. He suddenly had a call farther South, and learning that the Baltimore and Ohio train would not make connection with the Atlantic Coast Line, he went to a broker, paid him 50 cents, and procured a ticket over the Pennsylvania road, made direct connection, saved six hours and thirty-five minutes in reaching his destination, besides considerable living expense had he been forced to wait in New York City. Did the Baltimore and Ohio lose anything? Did the Pennsylvania lose anything? No. The broker made 50 cents out of the passenger, and the passenger saved many times this in expense and six hours and thirty-five minutes, and boasted of the convenience and profit the broker had been to him. How many just such cases do you suppose occur daily in the great city of New York alone? It would be unreasonable to doubt that the other great cities of the country would daily run such examples up into the thousands, saving to business men many valuable hours besides money.

One of the greatest benefits to the traveling public is the quickness and ease with which the information is acquired from brokers respecting the various routes through any section of the country. The information obtained from the broker of the advantages and disadvantages of the various routes could not be had except by personal solicitation at the local office of each company. And even in this case the passenger talks with a decidedly interested party, and is not liable to be as fairly, frankly, and fully advised as he would be by a broker.

When a passenger buys a ticket what does he buy? Surely not the paper or pasteboard. He receives nothing for his money until he has been given the service by the company which the ticket promises. To prohibit the transfer of this service when it is ascertained by the purchaser that he can not personally use it is as unjust as to decree that a man shall not sell a coat that does not fit him simply because he designed to wear it when he ordered it. How is it unfair, unjust, or unprofitable to the railroad company? They have received all they asked to perform the service—every dollar. Does it cost them any more to haul one man than another? If they were in any way required to receive less than they offered to perform the service for, then their complaint would at least be clothed in reason and deserve some consideration. But they come confessing, by the possession of the tickets by the public, the receipt of their own fixed consideration, and ask legislation to impose hardship or loss upon the purchaser, that their revenues may be enlarged by not rendering to some one the service for which they have been paid. Well they know that in commercial America, where the telegraph so readily advises business men of the necessities of trade, that some great portion of the commercial army is hourly directed to change its line of march, and if they can by these changes secure what the business world now saves to itself through the brokers, their coffers would swell immensely.

It would not be attempted but that they know the business of the country must be prosecuted even if at increased cost. One would suppose that, owing to the increased freight traffic resulting from the labors of the traveling man, the railroads would be disposed to decrease his personal expenses. But such is not so. They are endeavoring to increase the expense rather than diminish it, by depriving him of the privileges he now enjoys through the ticket broker.

The chief plea of those advocating this measure is the counterfeiting and forging of tickets, and the dishonesty of some brokers. As to the first, everyone desires that the crime of counterfeiting and forging shall be suppressed. For myself, I would prefer to leave it to the States to punish such crimes within their borders; but if their laws are not sufficiently clear and comprehensive, I would gladly welcome a law of Congress punishing the counterfeiting and forging of interstate tickets. The chairman of the executive committee of the Ticket Brokers' Association stated in a hearing upon this bill before the Senate committee a few days since that the brokers would rejoice in the passage of such a law. As to the dishonesty of the brokers, every investigation has shown and will show that they are as honest as any other class of American citizens. And the absurdity of proposing to prohibit any pursuit because some who follow it are dishonest can not be more strikingly illustrated than by the railroad business itself.

Gentlemen on the other side admit that some railroad officials are dishonest. Would they remedy this by abolishing the railroad business? Or will the abolition of ticket brokerage make all railroad officials honest? On the contrary, it would be impossible to devise a system that would furnish greater facilities for fraud than this bill places at the disposal of the authorized ticket agent. To illustrate: The rate from Chicago to New York, via Washington, is $18; the rate from Chicago to Washington is $17.50, and from Washington to New York is $6.50. If you deprive the people of the ticket broker, to whom they can always readily dispose of the unused portion of tickets, you force them to sell these unused tickets at less than value to the so-called "authorized agent." Now, what is to prevent this "authorized agent" from paying the 50 cents for the redemption of the ticket on his own account and selling it at what he pleases and putting the amount into his pocket? It is evident that the object of the bill is to secure to the great railroad systems the sums the traveling public now save through the broker; but as for correcting fraud, I have shown that it tends to increase it by offering additional temptation.

In justice to the brokers it should be stated that their association protects the innocent and unwary traveler for whom the railroads and Interstate Commerce Commission seem to have such great solicitude, by paying the traveler for all illegal tickets sold him by one of its members, and expelling the offending member.

No one is more in sympathy with the purposes of the interstate-commerce law than myself. Its primary object was to prevent discrimination in freight and passenger rates, and, as understood, the Interstate Commerce Commission was created to enforce this as far as it laid in the power of Congress to do so.

I do not wish or intend to reflect on the honest purpose of the Commission, but in so far as the ticket broker is concerned they seemed to have lost sight of the purpose of the law and the object of their creation, for everyone knows that if the railroads would stop discrimination the ticket brokers' business would be at an end. No statute is necessary, but the simple cooperation of the railroads in the original purposes of the Interstate Commission law. But the Interstate Commerce Commission seem to have overlooked this fact, and it is but natural that they should have done so, as they have, from their own reports, clearly been guilty of the unjust and un-American course of securing all of their information from the railroad associations and of having failed to accord a hearing to the representatives of the Ticket Brokers' Association, though they have severely criticised and stigmatized them as criminals, annually, in each of their reports, since 1890. And this, though the brokers have frequently requested to be heard.

The duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission are quasi judicial; and what greater outrage to the American sentiment of fair play and the fundamental principle of constitutional liberty could be pictured than for an American court to pass criminal sentence upon a citizen without informing him of the nature of the charge against him; without confronting him with his accusers and the witnesses against him, and without giving him an opportunity to be heard in his own behalf?

In conclusion, I submit to this House that had the Interstate Commerce Commission made an investigation of this matter they would never have stated that there was a popular demand for the enactment of this law. But they would have known the following facts: That twenty-four State legislatures and three successive Congresses have dropped this identical bill into the waste basket; that a hundred thousand traveling salesmen, who are the most expert and experienced travelers in America, and who should know what is to their interest, are knocking at the doors of Congress, through their associations, requesting that this bill be defeated; that manufacturers and merchants all over the land, who know their business interests, have united in this request. And they would have concluded that the people, and especially the medium rich and the poor, who constitute the large majority, are opposed to and not in favor of this bill. And they would have recognized the most important fact of all, that the ticket broker was a public benefactor rather than a public nuisance, and the sole parties to be benefited by such a law were those powerful railway systems of the country who expect by such legislation so much the sooner to absorb all the systems of the land practically into one grand monopoly.

The Republicans on this floor have a large majority, and, having virtually made this a party measure by applying the party whip all along the line, it does appear, as has been so well said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAHANY], a Republican himself, that the Republican party is making good our charge against it. The gentleman from New York said:

> It almost seems as if what our opponents charged against us in the last campaign is about to be verified by our official conduct here, that the saturnalia of corporate greed, under the direction of the Republican party, is to take possession of the Republic. [Loud applause.]

And I again indorse the gentleman from New York when he disavows prejudice against railroads in the following words:

> In making that statement, I hope I am too intelligent to be animated by any unworthy prejudice against these great agents of civilization, which bind together the cities, States, and sections of our country in the fellowship of progress.

No, Mr. Speaker; I am not prejudiced against railroads, but in the interest of the people, in the interest of the traveling public, and in the interest of the weaker lines, I oppose this vicious legislation, which can only benefit completed and strong systems by enabling them to first bind the weaker hand and foot and ultimately to absorb them, greatly to the injury of the public and the country.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I want to remind gentlemen who have made such dolorous complaints about the majority railroading this bill through that the majority ordering the previous question has been two to one, and I want to remind them further that a proposition was made for debate that there should be an hour on a side. Instead of accepting that——

Mr. ELLETT. We asked two hours.

Mr. HEPBURN. Instead of accepting that, you wasted the time by filbustering processes.

Mr. MAHANY. It was not enough.

Mr. TERRY. You refused us three hours.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to remind the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTHWAY] that his solicitude about those who will be affected by the amendments of the committee is a little misplaced. He sympathizes with the man who has made a contract not transferable, who, in violation of his contract, proposes to transfer it. He is very solicitous that the man who is attempting to commit a fraud shall not, in addition to that, commit a crime.

This bill interferes with no contract that is made. It gives to every man all the rights that he has under the contract that he has made. These gentlemen seem to think that in some way or other he should have a guardian to invest him with rights that he himself does not care to secure.

Certain gentlemen tell us that they are opposed to this bill because it is going to make preferences and discriminations possible. Not so. It is to prevent a widespread system of preferences and discriminations. Gentlemen say that it is right and proper for the weaker railroads to sell in quantities their tickets to the scalper, and for him to disseminate them. Is not that discrimination? Not only a discrimination against localities, but it is an attempt to take advantage of those of the locality he is apparently dealing in good faith with. But let me remind gentlemen that this bill does not necessarily prevent that kind of traffic. It simply requires that when men engage in it they shall confess the fact. That is all. Every ticket that can be bought now from a railroad company by a scalper can be bought under the provisions of this law.

The only change required is that if a railway company proposes to make that scalper its agent for the sale of tickets it shall give him a certificate of that fact, and that the scalper shall expose the certificate in his place of business. Further it makes no limitation upon him in that direction of any kind. Every right that he has now in dealing with a railway company—"the weaker roads"—every kind of traffic that he can engage in now, he can engage in under the provisions of this law, provided there is proper publicity given to the transaction and that the company selling him the ticket shall constitute him its agent. Why should not that be so? What possible objection is there to that? None in fair dealing and in honesty. The pretense of my friends on that side of the House that they are laboring now in the interest of the "dear people" is a delusion, a misstatement, a fraud.

There is nothing in it. The bill protects the people. It is in the interest of the people. It works no hardship of any character upon the people. It is in their interest in another direction. The Interstate Commerce Commission, after investigating the matter, found that this illegitimate business, the business of these self-constituted middlemen—middlemen whom that side of the House are always railing against in platforms and in political speeches—costs more than a million dollars. Who pays that? The people whom our friends are so much interested in, who get the difference in the unused ticket that they are compelled or fancy they are compelled to sell—the difference between the price the scalpers give and the price the company must pay the holder under the provisions of this bill.

After this bill becomes law there is no such compulsion upon the holder of an unused ticket. He is not remanded to the ticket broker, but under the provision of this bill the railroad company must pay. Now, they do not get from the ticket scalper as large a sum as they will get, under the provisions of this bill, from the railroads. The scalper's ticket is sold all over the United States. The ticket scalper is in all large cities, and the people whom these gentlemen are so solicitous about support him. He becomes, by reason of this bill, if he is not now, a superfluous and unnecessary middleman. Now he gives a pittance for the unused ticket. Under the bill the railroad company must pay full value. The Interstate Commerce Commission, year after year, after giving a careful attention to this subject, have asked the passage of this law; repeatedly, over and over again, they have made their requests, backed by cogent arguments. I think the House ought now to listen to them. I think that all they have said is shown to have the merit of argument, the logic of common sense and of justice to the people behind it.

Mr. ELLETT. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman who objected has withdrawn his objection, and I make the request that all gentlemen who have spoken upon this question may have permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken upon this subject may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. ELLETT. I demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. It has not yet been ordered to be engrossed. It is after it has passed to that stage that the reading of the engrossed bill can be demanded.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the rule provides that it can be done at either time. I think the rule has been construed that it can be done before or after, and therefore I did not in the beginning raise the point that could be made here. That is the only reason why I will not make a motion to recommit at this time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. ELLETT. I now demand the reading of the engrossed bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands the reading of the engrossed bill. That not being present, the matter will lie over until the engrossed bill is produced.

Mr. BAILEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAILEY. Preceding the engrossment of the bill, would it be in order to move to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks that should come after the third reading.

Mr. BAILEY. That is my own opinion; and that is the reason I desired to make the motion a moment ago.

RETURN OF BILL TO THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request of the Senate; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 26, 1897.

Be it resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 3608) setting apart a plot of public ground in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, for memorial purposes under the auspices of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

PREVENTION OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I ask for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 261) for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas in view of the alarming nature and spread of the bubonic plague, now prevalent in India and adjacent countries, and in view of the danger of this scourge being brought to the United States: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That at any port or place in the United States where the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem it necessary for the prevention of the introduction of contagious or infectious disease from a foreign port or place that incoming vessels, vehicles, or persons should be inspected by a national quarantine officer, such officer shall be designated or appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, on recommendation of the Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service; and at any such port or place no vessel, vehicle, or person from a foreign port or place shall be admitted to entry or enter without the certificate of said officer that the United States quarantine regulations have been complied with.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have some explanation of this.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire whether this comes up on a motion to suspend the rules or on a request for unanimous consent? How did it get before the House?

Mr. BENNETT. I have presented it under the call of the committee. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the report be read as a part of my remarks.

The report (by Mr. BENNETT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 261) for the prevention of the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, submit the following report:

In view of the alarming nature and spread of the bubonic plague, now prevalent in India and adjacent countries, and in view of the danger of this scourge being brought to the United States, this legislation is deemed necessary.

Section 3 of the quarantine act of February 15, 1893, provides that—

"Where the State or municipal health authorities fail or refuse to enforce the quarantine rules and regulations of the Treasury Department, the President shall execute and enforce the same, and adopt such measures as in his judgment shall be necessary to prevent the introduction or spread of such diseases, and may detail or appoint officers for that purpose."

Before the President can be called upon to adopt the measures enacted above, evidence must be furnished him that the quarantine authorities are not enforcing the regulations; opportunity must be given the quarantine officers to refute the charges, and while the matter is being discussed disease is liable to be admitted.

The proposed law would give the Secretary of the Treasury the right to appoint immediately, when he considered it necessary, an inspecting officer, attached to the national quarantine service, and the proposed law would give greater force to the position of such officer, and in fact to the officers at all the quarantine stations.

This joint resolution has received the approval of the Treasury Department in a letter of date of February 12, 1897, in which the Secretary states that this measure is rendered necessary in view of the alarming reports from India and Europe concerning the spread of the bubonic plague.

Your committee has given this matter their attention and consider the subject so important as to call for general legislation, and hence recommend the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BENNETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MILNES, the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MILNES. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 90.

So the motion was rejected.

DEEP WATERWAYS BETWEEN THE LAKES AND ATLANTIC OCEAN.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 5,000 copies of the message of the President of January 18, 1897, and of the report of the commissioners appointed under the act of March 2, 1895, to inquire into deep waterways between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean, accompanying the same, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,500 for the use of the House, and 500 for the use of the commissioners.

The report of the Committee on Printing was read, as follows:

The Committee on Printing having had under consideration Senate concurrent resolution No. 59, for the printing of 5,000 additional copies of the message of the President of January 18, 1897, and the report of the commissioners appointed under the act of March 2, 1895, to inquire into deep waterways between the Great Lakes and the Atlantic Ocean, accompanying the same, recommend that the same be agreed to.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of the work provided for under this resolution at $4,000.

The rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was adopted.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees.

Mr. LOUD (when the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (S. 1811) to extend the uses of the mail service.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be lawful for the postal cards and envelopes, with coupons attached, as patented and now or hereafter owned by the United States Economic Postage Association or its successors, a corporation created under and by the laws of the State of West Virginia, to be carried in the mails of the United States, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Postmaster-General, and the postage thereon, at the regular postal-card and letter rates, paid on presentation of the coupons from the said cards and envelopes when detached at the office of delivery; and the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, test the practical operation of this act in such one or more cities as he may select before extending it generally throughout the country, and if the result be unfavorable, suspend its operation altogether.

SEC. 2. That before the said cards and envelopes shall be so carried through the mails the said association shall enter into a bond to the United States, with corporate or other sufficient security, to be approved in form and sufficiency by the Postmaster-General, in the sum of $100,000, or such larger sum as the Postmaster-General shall in the beginning or from time to time prescribe, conditioned for the redemption in cash when presented of each and every one of said coupons taken from cards and envelopes at the office of delivery. Upon failure at any time for ten days to redeem said coupons in cash the Postmaster-General may, by order, stop the carrying of said envelopes and cards in the mails of the United States.

SEC. 3. That all cards and envelopes furnished by the United States Economic Postage Association shall conform in size to the requirements of the Post-Office Department; shall be used only for return messages; shall have printed thereon, and upon the coupon attached thereto, the address of the individual, firm, company, or corporation to whom such cards and envelopes are to be returned; and may also have printed upon the address side the penalty prescribed for any violation of this act, and upon each coupon such words as will indicate that the postage will be paid when the card or envelope is delivered to the addressee.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful to mail, and postmasters and other postal officials shall refuse to send or carry in the mails, any envelopes or cards of the said association on which the name of the individual, firm, company, or corporation imprinted thereon has been erased; and any person convicted of the violation of this statute shall be fined not exceeding $100, or imprisoned not more than thirty days on failure or refusal to pay the fine.

SEC. 5. That said association shall pay postage upon each and every piece of matter passing through the mails, which shall be patented or now or hereafter owned by said association or its successors.

SEC. 6. That said association shall, if required by the Postmaster-General, at all times keep a sum in cash, deposited as the Postmaster-General may direct, sufficient in amount for the redemption of said coupons daily or weekly, or monthly.

SEC. 7. That in every case where an envelope of the said association when mailed carries more than a single-rate message, the postmaster shall place upon the coupon attached to said envelope and cancel as many postage-due stamps as may be required by existing law, in the same manner as is now done with all other similar mail matter; and the said association shall redeem and pay for the stamps so added to the coupons at the same time that the coupon is redeemed and paid for.

SEC. 8. That postmasters shall cancel all coupons attached to the cards and envelopes of said association in the same manner that stamps are now canceled, and shall be entitled to the same compensation for canceling said coupons as is allowed for the cancellation or sale of stamps.

SEC. 9. That nothing shall be paid by the United States Government for or on account of any patent owned by the United States Economic Postage Association, and no claim for damages shall be made or exist against the United States for or on account of the alteration, amendment, or repeal of this act.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, does this come up under the call of committees, or on a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. On the call of the committees.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill, I understand?

The SPEAKER. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I make the point of order that it is a bill which should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. I listened to the reading as best I could, and it seems to me that the bill clearly affects the revenues of the Government and makes a charge upon the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not listening to the reading, and he will be glad if the gentleman from Illinois will kindly point out the features of the bill which he thinks make it subject to the point of order. The Chair, following out the wishes of the House, desires that there shall be no matter introduced under the call of committees which involves expenditure on the part of the Government, or appropriation, or revenue. He has intended to carefully exclude all matters of that kind.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, if the point made by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is not well taken, I desire to raise the question of consideration on the bill.

The SPEAKER. That will be decided after the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me from a very hasty glance at this bill that it is subject to the point of order. I am not so familiar with it as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], but it seems to require an account to be kept by every postmaster in the country, involving, necessarily, an increase of force, and it requires additional work to be done by accounting officers——

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear what the gentleman is saying.

The SPEAKER. The House will please be in order.

Mr. MAHANY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. MAHANY, the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 81, noes 107.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word on the point of order. It seems to me that the point made by the gentleman from Illinois is not well taken. He assumes, because there is certain work to be done if this bill becomes a law, that that will entail a burden upon the Government. I do not think that brings the bill within the rule. The gentleman merely makes an assumption. There is no new arm of the Government provided for in the bill; there is no new force provided for; there is no appropriation in the bill. It simply proposes to carry out a certain work for which the Government is now thoroughly equipped, and non constat but the amount of work will be less, as I believe it will be under the provisions of this bill if it becomes a law. The ground of the gentleman's point of order is purely speculative. There is no direct charge upon the Treasury in the bill, no appropriation, nothing that brings it within the rule, and I believe it is properly upon the House Calendar and not subject to the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, the proposition is made in this bill, for the first time in the history of the Government, to give out to a private corporation the printing of what may be called the securities of the Government. Our postage stamps, which are now printed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, have been declared by Congress to be securities of the Government. Now, this bill proposes to allow a private concern to attach to postal cards and to the envelopes now printed by the Government as a part of its securities these coupons, sold by this company to any persons who may wish to use them in the mails in connection with postal cards or envelopes. Now, in every post-office of the country where these coupons may arrive, they must be set aside and an account kept so that this company may come in and redeem them. This of necessity will require the employment of additional force by the Government. It can not be otherwise. The stamps that now carry letters are canceled by the clerical force of the postal system. Not so with these coupons. A settlement must be made at the office of final delivery; and, as I have said, the keeping of the accounts for the purpose of making this settlement with this company will require additional clerical force.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the point made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is a mere matter of argument.

Mr. BINGHAM. It may be a matter of argument, but it is also clearly a matter of fact.

The SPEAKER. To sustain this point of order, in the opinion of the Chair, something further is required than has thus far been presented. Unless some other argument be submitted, the Chair will have to overrule the point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I now raise the question of consideration. This is a bill which ought not to pass this House at this time.

Mr. LOUD. I suggest that the gentleman is debating the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS]. The question is, Will the House consider the bill?

The question being taken, there were on a division (called for by Mr. LOUD)—ayes 54, noes 84.

Mr. MAHANY. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is a quorum present. [After counting the House.] There are 187 members present—a quorum. The noes have it, and the House refuses to consider the bill.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I think we are in bad temper, and therefore I move that the House adjourn.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER. The noes have it.

Mr. MAHANY. I call for a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 83, noes 110.

Mr. MAGUIRE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE YAZOO RIVER AT GREENWOOD, MISS.

Mr. LACEY. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PATTERSON] informs the Chair that by mistake the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was passed over before he had opportunity to address the Chair. The gentleman wishes, as the Chair understands, to call up a bridge bill. In the opinion of the Chair, it is fair that the bill should be reported.

The bill (H. R. 10272) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Yazoo River at or near the city of Greenwood, in Leflore County, in the State of Mississippi, was read.

Mr. PATTERSON. I will merely state to the House that this bill is in the usual form and has been approved by the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill under the rule?

Mr. HARDY. Is this a proposition to build a bridge over the Yazoo River near Yazoo City, Miss.?

Mr. CATCHINGS. No, sir; this proposed bridge is to be near Greenwood, very far north of Yazoo City. The people of the county interested desire to build this bridge at their own expense.

Mr. HARDY. I have made the inquiry because I think they ought to have had a bridge at Yazoo City many years ago, when certain gentlemen down there put my old friend Colonel Morgan (now dead and gone) upon a plank and sent him adrift in the Yazoo River because he was a Republican in the South.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have the pleasure of stating to the gentleman that if Colonel Morgan were there now, we could set him adrift upon a first-class steel bridge with a draw in it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDY. I wish you had had it before.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PATTERSON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DESERT LANDS.

The Committee on the Public Lands was called.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 9931) to amend an act providing for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, and the acts amendatory thereto, and for the relief of persons who have made entries thereunder.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases of existing desert-land entries where yearly proof for any year or years of final proof has not been made the time for making all such yearly proof or proofs and final proof is hereby extended for one year from the date of the passage of this act; and in such cases when the annual expenditure of $1 per acre has not been made for any year or years the failure to make such expenditure shall not work a forfeiture, but the time within which all such expenditures may be made is hereby extended for one year from the date of the passage of this act; and in such cases the time for making final proof and payment is hereby extended for one year from the date same would otherwise have become due: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any entry where final proof and payment have been due for one year or more prior to the passage of this act: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to deprive any party of any right now existing under the regulations governing contests in land cases.

Mr. LACEY. If I can have the attention of the House for just a minute, I think I can make this bill perfectly plain. It was drafted by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and introduced at his request. It is to give one year's additional time to desert-land entries.

The necessity for this grows out of the exceedingly hard times of the last year. In several instances this extension has been granted as to some reservations. There is a large quantity of land that has been taken under the desert-land law, and the persons taking the land are required to expend $1 an acre upon it each year. This extends the time one year in which to make a final proof of the expenditure of this money in ditching and the other requirements of the desert-land law. It is a departmental bill, and is pressing. It must be passed now if at all. It involves no expense to the Government.

I ask for a vote.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10002) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PETTIGREW, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following Senate bills were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A bill (S. 3722) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Letcher Stevenson, widow of the late Brig. Gen. John D. Stevenson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (S. 1676) authorizing Rear-Admiral W. A. Kirkland to accept a gold box presented to him by the Emperor of Germany;

A joint resolution (S. R. 76) authorizing Lieut. William McCarty Little to accept a decoration from the King of Spain;

A bill (H. R. 4076) for the relief of Abner Abercrombie; and

A bill (H. R. 3605) granting a pension to Grotius N. Udell.

ANTITICKET SCALPING BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the engrossed copy of the bill (H. R. 10090) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce."

Mr. NORTHWAY. I rise to a point of order. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce having been passed, and other committees having been called, how do we get back to that committee?

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House for the previous question to the passage, which makes it a question of the highest privilege. The Clerk will read the engrossed bill.

The bill was read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to make a motion to recommit with instructions. I move to strike out, in line 7 of section 4, the words "the general," and in lieu thereof insert the word "any;" and beginning with the word "if," in line 11 of section 4, strike out the remainder of the section. Also, strike out the whole of section 5 and transpose section 3 so that it shall become section 4; and "section 4" shall be amended to read "section 3."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAHANY) there were—ayes 46, noes 120.

Mr. MAHANY. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is plainly a quorum present.

Mr. ELLETT. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make the point that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. A demand for the yeas and nays can not be regarded as dilatory.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, they were refused, 26 members (not one-fifth of the last vote) supporting the demand.

Accordingly, the motion of Mr. BAILEY was rejected.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, on a division (demanded by Mr. NORTHWAY and Mr. MAHANY), there were—ayes 142, noes 51.

Mr. ELLETT and Mr. MAHANY demanded the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays, and the Speaker announced 36 members in support thereof—not one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. ELLETT and Mr. MAHANY demanded the other side.

The question being taken, there were 148 in the negative.

Accordingly (not one-fifth supporting the demand therefor), the yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. TERRY. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused, 24 members, not a sufficient number, supporting the demand therefor.

Accordingly, the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LEISENRING, for Monday and Tuesday, on account of important business.

To Mr. WANGER, for one day, on account of important business.

To Mr. BOATNER, for the remainder of this session, on account of important business.

To Mr. CUMMINGS, on account of death in his family.

And then, on motion of Mr. HENDERSON (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the president of the Washington, Mount Vernon and Alexandria Railroad Company, transmitting the annual report of said company, together with a list of the stockholders of the company—to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter of the Chief of Engineers, report of survey of Elizabeth River, New Jersey—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BROSIUS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 875) to carry into effect the recommendations of the International American Conference by the incorporation of the International American Bank, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3054); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9729) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Carlinville, in the State of Illinois, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 3055); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. ANDREWS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported (Report No. 3056) the bill (H. R. 5884) granting a pension to Sarah E. Ingham, late an army nurse; which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following petitions; which were referred as follows:

Petition of citizens of Port Perry, Pa., in favor of the passage of the McMillan-Linton bill relating to beneficiary societies—Committee on the Judiciary discharged, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Petition of the Royal Society of Good Fellows, in favor of the passage of the McMillan-Linton bill—Committee on the Judiciary discharged, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Petition from the Madison Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of Chester, Pa., for the passage of a bill to raise the age of protection of girls—Committee on the Judiciary discharged, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PUBLIC BILLS, MEMORIALS, AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 10872) providing for the enrollment of the Mississippi Choctaws, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts: A concurrent resolution (House Con. Res. No. 74) to print 10,000 copies of the report of hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency, Fifty-fourth Congress—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. FOSS: A memorial of the legislature of the State of Illinois, urging the passage of the House bill for the classification of railway postal clerks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota: A memorial of the legislature of the State of Minnesota, favoring postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

PRIVATE BILLS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills of the following titles were presented and referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 10873) granting a pension to Anna J. Turner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Resolutions of Youghiogheny Lodge, No. 302, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, of Connellsville, Pa., asking for the passage of the Hill contempt bill, the Erdman arbitration bill, and the Phillips commission bill—to the Committee on Labor.

Also, resolutions of Colonel W. S. Black Post, No. 59, Grand Army of the Republic, of McKeesport, Pa., praying for the passage of the per diem pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Burgettstown, Pa., for the passage of bills for the further prevention of cruelty to animals; raising the age of protection to 18 for girls in the District of Columbia; for the District Sabbath law; for a law against interstate gambling by telegraph, and for the prohibition of liquor selling in the Capitol building—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BAKER of Maryland: Petition of the Hopewell Methodist Episcopal Church and the Epworth League of Woodlawn, Cecil County, Md., favoring the passage of House bill No. 7441, for the prevention of gambling by telegraph, etc.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire: Protest of F. J. Perry and 26 other citizens of Washington, D. C., against the passage of the Sherman bill (H. R. 10090)—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

[Continuation of proceedings, legislative day, Saturday, February 27, 1897.]

The Senate reassembled at the expiration of the recess, at 3 o'clock p. m., Sunday, February 28, 1897.

EXTENSION OF FOREST RESERVATIONS.

Mr. ALLEN presented a telegram, in the nature of a memorial, remonstrating against carrying into execution the recent Executive order for the extension of the forest reservations; which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LINCOLN, NEBR., February 26, 1897.

Senator W. V. ALLEN, Washington, D. C.:

"Whereas by an Executive order issued February 22, 1897, by Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, 21,000,000 acres of public lands in the States of the Northwest have been reserved from occupation and settlement, of which 3,000,000 acres are in the State of Wyoming and the Black Hills of South Dakota, making with lands heretofore reserved 40,000,000 acres in area of the public domain closed to development; and

"Whereas such order has as its result the destruction or abandonment of many important industries now in prosperous existence in said territory, being agriculture, manufacturing, and mining; and

"Whereas the growth of said country in material wealth and population is of the greatest importance to the agricultural States of the Missouri and Mississippi valleys, and particularly to the State of Nebraska: Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the senate of the State of Nebraska, That we do not believe that the forests upon the public lands can be preserved by making such large sections of the country an uninhabited waste, but such abandonment would greatly increase the destruction by fire and from lawlessness.

"Resolved, That the existing laws punishing the cutting or waste of timber upon public lands are ample for forest preservation if enforced by the courts.

"Resolved, That we urge upon the Congress of the United States immediate legislation annulling said Executive order and taking the needed action that the important industries already established may continue and receive the fostering care of the law instead of being destroyed by it.

"Resolved, That the secretary of state be requested to transmit these resolutions by telegraph to our Senators and Representatives in Congress."

Dear Senator, will you kindly see that all Nebraska members of Congress are furnished a copy of this resolution.

W. F. PORTER, Secretary of State.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment on page 54 which was passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, after line 5, the Committee on Appropriations report to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to continue the scientific investigation of the fur-seal fisheries of the North Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, authorized by joint resolution approved June 8, 1896, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary during the fiscal years 1897 and 1898; and all the provisions of said public resolution of June 8, 1896, are extended and made applicable to the fiscal year 1898. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to pay to Dr. Leonhard Stejneger the sum of $900, and to F. A. Lucas the sum of $600, for extra services and expenses while detailed to assist in the scientific investigation of the fur-seal fisheries under said joint resolution, out of the appropriation therein made for such investigation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which has just been read.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the amendment passed over for a few moments, and take up some of the other amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over for the present. The next amendment of the committee which was passed over will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 3, to insert:

Bounty on sugar: For the purpose of paying the producers of sugar the balance of claims due them under the terms of the act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," providing for the payment of eight-tenths of a cent per pound on the sugars actually manufactured and produced in the United States during that part of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, comprised in the period commencing August 28, 1894, and ending June 30, 1895, both days inclusive, $1,085,156.66, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to the conditions, restrictions, and limitations prescribed in the said act approved March 2, 1895.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. VEST. I am compelled to ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment. I do not care about discussing it, but I want to have the question taken by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DUBOIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. MCBRIDE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon] has a general pair with the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. We have arranged to transfer our pairs so that the Senator from Wisconsin and I may vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLANCHARD (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to transfer the pair I have with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] to my colleague, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. I have already voted.

Mr. PALMER (after having voted in the negative). I did not observe whether the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] voted or not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. PALMER. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BURROWS (after having voted in the negative). Has the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] voted?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state to the Senator from Michigan that I transferred the pair which I had with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] to my colleague [Mr. CAFFERY], who is absent, so that the Senator from Michigan is at liberty to vote.

Mr. BURROWS. Then my vote will stand.

Mr. HOAR (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH]. I am informed that if present he would vote "yea." I will therefore permit my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—37.

Allen,	Cockrell,	Hawley,	Shoup,
Allison,	Cullom,	Jones, Ark.	Squire,
Blanchard,	Daniel,	McBride,	Stewart,
Brice,	Elkins,	McMillan,	Teller,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Mantle,	Vilas,
Call,	Frye,	Martin,	Warren,
Cannon,	Gallinger,	Murphy,	White.
Carter,	Gibson,	Nelson,
Chandler,	Gray,	Perkins,
Clark,	Hale,	Quay,

NAYS—12.

Baker,	Burrows,	Hill,	Pettigrew,
Bate,	Chilton,	Mills,	Sherman,
Berry,	Gorman,	Peffer,	Vest.

NOT VOTING—41.

Aldrich,	Butler,	Davis,	George,
Bacon,	Caffery,	Dubois,	Gordon,
Blackburn,	Cameron,	Gear,	Hansbrough,

Harris,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Proctor,	Voorhees,
Hoar,	Mitchell, Wis.	Pugh,	Walthall,
Irby,	Morgan,	Roach,	Wetmore,
Jones, Nev.	Morrill,	Sewell,	Wilson,
Kenney,	Palmer,	Smith,	Wolcott.
Kyle,	Pasco,	Thurston,
Lindsay,	Platt,	Tillman,
Lodge,	Pritchard,	Turpie,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 9, after the word "night," to insert "which shall cover the entire cost to the United States of lighting and maintaining in good order each electric light in said parks;" so as to read:

For lighting 33 arc electric lights in Lafayette, Franklin, Judiciary, and Lincoln parks, three hundred and sixty-five nights, at 25 cents per light per night, which shall cover the entire cost to the United States of lighting and maintaining in good order each electric light in said parks, $3,920.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter there shall be no extension of electric-lighting service, and it shall be unlawful to open any of the streets, roads, avenues, alleys, or other public highways, or any of the parks or reservations in the District of Columbia, for the purpose of laying electric wires, cables, or conduits therein, until specifically authorized by law.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa if he intends to press this amendment now on the bill? The same amendment is on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and it does not seem to have any place here.

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask the Senate for the present to pass over this amendment, it having been read, and to take up the amendments on page 88, relating to rivers and harbors.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over. The Secretary will read the first amendment, at the point indicated.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 10, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "three hundred and seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving Hudson River, New York: Continuing improvement, $375,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee. I should like to ask him what was done with the amendment on page 7 in regard to purchasing the Corcoran Art Gallery building?

Mr. ALLISON. That was agreed to last evening.

Mr. VEST. I ask for a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to. I was compelled to go home before the Senate adjourned.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all right. The vote may be reconsidered by unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that we will now go on with these amendments.

Mr. VEST. Of course I do not want to disarrange the order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 17, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving harbor and bay at Humboldt, Cal.: Continuing improvement, $200,000.

Mr. WHITE. There are several amendments of a nature precisely like the pending amendment, showing that the committee has reduced the appropriations made by the House. I would inquire of the committee why that reduction was made. The amount placed in the bill by the House, I understand, was the amount estimated by the Department. I inquire of the chairman of the committee what is the fact with reference to that matter. If the Senator from Iowa was not listening, I will repeat. The item under consideration is the Humboldt improvement. I notice that there are several of that type. Of course, we wish to be treated simply as others are being treated, but I should like to know why the amount was reduced and whether the House amount was not the sum estimated by the Department.

Mr. ALLISON. In response to the inquiry of the Senator from California, I will be glad to make a few observations respecting all these items that were reserved last night, because they all stand practically upon the same basis.

It may be truthfully said that the Department has made no estimate as respects any of the improvements that are in this bill and reserved where we have reduced 25 per cent the appropriation proposed by the House. There is a statement in the Book of Estimates, in the latter part of that book, from the Chief of Engineers, saying that he can usefully expend during the next fiscal year the several amounts appended to each item of these public works, but there is no departmental estimate. These works are not included in the total of the estimates of appropriation; they are not counted as estimates in the Book of Estimates; but they were authorized, I will say to the Senator from California, in the river and harbor act of last year.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator is mistaken as to the Humboldt item, which was earlier, the work has been in progress under an old contract.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to state that these items were included in the river and harbor act of last year, with the exception of perhaps three or four, of which the Humboldt appropriation is one. In the testimony taken by the House Committee on Appropriations the engineer officers who were examined by that committee stated that as an engineering question they could expend usefully and properly the amounts estimated; but I called the attention of the Senator from California and other Senators to the peculiarity of these reserved amendments. In nearly every case the estimate is exactly $400,000. The improvement at Humboldt, and I think nine-tenths of those items that were reserved last night, are appropriations of $400,000. Therefore it rests in the discretion of Congress to say whether we will appropriate this year $350,000, $375,000, or $300,000, or three-quarters of the amount that was estimated for by the engineers.

Most of these items are mentioned in the river and harbor act as improvements that are to be let by contract, and the whole contract can be made for the completion of the improvement, so that if a contractor bids he bids for the whole improvement or a part of it, as the case may be, and he is paid on his contract as appropriations from time to time are made by Congress.

It was the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations, after going over all these items carefully, that it was the part of wisdom under all the circumstances of the appropriations at this session that these public improvements could go on usefully and properly with the appropriations that we have proposed to make. Many of them are not yet under contract, which is not the case with Humboldt. Some of them have just been contracted for. In other cases there are advertisements now out for bids. So, in the nature of things, these improvements do not stand in the same category with those improvements that are about to be completed.

Now, that is not all there is of it. I will say that the committee afterwards, in reviewing their work, did believe that an exception could fairly be made as respects the harbor of Boston, that being an improvement imperatively necessary in order to carry on the commerce of that great city, by deepening the channel so that vessels drawing 23 or 25 feet of water can enter the harbor. With that exception the committee think that these are wise and proper reductions. But that is a question for every Senator as much as it is a question for the committee. If Senators believe that we have the ability and that it is the part of wisdom to appropriate as the House has appropriated, of course it is a matter of no special importance to the committee more than to any other Senator on this floor.

I have the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] in my eye. As respects the great improvement of the Delaware River, which was in the river and harbor bill, at a maximum cost of $4,000,000, that whole work, I am told, has been contracted for recently for $1,660,000, or about that sum. So the work is to be begun, and is to cost less than one-half of the cost estimated two years ago.

Mr. President, I do not wish to debate this question, but I submit it to the Senate without further observations.

Mr. FRYE. But these improvements should all be treated alike.

Mr. ALLISON. So I agree.

Mr. FRYE. Take, for instance, Portland, Me., and Rockland, Me. In each case the committee has cut down the House appropriation $100,000. My colleague was a member of the committee having this bill in charge. He undoubtedly consented to that cut down of $100,000 on the ground that the Treasury is not in a condition to be over and above liberal just now, and his constituents and mine would sustain him in doing that. But they would not sustain him or me unless all of these appropriations bore the same cut of $100,000.

There is another point, I will state, that the Senator did not seem to touch upon. I judge from the appropriations made here that instead of these being estimates of what ought to be done or what can be done, or what might profitably be done, they are simply following the law of Congress which provided that in certain cases not more than 25 per cent should be appropriated in any one year and in other cases not more than 50 per cent, and they have simply placed in here as an estimate 25 per cent in some cases and 50 per cent in another. It is not the usual estimate. The usual estimate is a careful survey of the work to see what ought to be done and what can be done profitably. That has not been done in these cases. They have taken the law as Congress passed it and then put down the amount which is the maximum amount we in the law allowed should be estimated for.

Mr. ALLISON. That is partially true, and yet the House did not follow that rule. Take an improvement, and a very important one, in which the Western States are deeply interested. The Senator from Illinois who sits near me and the one more distant from me are deeply interested in the construction of the Hennepin Canal. We provided in the river and harbor act last year that one-quarter of the money should be appropriated annually, or not to exceed that amount, if you please, for the Hennepin Canal, which, if it had been appropriated, would have been an appropriation of $1,300,000, whereas the House of Representatives, in the exercise of their judgment and discretion, reduced the appropriation to $1,000,000. To show that we have at least endeavored to be impartial, I have consented as a member of the committee that this appropriation should be reduced one-quarter with the others; that is, to $750,000.

Mr. CULLOM. And I agreed to the arrangement because it seemed to be necessary in the interest of the Treasury, and because I supposed it would be fair to all concerned.

Mr. ALLISON. As respects special appropriations, the Senator from Maine speaks of Rockland, Me., as one of the items, I suppose, where 50 per cent was to be appropriated.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. I have here the statement of the engineer before the committee of the House of Representatives, in which he states that—

> The contract at Rockland, Me., has not been made, but the making of the contract has been authorized. Bids have not yet been called for, but will be called for in the near future. These bids involve an expenditure of $227,000—

In other words, that is all that has been advertised for at Rockland, Me.—

> not the entire work provided for—it being the idea that $227,000 is for the protection of the breakwater. We think we can also get figures for dredging inside by letting this contract.
> The CHAIRMAN. The contract requires an appropriation of $227,000 for this year?
> Colonel MACKENZIE. Yes; we have on hand $25,500, which will be required for superintendence; $227,000 is the amount to be paid to the contractor.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. That is all you will need for the next fiscal year at Rockland?
> Colonel MACKENZIE. Yes, sir.

And so on. There is the statement before the House committee that $227,000 is all that is needed, and we have in this bill, as we cut it down, provided for $300,000. So I submit to the Senator from Maine that with this testimony before the Committee on Appropriations it was not a difficult thing for us to convince his colleague that $300,000 would be ample provision there.

Now, I will take the case of Portland, Me., which we know is an important city in our country, and has an important improvement, and is, I believe, one of the 50 per cent class. I am not sure about it.

Mr. WHITE. May I interrupt the Senator to ask him from what document he is reading?

Mr. ALLISON. I am reading from the hearings before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, wherein the engineer officer of the Army having charge of this work was examined as respects each of these items of appropriation.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the chairman a question.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. How many of the continuing contracts in the river and harbor act are not provided for by the sundry civil bill now before us?

Mr. ALLISON. Including our amendments, they are all provided for, with, I think, one or two exceptions, and in those cases there is some question as to the limit of cost, etc. I have an amendment somewhere upon my desk which I shall be glad to propose, covering one of those items.

Mr. VEST. I want the Senator to know, because every Senator is necessarily better acquainted with matters concerning his own State, that we have a continuing contract for the Missouri River and there is nothing in the bill for it. I think I can name several others.

Mr. ALLISON. For the Missouri River?

Mr. VEST. Yes; we have a continuing contract, and my constituents are writing and telegraphing me to know why it is that appropriations are made in the sundry civil bill for the other continuing contracts, but not for the Missouri River.

Mr. ALLISON. That is an oversight if it is not here. What does this item mean? I call the attention of the Senator to pages 96 and 97:

> Improving Missouri River from mouth to Sioux City, Iowa—
>
> The Missouri empties into the Mississippi, and under the Missouri River Commission it extends to Sioux City.
>
> For continuing improvement of Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City, Iowa, including salaries, clerical, office, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Missouri River Commission—

Mr. VEST. That is a part of the river, it is true.

> surveys, permanent bench marks, and gauges, $309,000.

If we have not made sufficient provision under all the details of the river and harbor bills, it is because these amendments are put every other year—every year practically—upon the sundry civil bill, under continuing contracts, which oblige us to examine in detail and anew and freshly every item of the river and harbor appropriations, so that when we make suggestions of amendment to the Senate we may know that the amendments we propose are reasonable and proper so far as our recommendations to the Senate are concerned.

So, Mr. President, we have dealt with this matter in the brief time allotted to us as well as we could deal with it. If we lack information, it is because we have not had the extended inquiry from year to year or once in two years that the Committee on Commerce have been able to give to these great works of public improvement. We have endeavored to deal as wisely and well as we could with all these great works of public improvement, trying if possible to reduce somewhat the total aggregate for them during the coming fiscal year until we can have at least a probability that our income and our expenditure will more nearly equal each other.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to state to the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that the amount he has just read relating to the Missouri River item in the bill is exactly the amount which was authorized to be appropriated for that river by the river and harbor act of June 30, 1896. Here it is before me; it says:

> Provided, That on and after the passage of this act additional contracts—
>
> For the Missouri River—
> may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such material and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the plans of the Missouri River Commission for the improvement of said river, or said material may be purchased and work may be done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $300,000 per annum for three years, commencing July 1, 1897.

That is the amount which you left in the bill for the Missouri River, and it is in full compliance with the law upon that subject.

Mr. ALLISON. I endeavored to say so a moment ago.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator from Iowa did not understand me as complaining that there was a cut down in Maine. I do not complain that there was a cut down. I was simply saying that the items must stand or fall, all of them together; that there are no exceptional cases. There were none of the usual estimates, and therefore there are no exceptional cases; and if the trial is to be made upon one, the result of that trial should determine the whole.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I directed attention to the item regarding Humboldt Harbor for the purpose of getting an explanation in reference to the entire matter. I appreciate the labors of the Committee on Appropriations, and it is a source of wonder to me that the gentlemen composing that committee are able to discharge their duties so effectively. I merely desire that the rule applicable to other places shall be applied to my own State. I wish no discrimination in favor of my State, I only wish that she shall be treated as other States have been treated, and from the statement made here I have no doubt that is the case.

I have no detailed information as to the exact sum of money necessary for Humboldt. I know that the work has been progressing some time and very successfully, and that it is being completed for a far less sum of money than that originally estimated. I hope this amount will not be found too small to enable the improvement to go on. But I will interpose no objection and will ask for no vote upon the proposition to which I have already alluded.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I wish to state that one item in the bill which is cut down will be found on page 89.

> Improving Sabine Pass, Texas: For continuing improvement of harbor at Sabine Pass, $400,000.

That appropriation of $400,000 in the bill as passed by the House has been reduced to $300,000. It seems to me that the reduction ought not to have been made. That is a very important work. Two rivers enter Sabine Lake, and a very considerable commerce is being rapidly built up in the neighborhood of the pass.

I am aware that to make a fight on an item for one single harbor, in the face of the acquiescence of other Senators similarly situated, will be unavailing, but I do think it was a mistaken policy on the part of the Appropriations Committee to cut down the appropriation for the improvement of this particular harbor.

In this connection, I may say that I would probably derive more consolation from the state of the case if the committee had treated Texas as they seem to have treated California, by cutting down at one place and putting in a new appropriation for another. I see that while they have cut down the Humboldt item——

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator from Texas will permit me, it is no new appropriation whatever. There is not a cent appropriated by the bill outside of the amount reduced from the House estimates. The Oakland item is no increase at all, but simply the rectification of an error.

Mr. CHILTON. It is here in italics. I notice that it is put in as an amendment to the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. CHILTON. I am not complaining of the change made in regard to California. That is not the point that I am driving at; but I am merely pointing out that in the case of California improvements there seems to have been an amendment which makes up at Oakland what apparently is cut off at Humboldt.

As I stated, I think the appropriation for the Sabine Pass improvement ought not to have been reduced, but it seems to be treated as other items of like character, and while I think it ought to have been made an exception, yet at this hour and under all the circumstances I do not feel warranted in undertaking to change the action of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WHITE. That there may be no misapprehension in relation to this Oakland item, I will state to the Senator from Texas that when the river and harbor bill was made up, the exact sum referred to in the amendment was incorporated in it for the improvement of Oakland Harbor. The Department ascertained from subsequent estimates that the limit should have been higher, but instead of seeking to make the limit higher we merely made it mandatory on the Department to go on under the present estimate, believing as we do that the work can be carried on for it. We are simply getting the money which we would be entitled to anyway under the law, as we consider it. We are interpolating the view of Congress, views of the statute, rather than that taken by the Department, and we have ignored the departmental estimate requiring the expenditure of more money.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, I have a like interest with the Senator from Texas who has just now addressed the Senate in the appropriation made by this bill for the improvement at Sabine Pass. Sabine River forms the boundary between the States of Texas and Louisiana. Like the Senator from Texas, I regret the necessity which impelled the committee to reduce this appropriation from $400,000, as fixed by the House, to $300,000. But since this seems to be a general policy in respect to these appropriations, adopted by the Committee on Appropriations, and as no invidious discrimination is made against Sabine Pass, I am not disposed to contest the committee amendment.

I will, however, Mr. President, take this occasion to say that no more important harbor work is going on in the United States at this time than that at Sabine Pass. No work so far done by the Government in the way of harbor improvement has been productive of better results than that at Sabine Pass.

A few days ago I had occasion to inquire of the War Department relative to the depth of water over that bar, and was informed by the Chief of Engineers that they now have 24 feet where formerly they had only from 10 to 12 feet. It is a work which promises to meet the fullest expectations of the engineers of the Government at the time they recommended the project to Congress, and the results already obtained fully justify the large appropriations made by Congress for the improvement of that harbor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendments passed over will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving channel in Gowanus Bay, New York: For improving Bay Ridge Channel, the triangular area between Bay Ridge and Red Hook channels, and Red Hook and Buttermilk channels in the harbor of New York, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 24, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Savannah, Ga.: For continuing improvement, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 1, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cumberland Sound, Georgia and Florida: For continuing improvement, $90,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 6, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Portland, Me.: For continuing improvement, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 8, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Rockland, Me.: For continuing improvement, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 10, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Boston, Mass.: For continuing improvement, $900,000.

Mr. ALLISON. On this item the Committee on Appropriations reconsidered their judgment and recommend that the amendment be disagreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. That was reconsidered.

Mr. HOAR. It is to be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred and fifty thousand" and insert "four hundred and twelve thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Buffalo, N. Y.: For continuing improvement, $412,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four hundred and fifty thousand six hundred and sixty-eight" and insert "three hundred and thirty-eight thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Harbor of refuge, Delaware Bay, Delaware: For continuing construction, $338,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Winyaw Bay, South Carolina: For continuing improvement of harbor at Winyaw Bay, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 1, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Sabine Pass, Texas: For continuing improvement of harbor at Sabine Pass, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 4, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Cleveland, Ohio: For continuing improvement, $900,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred" and insert "three hundred and seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Duluth, Minn., and Superior, Wis.: For continuing improvement, $375,000.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if there is any danger that the Engineering Department could not let the contract if the amount appropriated during the ensuing year should be less than the amount that would be necessary for the contract to be let at? Colonel Mackenzie states that, if they get their lowest expected bid on this contract (and the bid was to be opened in February, I believe), it would require $500,000. I do not wish to interpose an objection to any reduction of expense or to any reduction of the appropriations nor to make any complaint when all are treated alike. But it would be a misfortune if this appropriation were made so small as to deny the making of the contract.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think there is the slightest difficulty in that regard. The contracts will, of course, be made for the whole improvement in these cases, and I understand that will be the case here.

Mr. FRYE. The contractor agrees to receive his pay as appropriations may be made from time to time by Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think there is the slightest difficulty about that. Indeed, I had a consultation with the engineer about the reductions proposed by the Senate committee, and I do not think there will be any great interference to any of these works on account of the reductions.

Mr. VILAS. Colonel Mackenzie states that—

The contract requires the contractor to dredge not less than 5,000,000 yards a calendar year. The estimates for that dredging were 15 cents, and Major Sears hopes to receive a bid as low as 10 cents.

Mr. NELSON. I can give some light upon that subject, as I have just seen the bids. One of the bidders was here the other day; and while the estimate was for 15 cents a yard, he says the bids of three bidders were identically the same for three classes of work, namely, at 7½, 8, and 10 cents a yard, which is lower than any bids heretofore made.

Mr. BLANCHARD. On the question just raised by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS], I wish to say I hold in my hand the river and harbor appropriation act of 1896, and find the language in regard to this project to be this:

And contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the project for deepening said harbor and the entrances thereto.

This relates to the harbors of Duluth and Superior City; and under that authorization the Secretary of War can make, and will make, if he has not already done so, contracts to complete the project.

When these contracts are entered into, payments under them can only be made as the money is appropriated by law. In other words, under the contracts made pursuant to this authorization of law, instead of the contractor receiving $500,000, as was provided for in the House bill, he will only be paid $375,000 in the next fiscal year if the amendment recommended by the Senate committee to the House bill is adopted. But the amendment does not interfere in any way with the making of contracts for the completion of the project, leaving to future Congresses to provide the funds to meet in full the contract obligations of the Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which had been passed over was, on page 91, line 8, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Improving Grays Harbor, Washington: For continuing improvement of harbor and bar entrance, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. I have an amendment to offer at that point.

Mr. FAULKNER. Unless the Senator's amendment is an amendment to an amendment of the committee I hope he will reserve it until the committee amendments are disposed of, according to the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. SQUIRE. Very well.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which had been passed over was, on page 91, line 16, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Locks and dams in Allegheny River, Pennsylvania: For continuing improvement by construction of locks and dams at Herr Island, above the head of Six-Mile Island, and at Springdale, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which had been passed over was, on page 91, line 22, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" so as to read:

Improving upper Monongahela River, West Virginia: For continuing improvement by the construction of six locks and dams, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which had been passed over was, on page 93, line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Yazoo River, Mississippi: For continuing improvement of mouth of Yazoo River and harbor of Vicksburg, $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which had been passed over was, on page 93, line 23, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Bayou Plaquemine, Louisiana: For continuing improvement, $300,000.

Mr. CAFFERY. I was not here when the reasons were given by the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill for the reductions in appropriations which the committee have reported. I ask the Senator from Iowa, in a few words, to explain to me the reason for this 25 per cent reduction.

Mr. ALLISON. The same reason applies to this improvement that is applied to all the other improvements. It is left to the discretion of Congress to make such appropriation as it sees fit to make under existing conditions. There has been no estimate for any of these improvements in the regular estimates of the Department. They are made simply upon the statements of the engineers that certain amounts of money may be usefully and properly expended on these works.

Mr. CAFFERY. I do not know how it may be as to others, but this improvement is the most important and necessary in my State, excepting only the improvement of the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River. This improvement is different from most improvements. In the portion of the State where I live about 50 per cent of the freight charges that are now imposed upon the people living there are, by reason of the monopoly of traffic, in the hands of the railroads; and if any exceptions are to be made to the rule adopted by the committee, this is one that ought to be included in the exception.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 94, line 2, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cumberland River above Nashville, Tenn.: For continuing improvement by construction of locks Nos. 5, 6, and 7, $300,000.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I feel that I am compelled, in the name of my constituents, to object to the adoption of that amendment, and because I believe it right that I should do so. I know, however, that those I in part represent are not a very selfish, but a generous people, and they are not disposed to ask anything that others similarly situated do not get, but I think this work on the Cumberland River above Nashville is a little differently situated and surrounded by different conditions from most, if not all, of the others in the bill. I do not understand from the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that all of these river and harbor appropriations were raiseed 25 per cent of the amounts appropriated by the House, but that those of them which will complete the work are permitted to remain as the House fixed them, and all of those that are known as continuing contracts are cut 25 per cent.

The situation, however, in relation to the improvement of the Cumberland River above Nashville is a little peculiar. The appropriation by the House for this work was $400,000, for continuing this work and as part payment of it. This amount can be profitably used as indicated.

Locks Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 on Cumberland River have been constructed. The river and harbor bill of last session contained authority for the construction by contract of Locks 5, 6, and 7 (Lock 5 had already been commenced). The amount appropriated was $600,000. The advertisement for bids for completing Lock 5 and for construction of Locks 6 and 7 have been made or are now ready to be made. The House bill contained $400,000 as part payment for this work. Importance attaches to keeping this $400,000 in the bill, for the reason that the Department holds that it is inexpedient to put the dams in the locks until the entire number, including Lock 7, is completed. Therefore, none of the locks already built can be utilized until the work on Locks 5, 6, and 7 is done. When these are completed, it will bring the work to the point where the railroad from the coal fields strikes Cumberland River, at or near Carthage, Tenn. The work is therefore important as opening a new and great coal region to the Cumberland, Ohio, and Mississippi valleys.

The Secretary of War, on being advised of the condition some few weeks since, and that damage was likely to occur at a point where the work has already been completed for the want of some other work, recommended that these other contracts should be entered into and that the other work be consummated. There were substantial reasons for this. One was that the seventh lock, as I have said, strikes a point where the finest coal in that region of country is transferred by rail to the Cumberland River, and thence finds its way out to the great valleys of the South and West. This is an inducement for the early completion of this work. The work already done is utterly useless, and will be until Locks 5, 6, and 7 are completed. In consideration of these facts, the money having been appropriated, the Secretary ordered the work to proceed. Lock 5 is now under contract—at least the advertisement has been made for bids to do the work upon it, and bids have doubtless been filed for the work. These facts should take this improvement out of the line and out of the rut in which the committee seems to be running, and let it be regarded, as I think it is, an exception to their rule in regard to these appropriations, and I appeal to the Senator who, as chairman, has charge of this bill that it be made an exception to the extent I ask.

The Secretary of War has said that $400,000 would be necessary for that work, which is under advertisement, and yet the committee reports to cut down the amount to $300,000, when it will take $400,000 to complete it. I think the appropriation should be permitted to stand as it came to us in the bill from the House of Representatives.

I do not want anything that is wrong. I heard what the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, said in regard to these reductions, and I am willing to stand with others and suffer as they do; but if there is to be an exception made, this is a case in which it should be done. Hence I ask the chairman of the committee to allow us to have the $400,000 appropriated by the House, instead of the $300,000 proposed by his committee. That is all I wish. I do not desire to make any fuss about it, but I felt it my duty to state these facts. This improvement is out of the ordinary channel, and, as I have said, I think, therefore, it ought to be made an exception, and the amendment of the committee be disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Only a word. The contract has not yet been let for this work and no one knows exactly what it will cost. There are a number of locks and dams to be built. Of course if we appropriate $300,000 it will not go so far as $400,000. This Lock No. 5 is already in the course of construction, is it not?

Mr. BATE. I do not know; I can not say about that, but it has certainly been advertised, and some of the bids are in.

Mr. ALLISON. My information is that it has not yet been advertised, but I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. BATE. Lock 5, to be completed, was advertised some weeks ago. I can not say they are at work on the lock, however.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course that is immaterial.

Mr. BATE. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. Lock No. 5 is under construction and will probably be finished during the coming summer. Then there are several other locks to be built. Each one of those locks and dams costs about $250,000. I think it may be safely said that the appropriation for which we provide here will complete the lock already under construction and go far toward the work upon two others. It will be very easy to make a contract for one or two or three or four of those locks. So I do not think the Senator from Tennessee makes out a case for an exception.

Mr. BATE. I regret that exceedingly; but I do not wish the Senator to understand me as saying that the work is now being performed, but I do say that advertisements have been made for Lock No. 5. As to the others, I do not know. The Secretary of War recognized the necessity, as I have stated, for the work; he has advertised for bids; specifications have been made and submitted to the Department, and under them the advertisements have been made. It does seem to me, therefore, that that takes this out of the ordinary situation, and that it should be made an exception, as I have appealed to the Senator to do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which had been reserved was, in line 6, on page 94, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Improving Falls of Ohio River at Louisville, Ky.: For continuing improvement, including Indiana Chute Falls, $300,000.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which had been passed over was, on page 95, line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one million" and insert "seven hundred and fifty thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Illinois and Mississippi Canal: For continuing construction, $750,000.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which had been passed over was, on page 95, line 7, before the word "hundred," to strike out "four" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving waterway from Keweenaw Bay to Lake Superior, Michigan: For continuing improvement of water communication across Keweenaw Point, $300,000.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which had been passed over was, on page 95, line 13, after the word "cents," to strike out:

And of the sum heretofore appropriated and authorized to be expended and contracted for during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1898, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, the said Secretary of War is directed to expend so much as may be necessary, not exceeding $100,000, to prevent the Mississippi River from breaking through into Cache River at or near a point known as Beach Ridge, a few miles north of Cairo.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio River to St. Paul, Minn.: For continuing improvement from the mouth of the Ohio River to the mouth of the Missouri River, $673,333.33.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, this amendment is connected with another amendment following on page 96. The provision in the bill as it came from the House was that $100,000 should be taken from the Upper Mississippi River—that is, between Cairo and St. Louis—and applied to the river 8 miles above Cairo, where a break has taken place near Cache River. The committee have stricken out that provision, which provides that it shall be taken from the upper river and provided in the bill that it shall be taken from the appropriations for the river from Cairo down to the Passes at the mouth of the river.

In regard to the amendment striking out the provision that the money shall be taken from the upper river, if the committee see proper to strike that part of the bill out I have no objection, and leave it to be paid out of the general fund in the Treasury. But I do object to taking money from the lower river and using it for an improvement for the upper river. Different appropriations are made, one for the upper river from Cairo to St. Louis, or the mouth of the Missouri River, and the other from Cairo to the mouth of the Mississippi. This proposition is for an improvement in the upper river 8 miles above Cairo. The other House said the money should be taken from the appropriations above Cairo. The Senate committee have stricken out that it shall be taken from the upper river, and that the $100,000 shall be taken from the lower river.

When this proposition came before the Senate Committee on Commerce, it was referred to a subcommittee of three. That committee first agreed to report in favor of the proposed amendment, and so reported to the Senate. Afterwards action was had on the subject in the Commerce Committee, and they reversed the action by which it was provided that the money should be taken from the lower river, and recommended that $100,000 be appropriated for that purpose, without taking it from the appropriations either above or below, the same as has been done in regard to Pass a Loutre, near the mouth of the Mississippi River. I do not think that it is fair that this money for the improvement in the upper river should be taken from the appropriation for the lower river.

In regard to striking out the provision that the money shall be taken from the appropriation for the upper river, to that I do not object; but I do object to the amendment which takes it from the lower river, because that is not fair. It is a different appropriation, different in the river and harbor act, and has always been so considered; and it is under the control of the Mississippi River Commission.

It is true that Colonel Mackenzie, of the War Department, has made a recommendation of that kind; but I want to say to the Senator from Iowa that this river is not under the control of Colonel Mackenzie. It is, as I have stated, under the control of the Mississippi River Commission, and Colonel Mackenzie can not make estimates with regard to it; he can not know whether the appropriations can be taken from that work without injury to the lower river.

I repeat, that I have no objection to striking out the provision taking it from the upper river, but I do insist, if that is done, that it shall be made an appropriation directly from the Treasury, the same as was done by the bill for the passes at Pass a Loutre. I do object to it being taken from the appropriation which belongs to the river below.

Mr. FRYE. As the Senator from Arkansas says, we have investigated this in the Committee on Commerce, and I wish to say that I am satisfied that it is not necessary now to take the appropriation from either river, and that this amendment which the committee has inserted may just as well be disagreed to. The engineer officers who were before us told us that they did not think there was any immediate necessity. In my judgment, this amendment can wait for the next river and harbor bill just as well as to have this very intense quarrel which will be aroused over taking it from either the lower river or the upper river.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine seems to be very certain about the condition at the south end of my State, a great deal more so than I am. The truth about it is that whatever the engineers say in regard to the matter, there is imminent danger of great disaster to that locality, including the Government property; and while I am not so strenuous as to insist upon it, if it is bitterly opposed by either the north or the south end that it shall come out of either appropriation, I do insist that the emergency existing there now demands an immediate appropriation.

I am sorry to say I have not with me here now hundreds of dispatches from persons living in the neighborhood, showing the condition of things there at this moment or within the last few days, insisting that an appropriation should be made, because there is imminent danger of great destruction of property, and most likely the destruction of the city itself.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. CAFFERY. Has not the engineer in charge reported that there is no immediate danger?

Mr. CULLOM. I have heard it stated that he did not think there was any such danger, and I understand that Major Handbury, who is not upon the ground, says he did not think there is any immediate danger. There is no evidence here that he has been there in a month, and within twenty-four hours the earth has caved in there and gone into the river for a space of almost 50 yards in width. The shore is caving in.

A disaster may possibly not occur, but there is imminent danger of the earth continuing to cave in, which, it seems to me, makes an emergency that an appropriation should be made, so that the Government can protect the property not only of the people of the city, but the national cemetery there, which is very near Cache River.

I shall have a map here in a moment showing exactly the situation. The statement is that the Mississippi River, which makes a short bend there, is going across into what is called Cache River, 6 or 7 miles above Cairo, and not very far from the national cemetery. The moment that water gets into Cache River the result will be that the cemetery will be washed away and property in the city of Cairo will be endangered.

It seems to me that wherever this appropriation may come from, we can not afford to sit here and hear the appeals of the people from that locality coming to us that there is imminent danger, and refuse to do what they are asking.

If this money is not necessary to be spent, we do not wish to spend it, but we do want an appropriation made which will enable the Government to prevent that danger in case it becomes more and more imminent.

I have now the map and can show to the Senate from it exactly how the situation is. Here is Cairo down here [indicating], here comes the Mississippi River down here and going up this way [indicating], the red lines indicating the rapid progress that is being made there in the cutting in, near Beach Ridge, as it is called, and only a little distance from where the water will have to go before it will reach Cache River. Should it do so, the result will be that it will tear up two or three or four railroads, change the whole current of the river there, and work great disaster to those people and to the Government property itself.

So far as I am concerned, if the Senate prefer that an appropriation of $100,000 be made outright, subject to be used by the Secretary of War when the danger is imminent, I am perfectly content to leave the appropriation for the north and south river as well; but it occurs to me that after all that has been done, and that is being done for the Lower Mississippi River—millions and millions of dollars of appropriations being made almost every year to protect that river—nobody knows what has been done. So far as I am concerned, I do not know; and I have never supposed anybody did——

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to say one word?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes.

Mr. BERRY. When the Senator gets into the question of what has been done for this locality or that locality, I think we can show that a great deal of money has been appropriated for divers and various projects, including the Upper Mississippi River and the Hennepin Canal. But I do not care to go into that, because any Senator upon this floor can make a showing that in the expenditure of money his State has not had an even divide.

The chairman of the committee thinks this appropriation is not at all necessary. I do not say that. If it is believed to be necessary, if there is danger of destruction to Cairo, I would not object to $100,000 being appropriated for it either from the upper river or from the Treasury generally, but I do object that it is unfair to take it from the lower river, which is a separate and distinct appropriation from that of the upper river. I am not fighting the Senator's appropriation.

Mr. CULLOM. I understand.

Mr. BERRY. And, therefore, I think, while a great deal has been done for the Lower Mississippi, there has been a great deal done for other waters throughout all the States of this Union; and I do not think comparisons can be made which will show that we have had advantages over others.

Mr. CULLOM. I want to say that I voted with great pleasure for those appropriations. I believe in the improvement of rivers and harbors. They are regulators and cheapeners of the commerce of this country. I propose to vote for their improvement, but I really think that while such rivers as the Lower Mississippi have had two and a half million dollars, and a little more in the bill now—I have forgotten how much it got last year, but probably about the same amount or more——

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state to the Senator it was $625,000.

Mr. CULLOM. I had forgotten what it was; but under the circumstances it seems to me, and it seemed to the Committee on Appropriations, that the little sum of $100,000 to protect the river there and put and keep it in its channel was not a bad thing to do, and that it could be spared from the appropriation for this year. We shall make a river and harbor bill next year, and we supposed it was not unfair to take the money from the lower river. That is all I meant to say. I am a friend to the Mississippi River, whether it be at the north or the south end, and I expect to continue to be.

Mr. BERRY. So am I.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Arkansas knows, because he has corresponded with gentlemen who have an interest in that region, that there is very much alarm there for fear they are going to be washed away.

Mr. BERRY. That is all true.

Mr. CULLOM. What I contend is that when that sort of an emergency exists there, it calls upon Congress to make an appropriation in some way, either taking it from the Mississippi River appropriation which we are making here, or making a new appropriation, so that the emergency, if it shall arise, may be met, and so that the people there may be protected as well as the Government property.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. President, it is a matter of profound interest to the people of that particular locality that the Mississippi River shall be prevented from encroaching in the direction of the valley of the Cache.

I think there is an eminent propriety in taking this appropriation from the lower river, because, if the Mississippi River should find its channel north of Cairo, it would disturb not only that particular locality, but it would greatly affect the condition of the river below Cairo.

I had a conversation with some gentlemen of very great experience, river men, who have known the Cache River almost ever since it was a river, and they tell me that there is imminent danger—from the peculiar materials of which Cairo Point is composed, and from the known fact that Cache River was once the channel of the Mississippi River—that the river will force its way into the Ohio above Cairo, and that if that should happen it would have the most serious consequence to the lower river, and would disturb, alter—indeed, affect—its navigability. Nobody can tell what the consequences would be.

Mr. CAFFERY. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me?

Mr. PALMER. With pleasure.

Mr. CAFFERY. I desire to ask the Senator whether the condition of the land where this crevasse is imminent, where the water is liable to break over into Cache River, is about the same that it has been for some time heretofore.

Mr. CULLOM. If my colleague will permit me to answer, I will say that within a week it has caved in quite a distance.

Mr. CAFFERY. Then the danger of that break is no sudden thing.

Mr. CULLOM. It has become more imminent. If my colleague and the Senator from Louisiana will allow me——

Mr. CAFFERY. I desire to ask one other question.

Mr. FRYE. This can be settled in two minutes on this suggestion.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no desire to discuss the matter or to protract the debate, or to interfere with the interest of other localities, if we can get along without it, and I propose this, if it can be accepted without further debate, to come in in place of what is in the bill:

For the purpose of preventing the Mississippi River from breaking through into the Cache River at or near a point known as Beach Ridge, a few miles north of Cairo, whereby the national cemetery at Mound City, at the mouth of the Cache River, and the marine hospital at Cairo, would be in imminent danger of destruction, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me to ask him whether, if that is to be adopted, this amendment which we are now considering would be adopted——

Mr. CULLOM. That will go out.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And the next one following would be disagreed to?

Mr. CULLOM. No; we would disagree to both of these in the bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Disagree to both?

Mr. CULLOM. This will take the place of the one in the bill and the one stricken out.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will ask the Senator, then, if he proposes that as a substitute for the lines stricken out here?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; and the other lines which are in, whichever the Senate prefers.

Mr. BLANCHARD. In other words, that would be a new proposition to be incorporated in the bill at this point.

Mr. CULLOM. It is immaterial to me at what point it is put in, so that it is put in the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BLANCHARD. The Senator from Maryland will pardon me for one moment. It is a substitute, if the Senator will allow me, for the lines stricken out on page 95——

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And for the lines retained, beginning in line 16, on page 96, down to the word "Cairo," in line 24.

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly. It is a substitute for what is stricken out, and also for what it is proposed to put in.

Mr. BLANCHARD. That would leave it in this shape, that $100,000 would not be taken from the appropriation for the Mississippi River above the Ohio nor from the appropriation for the Mississippi River below the Ohio. That would settle the controversy.

Mr. CULLOM. It would be in another place, and it is suggested in order to get along with this bill, and to secure an appropriation that can be used in case it shall be necessary, in the judgment of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will state that if this amendment be adopted it will obviate all controversy.

Mr. PALMER. I must assert my rights. I am entitled to the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] has been recognized and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CULLOM. I interrupted my colleague because I wanted to call his attention to the amendment I proposed more than for any other purpose; and I beg his pardon.

Mr. PALMER. The original clause in the bill as it came from the House would be entirely sufficient to accomplish the object that I have in view:

Improving Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio River to St. Paul, Minn.: For continuing improvement from the mouth of the Ohio River to the mouth of the Missouri River, $673,333.33; and of the sum heretofore appropriated and authorized to be expended and contracted for during the fiscal year ending July 1, 1898, at the discretion of the Secretary of War, the said Secretary of War is directed to expend so much as may be necessary, not exceeding $100,000, to prevent the Mississippi River from breaking through into Cache River at or near a point known as Beach Ridge, a few miles north of Cairo.

Now, I have no particular preference as to what sum it shall be taken from, but the necessity for it is perfectly apparent.

Mr. CULLOM. I will offer the amendment to take the place of the amendment that was stricken out, as well as of the one put in, which is upon the next page.

I will state that the amendment stricken out by the committee was concurred in last night, I think, so that I will offer this as a substitute for the provision on page 96, beginning after the word "dollars" in line 10 and continuing down to line 24 on that page.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Illinois that the amendment referred to was passed over, and not concurred in, as the Senator seems to suppose.

Mr. CULLOM. My recollection was that the amendment to strike out was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me for a moment? If he will offer his substitute for the lines on page 93, to which he has just now referred, and have it adopted in lieu of that——

Mr. CULLOM. Certainly; and the other can be stricken out.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And then adopt the committee's amendment on page 93, it would cover the whole transaction.

Mr. CULLOM. It is very simple.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

For the purpose of preventing the Mississippi River from breaking through into the Cache River at or near a point known as Beach Ridge, a few miles north of Cairo, whereby the national cemetery at Mound City, at the mouth of the Cache River, and the marine hospital at Cairo would be in imminent danger of destruction, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. BERRY. That is in lieu of the amendment?

Mr. CULLOM. It is in lieu of the amendment in the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to interfere with the distinguished Senator from Illinois. I believe it is possible that this is a case of emergency.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. GORMAN. I say that from the statements made by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] on the floor and in the committee. But I wish to call attention to the fact that the appropriations contained in the pending bill, so far as I know and believe, are only those made in conformity with the law already existing, and that in no case have we attempted to make of this great appropriation bill a river and harbor bill.

Now, this amendment which is offered, appropriating the small sum of $100,000, makes the pending bill practically a river and harbor bill.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to say one word there?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. If this were an original amendment proposed by the committee, the Senator from Maryland would be right, but it is in lieu of a provision in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, providing that this work should be done, the appropriation to be taken from the appropriation already made for the upper river.

Now, it occurs to me that if the money can not be spared from the appropriation for the upper river, and that part of the amendment is stricken out, and we make an appropriation for the work, it is not a river and harbor bill, and is an exception to the rule which the Senator has laid down.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Arkansas argues the case like the intelligent lawyer that he is, but, after all, the bottom fact is that this is a new provision which has never been considered by either House of Congress, and is precisely on a footing with every provision of a river and harbor bill making an appropriation for a new work.

As the provision came from the other House, it was to divert and to apply $100,000 from the amount already appropriated for the improvement of this river. It provided for taking it from the river above the mouth, not increasing the appropriation, not increasing the project on hand, but simply directing that it should be applied to a particular locality.

Mr. President, it seems to me that our friends on the Mississippi River, both above and below, ought to recognize the fact that we have kept in the bill the entire appropriation for that river as it came from the House, one-fifth of all the amount required by the law for the improvement of that river. We have made an exception of that great body of water. We have stricken down one-fourth of all the appropriations made for all rivers and harbors except this one. In this case we have made an exception for the Mississippi River, both above and below its mouth.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the Senator from Maryland yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the law under which the appropriation is made for the Lower Mississippi River, and that law shows that the statement of the Senator is erroneous. The law requires the $2,583,000 to be appropriated. It is the law of June 3, 1896.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator read the provision?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will:

Improving Mississippi River from Head of Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, including salaries, clerical, office, traveling, and miscellaneous expenses of the Mississippi River Commission: Continuing improvement, $925,000, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the general improvement of the river, for the building and repairing of levees, and for surveys, including the continuation of the survey between Head of Passes and the head waters of the river, such improvement, surveys, building and repairs of levees to be made and carried on in such manner as in their opinion shall best improve navigation and promote the interests of commerce at all stages of the river: Provided, That on and after the passage of this act additional contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on continuously the plans of the Mississippi River Commission as aforesaid, or said materials may be purchased and work done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $2,375,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated—

Mr. GORMAN. That is all that applies to this appropriation.

Mr. BLANCHARD. One minute. I have not completed my statement.

Mr. GORMAN. I gave way to the Senator for a question, or for a suggestion in regard to the law, but I prefer to go on now and he can take the floor afterwards.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Very well.

Mr. GORMAN. The provision which the Senator from Louisiana has read this moment was that not more than $5,000,000——

Mr. BLANCHARD. Eight million three hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. GORMAN. As appropriations from time to time may be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $5,025,000, exclusive of the amount therein appropriated. That provision was that it should not exceed that amount in one year; so there was a provision in the law that in making continuous contracts for all the great harbors of the country, but 25 per cent of the limit should be appropriated. It was not to exceed that. As it came from the House of Representatives, the bill provided for the full appropriation of 25 per cent on all the harbors, and gave one-fifth, as required by the act, to the Mississippi River.

Now the Senate committee and the Senate by its action to-day have reduced every other appropriation, leaving to the Mississippi River, both above and below, the full amount estimated by the Department; and hence I say the committee of the Senate has treated the Mississippi River as it ought to be treated, in my judgment, as an exceptional case.

The friends of the Mississippi River, both above and below, now come to the Senate and ask them to make an entire new provision, one that was never considered in the river and harbor bill, and to put it on the pending bill which is intended and which must be kept simply as a bill carrying the appropriations required by law to be made, and is not a river and harbor bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the Senator from Maryland to yield to me that I may complete the statement which I began and which he prevented me from concluding.

Mr. GORMAN. Very well.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the Senator had allowed me to read on a little further he would have seen that the Appropriations Committee of the House placed in the bill for the Lower Mississippi River exactly the amount which the law says must be placed in the act annually. I read further:

Provided further, That for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, said contracts, and materials purchased, and work done otherwise than by contract shall not exceed the sum of $625,000—and thereafter shall not exceed the sum of $2,583,333 annually for the three years beginning July 1, 1897.

That was for the first year—

The appropriation of $2,583,333, which Senators find in the bill, is exactly the amount which the law states must be placed in there annually for the three years beginning July 1, 1897.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Louisiana will scarcely make that argument. The law provides that not exceeding that amount shall be appropriated. It is the maximum that is provided for by the law and not the minimum, and so with the limit for all the harbors in the country. The appropriations for the contracts shall not be made to cover more than one-fourth of the amount.

Now, on account of the condition of the Treasury, the Committee on Appropriations have reduced all the other appropriations for harbors and rivers in the United States one-fourth. They have taken 25 per cent off of it, and we have made an exception in the case of the Mississippi River, giving it the full benefit of the maximum provided for in the act which the Senator has just read; and here comes a proposition, the only one on this bill, as offered now by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], that we will make a special provision, a new law, provide for entering into a new contract, and authorize the expenditure of $100,000, which is not provided for by law, making this a river and harbor bill.

Mr. President, I appeal to Senators on this floor who are in favor of river and harbor improvements, as I am, to the Senators on the Mississippi River, who have been dealt with liberally and who ought to be dealt with liberally, who have been made special favorites by the committee and by the Senate in considering this bill, not to put in generally these appropriations which mean so much for commerce and the prosperity of our country. This bill as it stands to-day is the most extravagant that has ever been considered by either House of Congress. It contains as amended appropriations of over $51,000,000, $17,000,000 of which, as the bill came here, was for river and harbor improvements. More money is carried by this bill than the condition of the Treasury will warrant, and I submit that, in view of the history and action of those who are to cooperate with us in making these laws, we ought to be careful and not to overstep the bounds of proper legislation.

This provision has no place here. In the Committee on Appropriations—I think I have a perfect right to speak of it—in the anxiety of members of this body to make provisions for improvements, $4,000,000 was attempted to be placed upon the bill for new enterprises. There are Senators on this floor, and I am one of them, who would feel that we were bound to look after the interests of our sections of the country, and to ask that new items should be placed upon the bill if it is to be opened and to be made a river and harbor bill.

In this particular matter, there is some question as to the propriety of it, made by the engineer. I know nothing of it personally. I have been prepared to take the statement of the distinguished Senator from Illinois as to the necessity of it, although the engineer in his letter states that there is none whatever, provided you take it from that great appropriation made for the Mississippi River. What is $100,000 out of two million and odd hundred thousand for the Lower Mississippi River, or the $600,000 for the upper river? It does seem to me that our friends who are anxious for the improvements ought to agree that one-half of it shall be taken from the appropriations for the Mississippi River above and one-half from the appropriations for the river below, and not violate the law, not make a precedent which will break us down, if not in this bill, I fear in the bills to come, which will make appropriations hereafter on this bill so great that the bills can never become laws.

Now, I do not desire to impede the progress of the bill or to prevent the improvement, and the amount is so small that I would not have consumed so much of the time of the Senate but for the fact that my friend the Senator from Illinois [M. CULLOM], who I know is anxious in regard to this matter, and who happens to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations, as I am, has had to stand and say to other Senators "It is impossible for us under the law and with any proper conception of our duty in the Appropriations Committee to open this bill for new enterprises." I trust he will modify the amendment which proposes to strike out the provision as it came from the other House, and let the $100,000 to be taken one half from the appropriations for the river above and one half from those for the river below. That, it seems to me, is a fair compromise. It is a mere bagatelle, so far as these improvements are concerned. It saves a world of trouble, and it will probably save the appropriations that ought to be made in the future.

Mr. CULLOM. I am greatly embarrassed to have to continue this discussion for another moment, because I have been very anxious to get along with the bill, and I made the suggestion and offered the amendment on the supposition that there would be no opposition to that mode of disposing of the question.

Mr. President, if it were an ordinary appropriation for an improvement, I would be the last man, I think, who would insist upon a dollar where it is not estimated or recommended by the department having it in charge, but here is a condition that confronts those people and the Government in such a way that I would be recreant to my duty if I did not insist that an appropriation from some source should be made to protect the river. It is not an ordinary appropriation, and it is not outside of the bill, as I think, either. It is the regular improvement of the Mississippi River. It is true, as the Senator from Maryland says, that it becomes to an extent a river and harbor measure. But this is an emergency which makes it my duty to insist upon it, because I know exactly what the condition of affairs there is.

I want to make one suggestion to show that the emergency is liable to become so imminent that in any twenty-four hours the water will break through from this point on the Mississippi River into the Cache River. There is a little point called Beach Ridge, into which the water has been cutting and cutting for some time, until the point is nearly taken away. When that point shall be taken away, there will be nothing but marsh almost on the other side next to the Cache River, and it will go through without any sort of obstruction; there will be no such thing as stopping it. The amendment should be adopted as I have proposed it, unless it can be arranged to take the money from the appropriations for both ends of the river. I will be perfectly contented if Senators will agree to that, and I wish they would, because it is an embarrassment to me to insist upon it outside of that clause. It is a little irregular, but here is an emergency which, it seems to me, requires the Government to do something, whether it is regular or irregular, in the particular form which the amendment may be placed.

I wish to say that if the Senators especially representing the north end of the river and the south end of the river will agree that the amount shall be divided equally, I shall be entirely content. I shall be very glad if they will do so, and I shall have the amendment prepared so as to fit that condition. I pause for a moment to see whether that can not be done.

Mr. VEST. I could not agree to take this appropriation from the appropriations for the upper and the lower river, or to take any part of it from the appropriation for the upper river. Here is a letter which I have received from the Chief of Engineers, giving information from the engineer in charge of the river. I will ask that it may be read. When I first noticed this provision in the public press, I addressed a communication to the Corps of Engineers asking what were the facts in regard to it, whether that amount of money, $100,000, could be taken from the upper river, and here is the reply.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1897.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of February 16, 1897, relating to the diversion of $100,000 from the appropriation for improving the Mississippi River between the Ohio and Missouri rivers to the protection of the bank of the Mississippi River above Cairo, Ill.

Maj. Thomas H. Handbury, Corps of Engineers, the officer in local charge of this section of the Mississippi River, is of the opinion that there is no immediate danger of the river cutting through into the Cache River and thence into the Ohio, and he does not consider the proposed work at the present time so great a necessity as to justify the diversion of funds from other work more important to the interests of navigation. He is also of the opinion that this bank protection, if undertaken, will cost far more than $100,000.

In my opinion the proposed diversion of $100,000 from the appropriation for improvement of the Mississippi River between the mouths of the Ohio and Missouri will materially affect the interests of that important work.

If it be the will of Congress that the bank above Cairo be immediately protected, it is respectfully suggested that the work be otherwise provided for than by diverting money from the improvement of the Mississippi between the Ohio and Missouri. The caving bank in question is a few miles above Cairo, but the effect of a cut-off would be felt below the mouth of the Ohio, and it is a question whether any work looking to the prevention of such cut-off is not a more proper charge against the item of $2,583,333 in the sundry civil bill for continuing improvement of the Mississippi River from Head of the Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. WILSON,
Brigadier General, Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Hon. G. G. VEST,
United States Senate.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland has attempted to make it appear that there is no difference between contracts made for the improvement of harbors and those authorized for improvements on the Mississippi and Missouri rivers. In point of fact, there is a great difference between them, one that has always been recognized by the River and Harbor Committee of the House and by the Commerce Committee of the Senate.

By way of illustration, take any one of the harbors of the United States that is now being improved under the continuous work, or contract, system. For instance, the harbor of Galveston. There we knew exactly how much money it would take to improve the harbor to the depth of water which the project called for. The commission of engineers appointed to consider this harbor and submit a project for its improvement stated in their report that the work completed would cost $7,000,000. Congress thereupon, a few years ago, authorized the Secretary of War to make a contract for the completion of the project of improvement recommended for Galveston Harbor, not to exceed in the aggregate $7,000,000. The river and harbor act which embodied this authorization appropriated the first installment to meet the early payments under the contract to be made for this work, and the remaining payments were to be made as Congress should from time to time make appropriations therefor, which appropriations, it was contemplated, should be made on that one of the general appropriation bills known as the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Under the authorization for the making of the Galveston contract, a contract was let to certain bidders. They took it at a sum within the aggregate amount fixed by Congress. The first payments under that contract were made out of the first installment which the river and harbor act that authorized the coutract appropriated. Then subsequent payments were made from time to time as the money was appropriated by law, in the sundry civil appropriation acts.

But when it came to the Mississippi River and the Missouri River it was impossible for the engineers to state how much money was required to complete the rectification and the improvement of those rivers. They could not submit a project and estimates for the completion of the works of improvement of those rivers. Therefore it became necessary to state some amount of money to the extent of which contracts on those rivers should be authorized, and a limit of time in which the money was to be expended. No contract to complete the improvement of the Mississippi River could be authorized, because no one could tell, as could be done at Galveston Harbor, how much it would take to improve the river. But Congress thought continuous work on the river should be authorized, and the contract system should be applied. So, not being able to state how much money would be needed to complete the works on the Mississippi River, and thus not deeming it advisable to authorize contracts to complete, the river and harbor act of 1892 authorized the sum of $10,000,000, and the river and harbor act of 1896 authorized $9,000,000, which money was to be expended within four years. All the $10,000,000 authorized by the first-named act was appropriated and expended in the four years following, and we are now on the $9,000,000 authorization of the second-named act. If this money is not appropriated in the four years named in the act, the appropriation lapses and the money is lost to the river. Not so with the harbors, like at Galveston, or Yaquina Bay, or Humboldt Bay, and others, for if Congress fails to appropriate in the sundry civil act of this year for those harbors, the money is not lost to them. There is no limit of time as to the completion of those harbor works. If the money as to them be not appropriated one year, it may be the next.

But as regards the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, the law requires the money to be appropriated within four years, and if not appropriated in that time it is lost to the rivers. As to the Mississippi River, the law says explicitly that not exceeding $2,583,333 per annum shall be appropriated. Now, it is clear that if this sum is not appropriated in this bill the deficit can not be made up to the river in the next bill, for not exceeding $2,583,333 can be appropriated by the terms of the law in any one of the fiscal years named in the act of Congress.

Therefore it is necessary for Congress, under the law authorizing the expenditure of the $9,000,000 on the Mississippi River in the four years, to appropriate the maximum sum named in the act to be appropriated each year.

The Senator from Maryland must see that if that amount of money is not appropriated in this bill it is lost to the Mississippi River, and surely he does not desire that.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President——

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CAFFERY. Do I understand my colleague to say that if a less sum than the maximum is appropriated in any one year the sum total is to be diminished by that amount? In other words, would the improvement lose the $9,000,000 in the annual aggregate of improvements if one annual appropriation was less than one-fourth of it?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will answer my colleague by stating that the river and harbor act of 1896, which authorizes the expenditure of the $9,000,000 upon the Lower Mississippi in four years, distinctly states that for the first year $625,000 shall be appropriated and expended, and for the next three years not exceeding $2,583,333 is to be appropriated. In this way the $9,000,000 is to be appropriated in the four fiscal years.

Mr. CAFFERY. And must not be less?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The $9,000,000 is to be appropriated and expended in four years, the first year six hundred and odd thousand dollars and the next three years two million five hundred and eighty-odd thousand dollars. I will say to my colleague that the first installment of $625,000 was appropriated by the appropriation act which made this authorization. We are now proceeding to appropriate for the second installment, and should it be less than $2,583,333 the deficit can not be made up without a new act of Congress. In other words, under existing law the deficit is absolutely lost to the river. This construction was placed upon the law by the River and Harbor Committee of the House when the act authorizing the expenditure was passed. I repeat, this money must be appropriated in the four fiscal years named in the act authorizing the expenditure, and it can not be appropriated thereafter except by a new direction of Congress.

Mr. BERRY. If any of it is diverted, it is gone.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And if any of it is diverted, it is gone.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator permit me, for I think he has unintentionally rather misstated my position in this matter?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I should certainly desire to be corrected by the Senator if I have done so.

Mr. GORMAN. What I contended about the appropriation is that under the river and harbor act Congress can, in its discretion, appropriate whatever amount it sees proper, and that we are not bound under that law or under the contract to appropriate the whole amount this year. I agree that the aggregate amount to be expended is fixed by law and will not be changed. I stated that I did not antagonize, either in committee or on the floor, nor do I now, the making of the full appropriation for the Mississippi River, both above and below. I am heartily in favor of it. All I have asked is that the friends of that great improvement will not compel us in this case to make an entirely new appropriation that is not provided for by law; in other words, to save us from making a river and harbor appropriation on the sundry civil bill. That is all I have asked.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The Senator from Maryland does not now, as I understand him, controvert that there is a very decided difference between the contracts authorized by law for the improvement of the harbors of the United States and those for the improvement of the two great rivers named. He does not controvert, as I understand his position, that if the $9,000,000 is not appropriated in the four fiscal years that that portion which is not so appropriated is absolutely lost to the river.

Mr. GORMAN. That is true.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The Senator says that is true. Then, if that be true, Congress in the present sundry civil bill should appropriate, as the committee have authorized to be done, the full amount of the two million five hundred and eighty-odd thousand dollars which the law mentions as the maximum sum to be appropriated for the Lower Mississippi River for each of the three fiscal years beginning with July 1, 1897.

The Senator says that they treated the Mississippi River with greater consideration than the harbors because they did not reduce the appropriation. If they had reduced it, the amount of the reduction would be lost, and that is why it was not reduced.

The Senator from Illinois is exceedingly anxious that $100,000 shall be expended for the purpose of preventing what is supposed to be the danger of a crevasse from the Mississippi River into the Ohio River 8 miles above the mouth of the Ohio River. That matter, it seems, was presented to the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and, believing that it was a good case, they authorized the expenditure of $100,000 to prevent the crevasse, and very properly directed it to be taken from the appropriation for the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Ohio and the mouth of the Missouri River. This threatened cut-off is along that reach of the river.

While it is true that the Mississippi River is one great national highway, beginning, so far as its navigation is concerned, at St. Paul and extending to the Gulf of Mexico, nevertheless Congress has not treated the river as a whole as regards its improvement. It has subdivided it into sections for the purpose of its rectification and improvement. It is now, and has been for years, divided into three sections—from St. Paul to the mouth of the Missouri River, from the mouth of the Missouri River to the mouth of the Ohio, and from the mouth of the Ohio to the Gulf of Mexico. For these three stretches of the river distinct appropriations have from time to time been made by Congressional action. So it is in the last river and harbor act. The river is divided into these three sections, and a certain amount of money is authorized to be appropriated annually for each of the three sections. Between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio a large sum of money is directed to be expended annually for four years, and the present sundry civil bill carries the second installment of that authorization. Now, the Senator from Illinois, a member of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, changed the proposition as it was recommended by the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors and adopted by the House.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him? It was not my action that suggested the change at all. I submitted to the judgment of the committee that it was better to take it from the lower river than from the upper. It was entirely a matter of judgment on the part of the committee that that change was made, but I did not suggest it as a matter of fact; I acquiesced in what seemed to be the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The proposition, then, was changed by the Committee on Appropriations from the way it was adopted in the House. This threatened crevasse, I will call to the attention of Senators, is not along that reach of the river from the mouth of the Ohio to the Gulf, but is along that reach of the river from the mouth of the Ohio northward to the mouth of the Missouri River. What right have those gentlemen in the State of Illinois, at whose instance this appropriation of $100,000 is proposed to be made, to ask that it be taken from the appropriation for that portion of the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Ohio? I will say to the Senators from Illinois that we have as much to attend to in the way of crevasses and river improvements and prevention of floods in the Lower Mississippi River as we can possibly attend to. That is a vastly important reach of the Mississippi River.

Mr. PALMER. Will the Senator allow me to make one remark to him?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. If the Mississippi River shall break into the valley of the Cache, the mouth of the Ohio would be above on the Mississippi, and not below Cairo, as it is now?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, you observe from the map which the Senator from Illinois who sits on the other side of the aisle [Mr. CULLOM] exhibited to the Senate that this threatened crevasse is on the Illinois side of the Mississippi River, at a point 8 miles above Cairo, and, if the crevasse occurs, the water of the Mississippi River, or a portion of the water of the Mississippi River, would be diverted into the Cache River, which runs southeasterly a short distance and then empties into the Ohio River. Now, the water which escapes through this crevasse from the Mississippi River above the mouth of the Ohio River would flow into the Ohio River a few miles above the city of Cairo, and, not being able to run upstream, there would be no place for it to go except down the Ohio River and back into the Mississippi River. In other words, that crevasse, about which these gentlemen are concerned, would not affect the Lower Mississippi River at all. Every drop of water that escaped through the crevasse would find its way into the Ohio River and then back into the Mississippi River, and thus on to the Gulf. There would be no depletion of the quantity of water in the channel of the lower river by this crevasse. It is no concern, Mr. President, of that lower stretch of the river whether this crevasse occurs or not, because the navigable channel of the lower river would not be affected. There would not be less water in that channel on account of the crevasse.

So it is a palpable injustice to the Lower Mississippi River to take from its appropriation $100,000 to prevent a threatened crevasse on the Illinois side of the Mississippi River above the mouth of the Ohio. You might as well take $100,000 from the Army appropriation bill. If this diversion of money is to be made at all, it should be made from that stretch of the river between the mouth of the Ohio and the mouth of the Missouri.

"But," says the Chief of Engineers, "the amount of money available for the river between the mouth of the Ohio and the mouth of the Missouri should not be diminished by taking from it this $100,000;" and then he goes on to state in his letter that if this diversion is to be taken from any of the appropriations authorized by law for the Mississippi River it can better be spared from the appropriation for the Lower Mississippi River.

Mr. President, the Chief of Engineers is not authorized by law to speak for the appropriations, either as to their amount or their expenditure, which Congress makes for the Lower Mississippi River. He is authorized to speak for the appropriations which Congress makes for the Mississippi River above the mouth of the Ohio, because above the mouth of the Ohio the improvement of the Mississippi River is directly under the Engineer Corps, of which the Chief of Engineers is the head, but below the mouth of the Ohio River the improvement of the Mississippi River is by law under the direction of the Mississippi River Commission, and the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers have nothing whatever to do with it, except to approve the recommendations of the Commission.

General Wilson, the Chief of Engineers, is not the official designated by law to state what amount of money is needed for the improvement of the Lower Mississippi River, nor is he the official designated by law to say that this hundred thousand dollars can be better spared from the Lower Mississippi River than it can from the upper reaches of the river. The Mississippi River Commission, who have charge of the Lower Mississippi River, have not been consulted in this matter. It is upon their recommendations and their estimates that the lower river is appropriated for, and the $9,000,000, about which I have been speaking, that was placed in the last river and harbor act was so placed there upon the estimates made not by the Chief of Engineers or the Secretary of War, but upon estimates submitted under the law by the Mississippi River Commission. We have nothing from the Mississippi River Commission stating that this hundred thousand dollars can be spared from the lower river. All that there is to base this proposed diversion of a hundred thousand dollars on is this letter of the Chief of Engineers, who has nothing to do with either the estimates for the lower river or their expenditure beyond the approval of the projects of the river commission.

I am not here for the purpose of fighting an appropriation of $100,000 to prevent this threatened cut-off, but I am here to object to its being taken from moneys justly belonging to the lower river.

Mr. CULLOM. Will not the Senator consent to a division of the amount, and let one-half of the money come from the Lower Mississippi and the other half from the Upper Mississippi?

Mr. BLANCHARD. The Senator asked that question a little while ago of the Senator from Missouri, and the Senator from Missouri declined. The Senator from Illinois has now pending an amendment making a separate, independent appropriation of $100,000 for this work, which would prevent it being diverted from either the upper river or the lower river. That proposition, I think, ought to be adopted, and I believe the Senate will adopt it.

Mr. BERRY. Let us have a vote on the Senator's proposition.

Mr. CULLOM. Allow a vote on that and have it settled, so far as the question of the original appropriation is concerned.

Mr. BLANCHARD. All I am concerned about is to prevent an injustice from being done to the lower river. If this crevasse was along any part of the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Ohio River, the money to stop it would very properly come out of the appropriation for the lower river to prevent it; but it is above the mouth of the Ohio River. I trust the Senate will adopt the substitute proposition of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to modify the proposition by adding at the end of the amendment the words "to be immediately available."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. VEST. That is right. I hope that that proposition will be adopted. Make the appropriation of $100,000, and not take it from either end of the river.

Mr. BERRY. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment on page 95 will be considered as stricken out of the bill and this amendment agreed to. The other goes out of the bill because this amendment is a substitute for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

Mr. BERRY. It goes out under this agreement, I will state.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

The next amendment which had been reserved by the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 16, page 97, to insert:

And hereafter the Secretary of War shall annually submit estimates in detail for river and harbor improvements required for the ensuing fiscal year to the Secretary of the Treasury to be included in, and carried into the sum total of, the Book of Estimates; and all such river and harbor estimates shall be considered and reported upon in a separate bill by the committee of each House having charge of river and harbor improvements.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I want to enter my opposition to that amendment. I should like to hear from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations why he is disposed to force us to make up a river and harbor bill every year. It is bad enough to make one every two years, and it is proposed by this amendment to make a river and harbor bill every twelve months.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment explains itself. The idea of the amendment is that we shall eliminate from the sundry civil bill hereafter the river and harbor element.

Mr. VEST. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. And have it dealt with by some other committee of this body, possibly the Committee on Commerce. The Committee on Appropriations is not anxious to have its jurisdiction enlarged, and in order to show that at least in one instance we wanted to minimize the extraordinary powers of the Committee on Appropriations, we thought we would recommend this amendment.

Mr. CAFFERY. Mr. President, it occurs to me that the criticism made by the Senator from Missouri is correct, it being the language that an annual estimate shall be made of these different sums to be appropriated. Now, in a continuous contract, where a sum of money is awarded to a contractor under such a contract, how can an annual estimate be made when a contract is taken in a lump sum? I would ask the Senator from Iowa how that would work? This amendment provides for an annual estimate by the Chief of Engineers. In the case of continuous contracts providing for a lump sum, the work to be done in three or four years, how does the annual estimate come in? What is the purpose of requiring it?

Mr. ALLISON. What does the Senator regard as the value of the statements made by the Chief of Engineers as to the appropriations which are now in this bill? They are not annual estimates. Why should not we have, I will ask the Senator, the responsible indorsement, first, of the Secretary of War and, secondly, of the Secretary of the Treasury as to these expenditures and appropriations, as much as we should their estimates and indorsements of other appropriations they have asked us to make under the law?

Mr. CAFFERY. The annual estimates of expenditures is a very good thing in its place. The continuous-contract system has been recently adopted; it is not of very ancient date. When a continuous contract is made, and a lump sum is appropriated for such work, of course you can divide the number of years which that work will take, and get an annual estimate. That is a mere mathematical calculation.

Mr. ALLISON. It may be, and it may not be.

Mr. CAFFERY. What I wanted to know was whether, if this annual estimate for separate works was insisted upon as an independent estimate, it would conflict with the continuous-improvement plan?

Mr. ALLISON. I think not. So far from it, it would only promote that plan, requiring the Secretary of War to give us the information which would require the necessary appropriations to be made under these continuous contracts.

Mr. CAFFERY. If we have those estimates already, what is the particular use of requiring specially an estimate to be made hereafter?

Mr. ALLISON. We do not have those annual estimates. We have no estimates this year from the responsible head of the Department, the Secretary of War; nor have we any estimates incorporated in the Book of Estimates, and carried into the sum total of the estimates of expenditure of the Government. Now, why should we exempt these appropriations from that general routine, if it be routine or if it be of value to Congress in making appropriations? Why not have it apply to rivers and harbors as well as to other public improvements?

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator exactly understands the estimates. This bill is exceptional. Nearly all of the items are for contracts which either have not yet been entered into, or where proposals have been made, or where they intend to make a contract authorized by law one year ago. The only way to make an estimate on a new contract is the way pursued in this case in nearly every item, by simply limiting the amount, as the law limits it, to 25 per cent in some cases and 50 per cent in others; but that is not the way they will estimate hereafter. After the contract is made, then the way they estimate is to take a return from the contractor for the amount of work which he has done and the pay to which he is entitled, and that is sent to the Committee on Appropriations for the full amount. That is an estimate exact; it can not be questioned; and there is nothing for the Committee on Appropriations to do except to make the appropriation. That is all there is to it.

Mr. ALLISON. That has not been done.

Mr. FRYE. In this case.

Mr. ALLISON. This year that has not been done.

Mr. FRYE. But it will be done next year.

Mr. ALLISON. That may be. We simply provide that it shall be done. It has not been done this year, and therefore the Committee on Appropriations have had no guide except such information as they could gather. They have not even this year adopted the suggestion the Senator from Maine makes; they have not estimated or provided in the appropriation, as the bill came to us, for one-fourth, one-third, or 50 per cent of those contracts.

Mr. FRYE. I object, Mr. President, to this amendment very seriously. These items appear here upon the sundry civil bill now, simply because, as a rule, they are debts against the United States under contracts, and therefore the proper place for them is on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me ask the Senator if they are debts of the Government under contract, why are they not estimated for? We estimate for the pages, the clerks, the stenographers, and all our employees here detailed, and those estimates are found in the Book of Estimates. Why? Because they are necessary expenditures to be made, and appropriated for in order that they may be made.

All we desire is the information that the heads of Departments ought to give us as to the amount of money that should be appropriated for this or that particular work.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Secretary of War send in an estimate?

Mr. ALLISON. The Book of Estimates, under the law, is required to be made up by the Secretary of the Treasury and sent here as estimates of appropriations; and, under our rules, when these estimates are found in the Book of Estimates amendments in accordance with these estimates are in order under our rules and may be offered here; but we have no such estimates in the Book of Estimates as to any one of these contracts.

Mr. FRYE. But the Committee on Commerce never has any estimates from the Treasury Department. All the estimates that come to the Committee on Commerce on which the river and harbor bills are made up are simply estimates of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ALLISON. They are estimates; that is, they are statements which come from the Engineer Bureau, first, as to the propriety of these public works, and, secondly, as to the amount of money necessary to carry on or complete them. Therefore, of course, the Committee on Commerce has no estimates in the sense of the provision of law requiring estimates; but when a work is authorized, and when an amount of money is required to be expended, in every case the amount ought to be incorporated in the Book of Estimates, so we may know at the beginning of a Congress how much the Secretary of the Treasury and the different heads of Departments think ought to be appropriated to carry on the great business of this Government; and they ought to send us their views as to the necessary amount of money that should be expended for rivers and harbors, as well as for everything else in our Government.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I simply want to say a very few words. My principal objection to this amendment is that it will provide for a river and harbor bill every year hereafter. You send those estimates from the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of War to the Committee on Commerce, and every appropriation for any river and harbor in the United States is entirely germane and relevant, and you could not succeed in keeping back the enormous pressure which there is upon the Committee on Commerce for river and harbor improvements. That pressure is entirely legitimate, and it comes from this, that while ten or fifteen years ago 10 or 12 feet of water would float nine-tenths of the freight vessels of the United States, to-day it takes from 25 to 30 feet to float the same freighting vessels. Then you could carry freight on a vessel of two or three hundred tons; to-day, with any profit, you must have a vessel which will carry from three to six thousand tons; and they are building them on the Lakes to-day of 6,000 tons. Those vessels must have harbors to go into, and those harbors must have water from 25 to 30 feet; and the pressure, which I say is entirely legitimate, is coming from all over this country for increased appropriations for rivers and harbors. We have done everything we possibly could to hold on to this matter. We have provided, in the first place, by a law, that in every case there shall be a preliminary examination, and that that preliminary examination shall simply be an opinion on the part of an engineer as to whether or not any improvements at all should ever be made and whether or not commerce requires it. That takes two years. Under our present arrangement, then, if the report be in favor of an improvement, we provide in a river and harbor bill for a survey. That takes two years longer, and thus we have deferred that application for four years.

Now, the moment you undertake to send to the Committee on Commerce this jurisdiction which you provide for in the amendment, you have opened up a river and harbor bill every year; and every other year, if these appropriations come in—for the regular river and harbor bill comes in every other year—there will be a river and harbor bill so enormous, taking in all the regular appropriations we must make, that it will be top-heavy and drop over of itself. I think it would be a very great misfortune to have this amendment adopted.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the part of the amendment following the word "estimates," in the twenty-first line. I think it is liable to the clear point of order of being a change of the rules of the Senate, which can only be made in the way prescribed in those rules, and it seems to me that while it may not be of great importance in itself, yet it is a very objectionable thing to tie up this body by a statute in regard to the action of the several committees of the Senate. It never has been heard of in our legislation except in the case of certain public expenditures.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator make a point of order on the last part of the amendment?

Mr. HOAR. Yes. In regard to the matter of public printing, which is a mode of expending money placed in the power of the Senate without requiring a joint resolution to be approved by the President, we have certain statutes, and there is a certain statute in existence now in regard to spending money for surveys, I believe, in regard to river and harbor matters, but here is a proposition providing by statute, which is irrepealable except by another statute, that certain committees of the Senate shall exercise certain functions and make certain reports every year. I do not believe it is consistent with the Constitution, which gives each body the power to make rules and regulations for its own government and to appoint its own committees. Even if it were in accordance with the Constitution, I think it might put into the mind of the other House an idea which they may act upon in a way which will plague us very much hereafter, if we pass it. So that, as a matter of expediency, I think this ought not to be done, and I make the point of order on so much of the paragraph—but I suppose it applies to the whole paragraph, unless the latter part is stricken out by the committee—I make the point of order that it is a change of rules, which can no more be done by a statute than can a rule be changed except in the manner provided for.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. Let the last four lines of the proposed amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

> And all such river and harbor estimates shall be considered and reported upon in a separate bill by the committee of each House having charge of river and harbor improvements.

Mr. HOAR. That matter is provided for by our rules now, and always has been, and always must be until we change the rules.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. President, I desire to state that I think the point of order made by the Senator from Massachusetts is certainly good, and further to state that the friends of the river and harbor improvements in the Senate can not afford to adopt any such amendment as that proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, even if the point of order be not good.

I wish to state here that if that amendment were adopted and a separate bill, another annual appropriation bill, made necessary to carry these appropriations for money to meet payments under existing river and harbor contracts and those of the future, it would endanger the success of river and harbor improvement in this country.

I think the point of order is well taken, and, if it be not, the amendment should be voted down by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has no hesitation in sustaining the point of order made by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. FRYE. To the first five or six lines of the amendment nobody objects.

Mr. ALLISON. We bow to the decision of the Chair on the point of order that the last four lines of the amendment shall go out. I understand that there is no objection to the first part of the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. The first part is all right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the remaining part of the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 97, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

> And hereafter the Secretary of War shall annually submit estimates in detail for river and harbor improvements required for the ensuing fiscal year to the Secretary of the Treasury to be included in, and carried into the sum total of, the Book of Estimates.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that portion of the amendment which has just been read will be agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. There is an amendment on page 81, line 7, which I ask to have now considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment indicated by the Senator from Iowa, which was heretofore passed over, will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 81, after the word "night," at the end of line 9, the Committee on Appropriations reported to insert "which shall cover the entire cost to the United States of lighting and maintaining in good order each electric light in said parks;" so as to read:

For lighting thirty-two arc electric lights in Lafayette, Franklin, Judiciary, and Lincoln parks three hundred and sixty-five nights, at 25 cents per light per night, which shall cover the entire cost to the United States of lighting and maintaining in good order each electric light in said parks, $2,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations which was passed over was, on page 81, line 12, after the word "dollars" to strike out:

Provided, That all wires shall be placed underground, and that the conduits, wires, lamp-posts complete, shall be furnished by the electric-light company without expense to the United States, and that 25 cents per lamp per night shall cover the entire cost to the United States of lighting and maintaining in good order each electric light in the parks mentioned.

And insert:

Provided, That hereafter there shall be no extension of electric-lighting service, and it shall be unlawful to open any of the streets, roads, avenues, alleys, or other public highways, or any of the parks or reservations in the District of Columbia, for the purpose of laying electric wires, cables, or conduits therein, until specifically authorized by law.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk in lieu of the amendment of the committee which has just been stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to substitute for the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations the following:

Until Congress shall provide for a conduit system, it shall be unlawful to lay conduits for electric lighting purposes in any road, street, avenue, park, or reservation except as hereafter specifically authorized by law: Provided, however, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to issue permits for house connections with conduits and overhead wires now existing adjacent to the premises with which such connection is to be made, and also permits for public lighting connections with conduits already in the portion of the street proposed to be lighted. And nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect in any way any pending litigation involving the validity or legality of the construction of any conduits made since June 18, 1896, or as validating any such conduits.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I understand my amendment to the amendment is accepted by the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. The effect of the amendment of the Senator, as I understand it, is to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 12, on page 81, including the proviso the committee recommended should be stricken out, and also the proviso it reported to insert.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Will the Secretary read the last two lines of the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

And nothing herein contained shall be construed to effect in any way any pending litigation involving the validity or legality of the construction of any conduits made since June 18, 1896, as validating any such conduits.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I have heretofore opposed certain portions of this amendment. I am somewhat reluctant on this day to engage in any extensive debate upon the propriety of this amendment as a whole, and my reluctance is based upon several reasons. In the first place, I was one of those who doubted the propriety of our meeting to-day for the purpose of enacting legislation for the people of the United States. My attention had been called to various petitions presented to the Senate by honorable Senators asking for the enactment of a rest day for the District of Columbia, and I was disposed to acquiesce in the sentiment expressed in those petitions, one of which I shall now read:

To the honorable the Senate of the United States, in Congress assembled:

We, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Westchester, Chester County, Pa., respectfully petition your honorable body to enact a law for Sabbath observance in the District of Columbia equal to the best of the similar laws of individual States.

ALICE LEWIS, President.
LOUISA E. CALDWELL, Secretary.
L. M. COBB, Treasurer.
Representing 69 members.

I had previously presented other petitions from the Woman's Christian Temperance Union upon the same subject and other subjects.

In connection therewith the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] who offers this amendment on this day to enact legislation introduced a bill, which I will have the honor of reading.

A bill to protect the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, as a day of rest and worship in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That on the first day of the week, known as the Lord's Day, set apart by general consent in accordance with divine appointment as a day of rest and worship, it shall be unlawful to perform any labor, except works of necessity and mercy and work by those who religiously observe Saturday, if performed in such a way as not to involve or disturb others; also to open places of business or traffic, except in the case of drug stores for the dispensing of medicines; also to make contracts or transact other commercial business; also to engage in noisy amusements—

Whatever that may mean—

* * * also to perform any court service, except in connection with arrests of criminals and service of process to prevent fraud.

Then the bill provides very severe penalties for violations of its provisions. But, before speaking on the amendment, I desire to ask the distinguished Senator from Michigan whether that bill was enacted into law? Hearing no response, I assume that the bill was not enacted into a law, although by its terms it was broad enough to prevent the enactment of any law by the Congress of the United States on this day. For these reasons, Mr. President, I hesitate to engage in a general debate in the face of this petition of 69 honored members of the Christian Temperance Union, and in the light of the bill presented by my distinguished friend from Michigan, I hesitate to oppose his amendment on this day. I understand a similar amendment substantially is to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and perhaps that may be taken up to-morrow, when possibly I may engage in some debate upon this general question.

Mr. President, seriously in regard to this amendment—my friend the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] asks me if I have not been serious all the while. That is a reflection upon the remarks I have already made.

I do not think this is a wise amendment. If it were earlier in the session, I should be disposed to oppose it seriously, but because of the present state of the business and for other reasons, I do not see fit at this time to offer opposition to it. It makes one provision in regard to the prevention of the erection of overhead wires which I do not think will meet with public approval. It prevents the erection of overhead wires outside of the city of Washington and in the country portions of the District of Columbia. I am assured that it is likely that some legislation may follow in the near future, possibly at the extra session, whereby the people living in the country districts, who are not supplied with gas, may be enabled to be supplied with electric light in some form or other.

My next criticism of the amendment is that it allows house connections with conduits adjacent to the premises with which such connection is to be made. The inquiry I desire to make of the distinguished Senator from Michigan is, whether it is understood by himself and the committee that this would permit house connections where the conduit is on the opposite side of the street from the house?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will state in reply to the Senator from New York that it certainly means to enable the people living on both sides of the street to make such connection. That is all it does.

Mr. HILL. Although the conduit is upon only one side?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes, sir; that is always done.

Mr. HILL. I accept that as a proper interpretation of the amendment, and acquiesce in it.

My other suggestion is simply this: There is litigation now pending, involving the question of the validity of the construction of certain conduits since June 18, 1896, and the object of the amendment, very properly, is to prevent this act from affecting it in any way. It would simply have been necessary to say that "nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect in any way the pending litigation." But there is added "or validating any such conduits." I think that is the last wording. I suggest simply an amendment to insert "or invalidating." That should be added, and I ask the Senator from Michigan to accept the amendment.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have no objection to that amendment if the Senator from Iowa will agree to it.

Mr. HILL. With these suggestions, I have no opposition to offer at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan accept the amendment?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand this phraseology was very carefully prepared. I do not know that the suggestion of the Senator from New York materially changes the amendment, but I understood the amendment was satisfactory to the Senator from New York. Will the Senator repeat his amendment?

Mr. HILL. It is to add, after "validating," the words "or invalidating." That is, that this provision shall neither validate nor invalidate it. I regard the last expression as unnecessary.

When you say that nothing herein shall affect the litigation, it is going far enough.

Mr. ALLISON. Let me suggest that we modify the amendment so that it shall read that "nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect in any way any pending litigation involving the validity or invalidity or legality of the construction of any conduits."

Mr. FAULKNER. The word "legality" is already in. The Senator's amendment does not propose to strike that out.

Mr. HILL. It is not necessary to insert it in that place.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us say "validating or invalidating."

Mr. HILL. After the last word "validating" I wish to insert the words "or invalidating."

Mr. ALLISON. Every one would understand the phrase "pending litigation involving the validity or invalidity or legality of the construction of any conduits made since June 18, 1896."

Mr. FAULKNER. That strikes out the latter part of the amendment.

Mr. HILL. It strikes out the latter part?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. It strikes out all after the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-six."

Mr. HILL. All right.

Mr. FAULKNER. I think the Senator will find that is a better method of expression.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. VEST. Let it be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 12, page 81, it is proposed to insert:

Until Congress shall provide for a conduit system, it shall be unlawful to lay conduits or erect overhead wires for electric-lighting purposes in any road, street, avenue, highway, park, or reservation, except as hereafter specifically authorized by law: Provided, however, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to issue permits for house connections with conduits and overhead wires now existing adjacent to the premises with which such connection is to be made, and also permits for public-lighting connections with conduits already in the portion of the street proposed to be lighted; and nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect in any way any pending litigation involving the validity or invalidity or legality of the construction of any conduits made since June 18, 1896.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I feel, as the Senator from New York expressed himself, indisposed to discuss a question of this kind on this day, and yet I can not let the matter pass without making a few observations regarding it.

This is establishing two electric-light companies in the city of Washington. If that is to be the policy of the Congress, I do not know that I have any right to find fault, but I want to call attention to a remarkable fact, and that is the change of front on the part of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in reference to the matter of competing electric-light companies in this great city.

On the 8th day of February, 1896, when a bill was under consideration by the Committee on the District of Columbia for the purpose of chartering a new gas company, the Commissioners of the District, the same gentlemen who are now in that high office, addressed a communication to the committee, a portion of which I desire to read. They protested against the incorporation of a second gaslight company in the District, and they gave their reasons for it as follows:

The Commissioners, however, in reporting upon all similar bills proposing to grant the privilege of tearing up the streets for the purpose of laying gas pipes or conduits therein, whether for the use of a telephone company or an electric-light company, have taken the ground that it was against the public interest to grant privileges of this kind to new companies; that the business carried on by such companies was under such conditions as to make a monopoly desirable, if not necessary. That, aside from the great damage to the pavements and the inconvenience to the public occasioned by digging up miles of public streets, it is not necessary or wise to duplicate any gas pipes or conduits in the public streets, for Congress has full power to regulate the rates to be charged by such companies, as well as to correct any other evils. The same majority in Congress which determines that a new telephone company, a new gas company, or a new electric-light company must be chartered to give the public its rights, can bring about the same result by controlling existing companies and with much less inconvenience to the public. Indeed, whether a new company be chartered or not, the public must be permanently protected, if at all, through the limitations provided by Congress, rather than by competition, except under conditions hereinafter mentioned.

That was the opinion of the District Commissioners, the same gentlemen who occupy those positions to-day, on February 8, 1896, a little over one year ago. Acting upon their advice, the District Committee reported against chartering a new gas company, and the Senate ratified their decision in that regard. It seems to me very remarkable that in so short a period of time these honorable gentlemen should have so completely changed front and that they should now be using their great powers as Commissioners of the District to install in the city of Washington a competing electric-light company.

On a former occasion I ventured to suggest in very plain language some of the reasons why I believed that this thing was done. I do not propose to-day to repeat them. Perhaps at some other time, when the Senator from New York discusses this question further, I may have occasion to go into it a little more at length.

A few months ago, however, I will suggest, indeed not many weeks ago, when the Senator from New York was filibustering here against the passage of the joint resolution that was proposed for the purpose of calling a halt to this invasion of the streets by this company, a somewhat similar matter was before the District Commissioners, and I want to read what the District Commissioners said about it. That related to the market company in this District, and they were interviewed concerning an order that they had issued or were about to issue, and they were asked:

But you have issued an order to remove them, have you not?—

That was the farmers and truckmen and truckwomen who are about the market—

We have.
Has it been revoked?
It has not.
Do you propose to revoke it?
There is no necessity for revoking it. We do not intend to disturb them, because it seems to be the intention of the two District committees to legislate upon the subject.

When Mr. Commissioner Truesdell made that answer to a query that was propounded to him concerning matters relating to the market company we had before Congress a resolution on this very subject, and yet, while they held up the order concerning the market company, they hastened to give permits to the new electric-light company to invade our streets and to carry their conduits for miles before they came to a lamp-post which they were going to furnish with light. It is a very extraordinary condition of things.

I want to say here now that the president of the Potomac Electric Light Company last year, when he was seeking legislation of Congress, came to me personally, and time after time said to me that he had no desire to put his conduits east of Rock Creek; that he simply desired to have them in the territory west of Rock Creek. I venture to say that the Committee on Appropriations understood him to make the same statement, and that the legislation of the last Congress looked to permitting that company simply to put their conduits on the other side of Rock Creek, and not to invade this territory.

And yet after that legislation was enacted the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in my judgment without authority—and I challenge any authority they may think they possess on the subject—hastened to permit this company to tear up our streets, and to carry their conduits 8 or 9 miles over the streets of this city, and even last night, in the darkness, a further conduit was laid in a certain street in the city of Washington.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from New Hampshire be kind enough to state whether that question was not passed upon by the courts here, both by Mr. Justice Cole and then by the appellate court?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the question is pending before the court at the present time.

Mr. VEST. I will ask the Senator if the decisions have not been published, and have not become a part of the judicial history of the country?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think Mr. Justice Cole did deny the application for an injunction.

Mr. VEST. Was that not afterwards affirmed by the court of appeals?

Mr. CHANDLER. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not so understand it.

Mr. CHANDLER. By no means.

Mr. GALLINGER. By no means.

Mr. CHANDLER. The case has not yet been heard before the court of appeals.

Mr. VEST. The decision has been made, as I understand it, and I think I can produce the record.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is wrong.

Mr. GALLINGER. The decision was upon an interlocutory question, and the main question is now before the courts.

Mr. CHANDLER. My colleague will allow me to say that the application was for an injunction pendente lite, which was refused.

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now the litigation goes on.

Mr. GALLINGER. I feel a hesitancy about going into this question at length, and I shall not do so. What I shall say, I say in the utmost kindness; but it is a remarkable circumstance that certain things have taken place in the District on the question of electric lighting that are matters of history and record. I venture to say that there has been discrimination practiced during the last six months, or thereabouts, as between these two electric-light companies, that will not bear very close investigation.

By the act of June 11, 1896, making appropriations for the District of Columbia, the Potomac Company was authorized to lay conduits west of Rock Creek, and there is a provision in that same law giving the right to the United States Electric Light Company to build conduits to Washington Heights and Columbia Heights and Mount Pleasant. Let us see how these two companies have been treated. Permits were issued by the Commissioners to the Potomac Company immediately after the date of the act for the building of the conduits in the territory west of Georgetown, and notwithstanding an application had been before the Commissioners for the extension of the conduits of the United States Electric Lighting Company to Washington Heights and Columbia Heights since November, 1895; notwithstanding that an application was made under the act of June 11, 1896, within a week following that act, that permits to build to Columbia Heights should be issued, no answer was made to that application until the 2d day of December, 1896, or, in other words, a few days before the assembling of Congress.

I want to make another statement. The Commissioners made inquiry of the United States Electric Company in July last if they would furnish twenty-four lights on H street, along which conduits were built. The company immediately replied that they could, naming a price. Nothing further was heard of the matter until about one month ago. It took the Commissioners five months to determine whether or not the proposition that they themselves had made to the electric-light company should be carried out, when the company responded that they were ready to furnish those lights; but it took them only one night to determine that permits should be issued to this new company, which was in territory on this side of Rock Creek, in my judgment, if not in violation of the law, at least in violation of the solemn statement that their officers made to Congress and to individual members of Congress, and they have been permitted to ride roughshod over Congress and over the act passed last year and over the judgment of the men who acted upon this proposition when it was before the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say to-day. I know it is foreordained that the amendment offered by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia is to go into the bill. I understand substantially an agreement has been reached in that direction, and for that reason it would be futile for me to undertake to oppose it if I felt disposed to discuss the question at greater length. I shall content myself so far as the present is concerned in voting against the amendment the Senator from Michigan has offered to the bill at the present time, and as I before said, when this matter comes up in the future, as I presume it will, and when we shall have an opportunity on some other day than the seventh day of the week to discuss this entire question, I shall be pleased to join issue with my distinguished friend the Senator from New York, and I shall undertake to make it appear to the satisfaction of the Senate that this company which is now to receive from the Congress of the United States in the pending bill, if the amendment is adopted, the same rights and privileges that are accorded to the United States Electric Company, does not deserve the confidence of, or a single dollar of appropriation from, the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HILL. I regret that my distinguished friend the Senator from New Hampshire should attempt to filibuster against the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not filibustering, and the Senator knows it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, he protests too much. He already announces that it is foreordained. That is good Presbyterian doctrine, I suppose.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. HILL. It is foreordained that it is to be adopted. Now, it never had been foreordained that the joint resolution offered by the District of Columbia Committee was to be passed when it was introduced, and it was because I had some doubt about its propriety as well as on the question whether it ever would be adopted that I indulged in a few observations, as my friend the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] always says, in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator form New York permit me.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New York knows very well that the joint resolution would have been adopted by a four-fifths vote of the Senate had he not filibustered against it day after day and talked it to death. The Senator knows that.

Mr. HILL. There were three days of debate on the joint resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator occupied all that time.

Mr. HILL. I opened the debate on the first day, and I was replied to by the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] on the next day, and the very next day I tried to get my friend the Senator from New Hampshire into the debate, but he now says that he was secure of having four-fifths of the Senate in his pocket ready to deliver them in favor of that bill without any argument.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no.

Mr. HILL. Now, I rather doubt that statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will not——

Mr. HILL. Wait a moment.

Mr. GALLINGER. With the Senator's permission——

Mr. HILL. The Senator should ask my permission before he proceeds.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no intention of disturbing the Senator from New York except through his courtesy.

Mr. HILL. It is no disturbance whatever. We are prohibited by the McMillan bill from having any disturbance on this day.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator could not get up a disturbance with me if he tried.

Mr. HILL. I shall not try.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator knows that he will not deceive the Senate——

Mr. HILL. I am not trying to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Cunning as he is and adroit as he is as a lawyer and debater, the Senator will not deceive the Senate into the notion that he had not so announced his purpose, and that it was not his purpose to talk the joint resolution to death. He had the ability to do it. There was time enough, and he could occupy all the time, and he did occupy all the time, until the friends of the resolution saw it was hopeless to press it any further.

Mr. HILL. The joint resolution did not need much investigation; it did not need much talk. It was so thin, so transparent, so shadowy, that it simply required an inspection of it to see that it ought not to pass. There never was a time in the Senate when it could have received even a majority, much less four-fifths of the Senate. If the Senator thought it could pass, why was it not continued in discussion instead of attempting to put it on an appropriation bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not attempted to put it on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HILL. Having been charged with the heinous crime of filibustering, of which, of course, in the Senate I would never be guilty, I simply rose for the purpose of repelling the suggestion, and to say that instead of feeling bad over the adoption of the amendment, the Senator from New Hampshire, in behalf of the people of the District of Columbia, ought to rise here and congratulate them that at last they are to be relieved from the odious monopoly that has existed for so many years, and that we are from this time forward, as he says, for which he seems to have great regret, to have honest, fair, and just competition.

Now, it is not for me to defend the action of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I am familiar with some of their actions. The Commissioners have to adapt themselves to the legislation of Congress so far as they can, and when the sentiment of Congress seemed to be in favor of an opposition gas company they were rather inclined to favor it. When it changed, they went the other way. I could, if I were not reluctant to enter into a debate on this day, take up the record and show that my friend the Senator from New Hampshire changed his opinion upon this question of a competitive light company, and his conversion was quicker than that of Saul of Tarsus. Will the Senator deny that he was at one time the champion of a new and additional company in this city?

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator desire an answer?

Mr. HILL. On some other day, not to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. HILL. Some other day when we take up this discussion, and when my friend recovers from his disappointment, we will discuss it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not disappointed. I am afraid the Senator will not be here at that other day.

Mr. HILL. I will be here for three or four days, and I hope my friend will not put off the reply to me until, by reason of circumstances beyond my control, I shall not be here. I have no doubt my friend is very glad to be relieved of my presence after the 4th day of March.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, no; we all enjoy the Senator from New York. He is amusing.

Mr. HILL. The Senator does not act as though he enjoyed my presence.

Mr. GALLINGER. He is amusing.

Mr. HILL. In fact, he seems to be disturbed about it.

Mr. President, I rose not to debate the question, but to say that I am sorry my friend sees fit, almost solitary and alone, to oppose the amendment. I do not like some of its terms. It is not the terms that enlarge competition in the District of Columbia that I do not like. It is the terms that restrict competition, the terms that will prevent what I think the people of the District of Columbia have long wanted; and I congratulate them, and I congratulate the Senate, that from this time forward we are to have what he says—two electric-light companies competent to do business in any part of the District of Columbia; and, instead of being a calamity and a misfortune, it will prove to be a benefit to the people of the District.

Mr. GALLINGER. A single word, and I will be ready for a vote. The condolences of the Senator from New York are accepted and appreciated. I regret personally that the Senator from New York, because of circumstances beyond his control, will not be here after the 4th day of March to discuss this question when we can debate it at length. I simply desire to add a word in answer to the felicitations of the Senator from New York to the people of the District that at length they are to have competition in the matter of electric lighting. It is a matter of a great deal of doubt in my mind whether that competition will last very long, inasmuch as this new electric-light company, which, in my judgment, is given privileges that it ought not to be given by Congress, has already made a proposition or propositions to dispose of its rights and its property to the United States Electric Light Company, which, beyond doubt, in the near future will be an accomplished fact. The efforts of the Senator from New York will simply have resulted in putting a little more money into the pockets of some gentlemen who have come here and by a great deal of cunning and artfulness have found a lodgment in the District under the name and title of the Potomac Electric Light Company.

Mr. HILL. The people are to be congratulated that it will take less money out of the pockets of the taxpayers of the city for electric-light service than heretofore.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I can not forbear to express my great astonishment that a gentleman of so much experience in legislation and in the general business matters of the world should tell us that two electric-light companies will continue in competition, digging up the streets. It never was known and it never will be. It is perfectly well understood, an irrevocable economic law, that wherever combination is possible, competition is impossible. That was discovered long years ago in the building of railroads. These companies will not be organized one fortnight without a distinct understanding, if not a consolidation. Every experienced man, I appeal to the world, knows that to be true. What utter nonsense to suppose that our streets will be terraced and dug and trenched here continually in a race between two electric companies. It would be supreme folly on their part, a folly not surpassed except by our folly in permitting it.

Mr. HILL. That argument has been used time and time again to justify every monopoly that has been created. Since this new company has started there has been a material reduction not only in the price charged to the city but in the price that will be charged for services to citizens. It is evident now, from the very reductions contained in the pending bill, that there is to be a material reduction in price. My friend says that possibly the companies may combine. There is no way to prevent that. The natural effect of giving two companies equal privileges in a district is to reduce the price. They may combine hereafter. They may circumvent the people. It may be imagined that they will do lots of things in the future, but the general effect of having two companies having no interest with each other is to compete for service. These companies can do it, and I trust they will do it and continue to do it for the benefit of the people of the District.

Mr. HAWLEY. Just a word, Mr. President, and I will not detain the Senate further. For an illustrious example of what I was saying, I point the Senator to the West Shore Railroad in New York in competition with the great New York Central. The West Shore went into the world with high promises and with defiances, expecting to do a rival business. In a very short time it was absorbed by the New York Central; and that is the general rule. The Erie Railroad and the Central can compete with the great Pennsylvania Railroad without any danger of a consolidation because of the very different circumstances, the wide distance apart, but put them in the same county, or within 10 miles of each other, and they would not be apart a week.

Mr. HILL. The circumstance to which the Senator alludes is a fatal one to his argument. Before the consolidation rates were reduced; even after the virtual consolidation rates were reduced; they never were less than they are to-day. The general effect of competing lines is reduced rates. There may be afterwards a combination or an understanding between them.

Mr. President, it will not do to say that there must be but one railroad company through a State. It will not do to say that there must be but one electric-light company in a city, but one gas company in a city, or any other corporation that has a monopoly. I know it can be said that Congress can fix the price, but how reluctant Congress is to fix the price in case there is but one company. The price will never be any larger in the District of Columbia than it is to-day. It has been steadily reduced during the last few years. I have the record and papers here that will show it. It never undoubtedly will be raised higher than it is to-day, and I believe that the price will steadily go down.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Consolidated Railroad, a very considerable corporation in New England, without any solicitation or legislation, reduced its passenger rates to 2 cents a mile. It has no competition. Competition is practically impossible on that road. The law of progress leads to reduction.

Mr. HILL. The New York Central Railroad has competition with two other railroads that run from New York to Buffalo and from there to the West. There is competition with this railroad. Competition is desirable. The same argument the Senator makes would vindicate and defend every trust made in the land against which we have protested in party platforms and against which we have protested in petitions and in speeches here in this Congress.

Mr. President, competition is desirable. There may not always be competition, or honest competition. Corporations may combine; that is all true; that is unavoidable in a free country like this; but after all it is for the benefit of the people that equal privileges should be afforded to corporations having facilities to transact the business of this country, such as electric lighting, gas companies, and so on. I trust the time will come when the people of the District of Columbia will realize the full benefit which they ought to realize and which I believe they will realize from the very step appropriately this day taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. A single word further, Mr. President, and I have done. It is a matter of history that the United States Electric Light Company seven different times made voluntary reductions in price, and it is a matter of history that there is not on record one single petition or alleged grievance against that company by any citizen of this great District.

Mr. HOAR. Are not their rates controlled by statute?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly. But as against the gas company there were protests; there was a loud clamor. The Senator from New York can not find on record a single complaint that was ever lodged against the United States Electric Light Company either as regards its service or the price that was charged for the product.

Mr. HILL. Does the Senator forget that I, a short time ago, presented a petition of a thousand citizens of this District?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; in favor of the Potomac Electric Light Company.

Mr. HILL. In favor of the Potomac Company, which desired a contract. Here are 82,000 people on the other side of this Capitol who are substantially without electric lights. I had a conversation with the owner of a block right within a stone's throw of the Capitol, while this question was pending, asking that we would permit this company to place conduits so that they could be supplied. There was a demand by the people of the District of Columbia to have it, and I trust they will get it under the provision.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the Senator will get permission before he makes a speech at my cost.

Mr. HILL. I trust I am not costing the Senator anything.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be true. Yet it is a fact that conduits have been permitted to be laid by this new company within a few weeks for more than a mile, for more than 2 miles, from the city of Washington, and reached a point that the old company could have reached by extending its conduits 20 rods. Yet the Commissioners gave a permit to this new company as against the old company, and streets have been torn up in that way. We are situated a little differently here from some other localities in the country. Congress has absolute power to regulate the price that shall be paid for electric lights and for gas and for every other service that is rendered to the people of this District. When the Senator from New York says that this company has reduced the price of electric lights, I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that, while this company has made a proposition to furnish lights cheaper than the old company did, the District Commissioners have permitted this company to put in their lamp-posts so near together that it costs more to the city to light a street by the new company than by the old company.

Mr. VEST. I will ask another question, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure.

Mr. VEST. I am as anxious to get a vote as anybody, but since the matter has been gone into I should like to ask a question. It has been asserted here by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that there will be no reduction of the cost of electric lighting in this city, and it is not proposed to reduce it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I never asserted that.

Mr. VEST. At any rate, the tendency of the argument is that there will be no reduction.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the tendency of it is that there will be a reduction, because Congress can absolutely control it.

Mr. VEST. Very good. Now here is a provision submitted by this Potomac Company to insert in the District appropriation bill as section 3 that hereafter no electric-light company in this city shall charge more than 75 per cent of the price now charged for electric light. Now, we are bound to assume that this company, if it comes with such a proposition to Congress, will be bound by it in the future. There is a reduction of 25 per cent at once.

Mr. GALLINGER. Which Congress could have brought about if they had prohibited the tearing up of our streets for 9 or 10 miles and put just that provision in the appropriation bill controlling the old company.

Mr. VEST. The streets are in the same condition they were; and here is a proposition submitted by the House of Representatives which must be passed on by the Senate. I am curious to know why we do not incorporate in the present amendment the third section of the House bill. My friend from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] says it comes in the District bill. If it does, I hope the Senate will prove that it wants to reduce the price of these electric lights by accepting that third section, which would bring down the price to the people of the District who are consumers 25 per cent.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the Senator permit me to say a word?

Mr. GALLINGER. With pleasure. I am always glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have listened to this controversy for some time. I am one of those men who, when I am in a fight, am ready to fight when there is anything to fight about; but there has been a sort of understanding here that this amendment would be agreed to, therefore there is no contest over it; and there being no contest, I do not want to fight when there is nothing to fight about. I do hope we may be allowed to come to a vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from West Virginia is speaking in my right, and hence I feel at liberty to ask him who made this agreement?

Mr. FAULKNER. I was asked to look upon, to examine it; I said I would make no objection; and half a dozen other gentlemen said they were satisfied with it and thought it had better be made; and as that seemed to be a general understanding, there is no use to take up the time of the Senate on this question, but let us come to a vote and discuss this whole question on the District bill upon a secular day, as the Senator from New York says.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I should like to say a word. This amendment was offered by me, and I have tried to harmonize all the different interests here. The Senator from New Hampshire was not consulted, but I did not suppose he would object to it. Conduits of two companies are now laid in the streets. They are there, and the amendment simply recognizes the fact that they are there and allows connections to be made with them. No extensions are allowed until Congress shall take action. This amendment was offered on my own responsibility. It has not the sanction of the District Committee as a committee. There is now no authority lodged with the Commissioners to allow house connections with the overhead or underground wires of the United States Electric Lighting Company, or with the conduits of the Potomac Electric Power Company. Such authority is proposed in the interests of the people of the District. If the conduits of the Potomac Company shall be declared illegal by the courts, this proposed legislation will have no effect on the legal status of the question. I would say also that the amendment just offered has been prepared without consultation with anyone aside from members of the Senate. Representatives of neither of the electric-light companies have seen the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say for myself that I did not expect to be consulted, and I do not care whether I was consulted or not. My impression is that one of these electric-light companies was consulted and the other was not. That is my impression. But however that may be, I do not assent to the proposition that when Congress has absolute power over every corporation in this District, when Congress is legislating for this great city, we ought to permit rival companies to come in here and tear up our streets on the ground of economy, or on the ground of furnishing any product cheaper than one company would furnish it. If the argument is worth anything in favor of the Potomac Electric-Light Company, it would be equally as potent if another company came in, or another, or another; if ten more should come in, the same argument could be used. If a third company should come here and say we will furnish light a little cheaper than the Potomac Light Company, perhaps then the Commissioners of the District would rush to the rescue of that company as they did to the rescue of the Potomac Electric Light Company, and let them go to work and tear up the streets to install another electric-light company in the District of Columbia. I do not assent to that argument. Congress has absolute control over every corporation chartered by Congress, and Congress can determine absolutely and irrevocably the price that will be paid for electric lights or gas lights or any other service that any corporation supplies to the people of this District under the charter rights that they receive from Congress.

Now, Mr. President, this is all I care to say. I presume I stand substantially alone on this proposition, but there will be the same comfort to me in voting against this amendment that there will be for the distinguished Senator from Michigan and the Senator from New York and the Senator from West Virginia in voting for it. They were consulted; I was not. I did not expect to be consulted, but I simply wanted to enter my protest against this kind of legislation that gives to a company that came in here under the circumstances that this company did, and that has left our streets in the condition they are to-day, the same rights that the company has that has been doing service to these people for a great many years, the stock of which is held by the plain people of this District, and whose rights ought to be protected by the Congress of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 7, after line 10, to insert:

That the sum of $325,000 is hereby appropriated to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, for and in the name of the United States, the real estate, with the improvements thereon, known and designated as original lots numbered 5, 6, 7, and 8, in square 167, in the city of Washington, D. C., containing 17,733 square feet, more or less, fronting on Pennsylvania avenue and on Seventeenth street, being the property of the Corcoran Gallery of Art. Said Secretary is directed to acquire said property by purchase from the owners at said sum for use by the Court of Claims, the title to be approved by the Attorney-General.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I shall make no apology for calling the attention of the Senate to this appropriation. I understand that it came from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I am a member; but it never was adopted in any meeting of that committee, and if assented to by a majority of the committee it was under the reprehensible practice of polling members upon the floor, a practice which ought to cease, in my opinion, at once.

Now, it is proposed here to take $325,000 out of the public Treasury to buy the old Corcoran Art Gallery building. I hope it is hardly necessary for me to say that I am in entire sympathy with the objects of that institution, and that no man reveres more the memory of Mr. Corcoran than myself; but it is a very distinct proposition as to the nature of the building and the appropriation of this large amount of money in the present condition of the Treasury.

It is stated in the amendment that this money is to be appropriated to the purchase of this building, in order to erect upon it a building for the Court of Claims. The United States to-day owns the most beautiful lot in this city, unoccupied, upon one end of which is the Attorney-General's Office, next to the new opera house, in front of Lafayette Park. We purchased that property some years ago from the Freedman's Bank for $250,000. It is immediately contiguous to the Treasury Department, to the Attorney-General's Office, and the State, War, and Navy Departments. Why should we take $325,000 and buy another lot upon the same street when we have this unoccupied ground, far superior in every regard to the site of the present or the old Corcoran Art Gallery?

Have Senators examined into this question? Do they know that it is proposed to sell us this ground for about $21 a foot? The old building that is there to-day is absolutely unfit for a court edifice. It has a mansard roof—an old fire trap that must be got rid of at once. The whole building must be remodeled. It was built specifically for an art gallery. There is not a room in it that can be adapted to the purposes of the transaction of the business of a court. Twenty-one dollars a foot for that property! I undertake to say that we can buy property in the vicinity of the new Corcoran art building for $1.50 a foot, certainly for $1.75, for it has been offered to the Government at that, and it will be just as good a site either for a hall of records or the Court of Claims as the site of the old Corcoran Art Gallery. I repeat, why should we purchase it, when we have this splendid lot more contiguous to the Departments and to the center of business in the city, the finest lot now that belongs to the Government, and peculiarly adapted for a building to be occupied by the Court of Claims?

I have looked into the records of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and amongst my own papers to see if I could not produce to the Senate the written or printed proof that this building was offered to the Government for $275,000 within less than a year. I quote from my memory, as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, when we heard the trustees of this institution, gentlemen of eminent character, for whom I have great respect and who are my personal friends. It is my recollection that they asked us $275,000; I am certain it was not exceeding $300,000; and now it is proposed to unload that ground, which is no longer needed by this splendid institution, the Corcoran Art Gallery, upon the Government of the United States. If we are to practice any sort of economy, most unquestionably here is an opportunity to do it. It is too much the fashion in this District, whenever a piece of property can not be turned over to anybody else, to put it upon the people of the United States and upon their Treasury.

We have to-day hundreds and thousands of feet of unoccupied ground. I have advocated for the last eighteen years, since I have been a member of the Senate, the purchase of eligible sites for public buildings before the property largely advanced in value. I am glad to say that in one or two instances I have succeeded, and in none more conspicuously than in having an humble part in purchasing from the Freedman's Bureau the piece of property upon which the Attorney-General's Office is now located.

We have been lectured somewhat to-day in regard to the jurisdiction of the committees of this body. The question has lately been before us in regard to the sphere of action of the Committee on Commerce and that upon Appropriations. This very proposition has been pending before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for two years and a half. We are now examining into it, and have been looking at eligible sites, particularly for a hall of records and the Court of Claims. Why is it now taken away from our committee and put in this appropriation bill by a committee that certainly could not have examined into all the details? We have had hearings from these trustees. I have gone in person and looked at different pieces of ground that were offered to us for a hall of records and the Court of Claims; and all at once I am confronted, without notice, with this appropriation, which forestalls any action that could be taken by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and is to take out of the Treasury $325,000.

Mr. President, even upon the Sabbath day I make no apology for bringing these facts to the attention of the Senate. I sympathize somewhat with the lacerated conscience and the tender, religious sensibilities of the Senator from New York and the Senator from New Hampshire; but I console myself that I am not responsible, if it be a desecration, for the business in which we are now engaged. If I had consumed the time of the Senate upon secular days with long orations upon impertinent issues that were not before the Senate, I should feel that I had been false to my Presbyterian education; but as I have not been, I take it for granted that what we are doing now is covered by those words of the Holy Text, that works of necessity are justified, even upon the holy Sabbath. And more than that, I happen to have seen in this bill, on page 126, a religious appropriation. The Senator from New York overlooked it. We appropriate in the bill $2,000 for the Red Cross Society, which is soon to meet in international conference at Vienna, in Austria. If this bill should fail, that appropriation for a work of holy charity would be defeated. More than that, I am informed by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], and it may be a matter of consolation to the Senator from New York, that he proposes to signalize this day by calling upon the Senate to pass the Little bill, which prohibits the use—not the sale, but the use and the giving away—of intoxicating liquors within the Capitol or upon the public grounds. If we can pass that measure, I hope that it will heal any religious wounds that are inflicted by the work in which we are now engaged.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri remarked something about the report of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I had the honor of being a member of that committee, and was a member of the subcommittee in connection with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MANTLE]. We reported the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. They in turn adopted the report we made and recommended the purchase of this ground. In compliance with the request of the chairman of that committee, I polled the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the absence of the Senator from Missouri. The Senator at the time was in the West.

A word as regards the value of this property. I made some investigation as to its value and also as to the kind of property. I think the Senator from Montana and myself went through the building from top to bottom. It is one of the best constructed buildings in the city of Washington. It is perfectly fireproof, with the exception of the roof. I admit what the Senator from Missouri says, that it needs a new roof or some addition certainly to make it more fireproof, but when it is perfected and completed, which can be done with a small amount of money, the building will be as well adapted for the purposes proposed as any building in the city. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

In reply to the statement of the Senator from Missouri, that he thought this building had been offered to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for a less sum, I will state that I have been on that committee for a number of years, and the property has never been offered to the committee for less than $350,000, not $275,000.

Mr. ALLISON. There were two things which pressed themselves upon the Committee on Appropriations as to this purchase. The first was that the Attorney-General came to us, not once, but more than once, insisting that we must immediately provide somewhere for a building for the Court of Claims; that the situation of the business in the office of the Attorney-General was such as to require the rooms now occupied by the Court of Claims, and he expressed himself as absolutely impartial in respect to this recommendation because he soon expected to retire from office. We inquired of him what amount should be appropriated for the rental of a suitable building, and he said, after he had made considerable inquiry upon the subject, that a suitable building could not be rented for less than $10,000 per annum.

Then there came from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds this amendment proposing $350,000 for the purchase of a building from the trustees and guardians of the Corcoran Art Gallery, which is the result of the beneficence of the late Mr. Corcoran, of this city, who had given a very large sum of money for its maintenance and support, in addition to giving to it the building and grounds which we are about to purchase.

The Corcoran Art Gallery is as much dedicated and devoted to the educational interests of the people of the United States as is the Congressional Library, upon which we have expended $6,000,000; it is more open to the public, and has been all the time. Three days in the week the people who come here can get into that gallery free, and at other times at a very small expense. The trustees of that institution have erected a new structure which has cost over $700,000, without including the cost of the ground upon which it is erected. In that building is a large space for those who wish to engage in the study of art, and it is all free to them.

Now, I submit that, although the Committee on Appropriations reduced the purchase price of this building to $325,000, it is hardly worth while for us to say that we are paying $5,000 or $10,000 too much, even if we are. This building is adapted to the use of the Court of Claims, and it may be used by some other bureaus or offices of this Government. It is located on a valuable piece of land, well situated, in close proximity to three or four of the great Departments of this Government. It is land that we must have and will have in the near future.

The illustration made by the Senator from Missouri as to the part he took in the purchase of the old Freedman's Bank building is an illustration of what I say. I was a member of the Senate when we had a very similar debate as to the purchase of that building, when the arguments of the Senator from Missouri were wholly upon the other side. That building belonged to the creditors of the Freedman's Bureau, to the people who had deposited their small savings in the Freedman's Bank. It was said on this floor over and over again that the $250,000 we paid for that building was an extravagant price and far beyond its value, and yet property in that vicinity has so appreciated that the Government could realize from it, if it would sell it, more than twice the sum paid.

I argued here five years ago for the purchase of a piece of property adjacent to the building now occupied by the Attorney-General's Office, when it could have been bought for $90,000, and I was met with the same argument that is now made by the Senator from Missouri, that that was an exorbitant price; that it was favoritism to some people who lived in this District, who were obliged to sell it. That property, within six months of the time of that argument here for its purchase, was sold to a private person for $125,000, who is receiving now an annual rental from the building of $6,000, and yet it was an essential part of the public property we own on the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Lafayette square.

So, Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations, believing that it was a wise thing at this time for us to acquire this property—not only for the benefit of the Government, but as in some way relieving a great institution of art in our city from the embarrassments under which it labors, because of the enormous expenditure it has recently made in the construction of a new building—favored this amendment. That is all there is about it.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa, of course, did not mean to suppress the fact that the principal objection to the purchase of the ground upon which the Lafayette Opera House is now located, immediately contiguous to the Attorney-General's Office, was a defect in the title. That was the argument made, and no lawyer in this Senate was able to answer it. It might have been that there was not a great deal in that defect, but it existed, and it was not thought by a large portion of us, as trustees for the Government, that we ought to put the money of the people of the United States in any title that had any defect at all.

But I will state to the Senator that I myself introduced in the Senate years before that a bill to purchase that same property when it was offered to us at $65,000, and before Mr. Blaine purchased it, but I could not get the Senate to pass that bill. It has been sold since for $100,000, and the defect in the title still remains, but is considered of very little importance by the present owners.

My friend from Iowa attempts to draw an analogy between this case and the purchase from the Freedman's Bank of the property upon which the Attorney-General's Office is located. The cases are entirely different. In the first place, there is no such property in the city of Washington, at least upon that street, in point of beauty, in point of location, in point of contiguity to the center of business of the town and the large Departments as the lot upon which is located the Attorney-General's Office. It is infinitely superior to the lot upon which the Corcoran Art Gallery building is located.

When the Senator speaks of the object of the Corcoran Art Gallery, he can not say anything in that behalf that I would consider exaggerated. As I said in the beginning of my few remarks, nobody can possibly have a greater regard for the memory of Mr. Corcoran and for the munificence and bounty which he exhibited in that and other acts of his life than I have. I was his personal friend; I loved him; and there was no more sincere mourner at his tomb than myself.

But, Mr. President, the Corcoran Art Gallery is one of the most munificently endowed institutions in the United States. Mr. Corcoran was not only a man of large heart and brain, but of large means, and every institution that he endowed was munificently endowed against the possibility, almost, of pecuniary liability or disaster in the future. No appeal can be made to the Senate to buy that property because the Corcoran Art Gallery is indigent. They have just put up for seven or eight hundred thousand dollars a beautiful edifice, and did it with money that has accumulated from year to year in their hands upon the amount which Mr. Corcoran originally gave for that purpose.

How was it in regard to the Freedman's Bank Building? Mr. Bruce was then a Senator from Mississippi, a colored man, and the only one in the Senate—a gentleman, an honor to his race, a man who I am proud to call my friend. I was associated with him, our committee rooms were contiguous, and I know him well. He appealed to me and to other Southern Senators to take the assets of the old Freedman's Bank, all that were left to that poor, oppressed colored race, whom I know as well as any man living, and pay them $250,000, all that the poor, ignorant depositors would ever get. Why, Mr. President, who could have resisted that appeal. I would have paid, I confess, more than the property was worth under the circumstances that surrounded that case, but it was the best purchase that this Government ever made.

I do not claim credit for myself, because I followed the venerable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and my conduct in the matter—for I was then comparatively a young Senator—was simply as his adjutant-general, proud to fight under such a leader in such a cause.

I would not say one word in this Senate against this proposed appropriation if it could be tortured into opposition to the object of Mr. Corcoran's bounty or into a reflection upon his memory; but we are here confronted with the proposition to pay $21 a foot for that property when it is not worth it.

Mr. ALLISON. Eighteen dollars a foot.

Mr. VEST. I have talked to real estate dealers and owners of property in the vicinity, and they estimate it at about $21. The improvements I count for nothing.

Only the Senator says that that building can be made into a court building. I beg, with great respect, to differ from him. It never was intended for a court building. The upper portion of it is an old fire trap with a mansard roof, condemned in architecture and condemned by the insurance companies. Take the roof off, and then you have got the walls, and even if they were thick enough, you would have to remodel the whole of the interior. Who that has had any experience in building does not know that the expense of pulling down an old structure like that and remodeling it is the worst sort of economy. And if we are to put up a building for the Court of Claims, it should be worthy of the Court of Claims and worthy of the Government of the United States. That house will never do for any such purpose.

But I appeal to the Senate not to make this appropriation, because I state, as a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that we are in anxious consideration and consultation upon this very question. We are to provide sites immediately for two buildings. We have passed four times in the Senate a bill to purchase a site for a hall of records, absolutely needed by every Department of the Government, and it is criminal negligence to put it off any longer. Every head of Department has reported that there must be such a hall. In the Quartermaster-General's Department there has been a fire twice, imperiling the records of this Government, which are invaluable; yet we have been unable, for some reason or other, in fifteen years to meet this exigent demand from the heads of the great Departments of the Government. I have reported that bill four times from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds unanimously, and it has unanimously passed the Senate four times, and yet we have not been able—it is not our fault, but the fault of the coordinate branch of Congress—to agree upon a site. We must have a site for a hall of records. That is a pressing demand upon us. The Court of Claims can wait a little while, but I grant that there should be a proper edifice for that court.

This property is too high. I have been told by property owners in the vicinity, who would certainly be interested in the Government making the purchase, that they were willing to sell their property, just as good, for a great deal less—I am afraid now to name the amount, because I might do injustice, but my impression is for $16 or $17 a foot.

I ask the Senate to let our committee dispose of this matter. We have not been derelict in our duty. We have endeavored, under all sorts of obstacles, to meet this demand for great public buildings in Washington, and it is not our fault if our bills have not been passed.

I will tell the Senator from Iowa—and I think he will recognize the truth of it—that the trouble with obtaining room for the Government of the United States in these Departments lies in the administration of the Departments. As soon as we put up a building, every head of a bureau wants eight or ten rooms for his bureau and two or three for himself. They are not satisfied to put four or five clerks, as should be the case, in a single room, and they never are put there until by the increase of business the space becomes so contracted that they are obliged to do it. If you put up any building, like the new post-office building, then every head of a bureau wants to take a floor; the head of the Department accedes to it; and you will find in that building, when it is finished, one man occupying a room, and, at the most, two men. The result is that we are constantly in need of room; and, if we were to continue to buy almost ad infinitum under the different administrations of the Departments, you would find the same trouble.

All I ask is that you give our committee time to consider this matter, and for one, as a member of that committee, I pledge to the Senate my word that we shall dispose of the subject at the earliest day possible in consonance with the best interests of the country.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if he will designate any building which is occupied by Government officials which has not more than one man in a room?

Mr. VEST. I do not know that I can, because they are all old buildings, except the new post-office, and now they are clamoring to put different bureaus of the Government into that building; and it has been suggested lately that the General Post-Office Department be moved into it.

I had something to do with the purchase of the ground on which the new post-office building stands and with the drafting of that bill. It never was contemplated to put the General Post-Office there. Our idea was to put the city post-office there, and possibly the Court of Claims or some bureaus of the Government, if there turned out to be sufficient room. But now the city post-office is demanding one-third more room than was contemplated at the time we commenced the construction of the building.

What I said in regard to the officers of the Departments is simply that when we erect a new building the rooms are not so distributed with reference to the business of the Department as they should be, and the result is that there is constantly a clamor for more room.

Mr. TELLER. It is notorious that the Post-Office Department has been for many years very badly housed and very badly crowded. It has been obliged to hire buildings outside at a great deal of expense. It is an equally notorious fact that the Interior Department for the last twenty years has been overcrowded, crowded to a shameful degree; crowded so that it is unhealthy for the occupants, there being in many of the rooms twice as many people as there ought to be; and the records have been removed from the rooms, where they properly belong, and placed in cases in the corridors. In every way those Departments have been crowded, and they are clamoring for more room. Both the Interior Department and the Post-Office Department are occupying rooms outside of the Department buildings, when they ought all to be housed under one roof.

I do not know but that there may be somewhere some official building of the United States that is not so crowded, but, so far as my observation goes, every building is as full as it ought to be, and some contain twice as many people as they ought to contain.

Mr. VEST. I do not think the State, War, and Navy Departments are crowded.

Mr. TELLER. I would not state so certainly of those, but I have never myself seen any large room occupied by one clerk, although such a thing may exist in those buildings; but I do know that both the Interior and the Post-Office Departments have been very badly crowded for the last twenty years.

Mr. VEST. That is true.

Mr. TELLER. And I know also that the Interior Department, if allowed to occupy both the Post-Office Department building and the building the Interior Department now occupies, except the outside rooms, which are rented—if those two buildings were turned over to the Interior Department, which is situated on F street, the Post-Office and the Interior Department building, the Interior Department would occupy every room in both and not have any waste rooms.

If the Government does not want to use the old Corcoran Art

Gallery for the purposes of the Court of Claims, there are a number of commissions and other Government bureaus which occupy rented buildings, which the Government could put in that building.

I myself would like to see the Government erect a good court building for all the courts, but there will be plenty of time for that after we buy this property.

Mr. MANTLE. I desire simply to say, Mr. President, that I was one of the subcommittee, acting with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], who were appointed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to examine the building in question and make report to that committee. In company with the Senator from Iowa, I visited the building. We inspected it very thoroughly, going all over it, and after making numerous inquiries relative to the value of that property and of adjacent property, and after hearing the statements of people engaged in the real estate business in the city, we arrived at the conclusion that the price named in the amendment would be a very reasonable price for the property. It was our opinion, after such investigation as we were able to make—I am speaking as a layman of course—that suitable changes could be made without any great outlay of money, and that the building could be made suitable for a hall of records. So, Mr. President, we reported to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in favor of the purchase of the old Corcoran Art Gallery at the price stipulated, to wit, $325,000.

I have nothing to add to that except to say that, in my judgment, after this investigation, it is a desirable piece of property for the Government to own at that price. It is located in a splendid quarter, adjacent to other Government buildings, and, from the very fact of its location, it must increase in value as the years go by.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand the Senator to say that the subcommittee reported to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mr. MANTLE. My impression is that we made up a report, but I do not think there has been a meeting of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds this winter. There have been one or two abortive attempts to secure a meeting.

Mr. VEST. We have had meetings, but this question was not reported to our committee, and there never was any consultation about it; but, as the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] stated, he polled the committee on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. MANTLE. I think that is true; but the report was made by the subcommittee, and the poll of members on the floor was based upon it.

Mr. VEST. But that report was never considered by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MANTLE subsequently said: I want to recur for one moment to the subject of the Corcoran Art Gallery. I knew that a report had been made, but I could not lay my hand upon it at the time I discussed the matter, and I should like very much to have three or four letters from competent real estate dealers in the city, which were used at that time, incorporated in the RECORD with my remarks, so that they may be read. They bear directly upon the question of the value of the ground immediately surrounding the site in question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letters will be printed in the RECORD.

The letters are as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 6, 1896.

DEAR SIR: Answering your inquiry, we would say that in our opinion lots 5, 6, 7, and 8, square 167, belonging to the Corcoran Gallery of Art, containing 17,733 square feet of land, and situated on the northeast corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Seventeenth street, are fully worth $20 per square foot, or $354,660, exclusive of the improvements.

The buildings upon these lots are substantial, and even at this day handsome ones, which we understand cost upward of $200,000 to originally erect. Their value to a prospective purchaser would, however, depend entirely upon whether they could be advantageously used, and could therefore not be estimated by us.

In connection with our valuation of this property it may be of interest for you to know that we are holding for sale the corner of Pennsylvania avenue and Jackson place—same square—at about $27 per square foot.

Very truly, yours,

THOS. J. FISHER & CO.

S. H. KAUFFMANN, Esq.,
President Corcoran Gallery of Art, Washington, D. C.

MARCH 6, 1896.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry in relation to the value of the land upon which the Corcoran Art Gallery is built, I will say that it is on lots 5, 6, 7, and 8, square 167, in this city, and I consider $360,000 a fair price for it, independent of the building.

Very truly, yours,

R. O. HOLTZMAN.

Mr. S. H. KAUFFMANN, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 20, 1896.

DEAR SIR: In answer to the question what, in my opinion, would be a fair price for the Government to pay for the present Corcoran Gallery property, to be used for public purposes, I beg to say that I would regard $375,000 as a conservative valuation.

Very truly, yours,

MYRON M. PARKER.

S. H. KAUFFMANN, Esq., City.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 17, 1896.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry of this date, as to the value of the Corcoran Art Gallery property, corner of Seventeenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, I have to say that I regard the property as worth for public purposes anywhere between $400,000 and $500,000. It is, as is well known, a building of special character and adapted only for the purposes for which it is now used or for the use of the Government. I understand you contemplate the sale of the property to the United States, and certainly there would be very little hesitation in the minds of any Senator or Representative in voting for the purchase of this property, the proceeds of same to be used for the benefit of the public, not for the people of Washington, but more largely for visitors from all parts of the Union.

I will be glad to furnish any further information you may desire.

Sincerely, yours,

B. H. WARNER.

S. H. KAUFFMANN, Esq.

Mr. CALL. I wish to make one remark only. If it was a wise and proper consideration, as stated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], to buy the building belonging to the Freedman's Bureau and give an increased price for it, it is equally wise to purchase the Corcoran Art Gallery and give an increased price for that. If it is a public consideration to benefit the depositors in the Freedman's Bank, it is equally a public consideration to appropriate this money, which will be applied to the education of the American people in perpetuity in the higher branches of art, furnishing them employment and the means of earning a comfortable living and contributing to the advancement of human learning.

For that reason, and because this money will be a perpetual benefit to the advancement of mankind in learning, I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. VEST. I distinctly stated, if the Senator will permit me, that the Freedman's Bank property was exceedingly cheap and the best purchase that this Government ever made; and I stated that this property is exceedingly dear.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, cheapness does not contribute much in the question when it is a question of the advancement of mankind in progress and learning.

Mr. VEST. When I am engaged in that business, I think I will be as liberal as the Senator from Florida, but I am now engaged in the consideration of the expenditure of money for real estate by the United States Government.

I raise the point of order on the amendment that it is general legislation.

Mr. BACON. Before the point of order is submitted to the Senate or ruled upon by the Chair, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri, as he said he had been consulting with real estate agents in regard to this matter, what, according to his best information, is the proper value of this property?

Mr. VEST. I think in the present state of the market, which is as low as it possibly can be in this city and elsewhere, fifteen or sixteen dollars a foot would be a liberal price for this property.

Mr. BACON. What would the total amount to at that price per foot?

Mr. VEST. I can not state exactly. I do not recollect the exact number of feet, but I think it would amount to in the neighborhood of $280,000. That would be an exceedingly liberal price for it. I do not want to do anybody injustice, but my recollection is that a gentleman proposed to sell us the property, I am pretty certain, for a sum not exceeding $300,000, but the market has gone down since. I have been told by gentlemen who own property in the vicinity, with whom I have talked about this matter, and whose names I could give to any committee, that they would be very glad to get $17 a foot for property that is just as eligibly situated and right in the immediate vicinity of the Corcoran Art Gallery.

Mr. MANTLE. May I ask the Senator from Missouri if in computing the price of the ground he makes any account for the building at all?

Mr. VEST. Very little, to be frank, because I have endeavored to state to the Senate that I thought all that could be used of the present building would possibly be the outer walls, if they were in a condition in which they could be used, which I doubt very much. The whole building must be remodeled. It is utterly unfit for the purposes of a court of justice; it was built for a specific purpose, for an art gallery.

I have had some little experience—not a great deal—in regard to old buildings. If I wanted to build on a lot containing an old building, I would tear down the old one and not even use the materials contained in it in the new one. When you come to remodeling an old building, it is just like an old wagon that has got to be repaired—you had better give it away and buy a new one.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand the Senator from Missouri has made the point of order on the amendment, I desire to state the exact condition of the amendment. It is an amendment to provide the Court of Claims with a place for its sittings, and therefore it is a public purpose.

Therefore it is a public service. It is in lieu of the estimate which provides for the rent of a building for the Court of Claims. It is the judgment of the committee as respects that subject,

It is a public purpose in view of the statement made by the Senator himself, who says that the subject has been before the committee for more than a year.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me? It seems that if anything could be an appropriation to carry into effect existing law it is an appropriation for a court.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes. I thank the Senator for stating more tersely than I did the exact purpose of the amendment. So that, so far from its being out of order, it is absolutely in order, as much as it is in order to provide money for the rent of any of the great public departments of this Government, which we do every year to the extent of $130,000 or $140,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). In view of the construction which has prevailed here, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. MILLS and Mr. ALDRICH. Question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I believe that concludes all the amendments of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a committee amendment on page 91.

Mr. ALLISON. There are one or two other reserved amendments, and I desire to offer one or two amendments from the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed there is an amendment on page 91, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 6 on page 91 it is proposed to insert:

The officer of the Coast and Geodetic Survey detailed to serve on the board to locate a deep-water harbor for commerce and of refuge at Port Los Angeles, in Santa Monica Bay, California, or at San Pedro, in said State, which board was created by an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1896, United States Statutes at Large, page 213, shall receive from the appropriation in said act provided with relation to said harbor, in addition to his mileage provided for in section 1566 of the Revised Statutes, and notwithstanding its provisions, such a per diem allowance for subsistence as the Secretary of War may deem proper.

Mr. FRYE. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Secretary now to state the next reserved amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to continue the scientific investigation of the fur-seal fisheries of the North Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, authorized by joint resolution approved June 8, 1896, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary during the fiscal years 1897 and 1898; and all the provisions of said public resolution of June 8, 1896, are extended and made applicable to the fiscal year 1898.

Mr. MILLS. Will not the Senator from Iowa allow me to have my amendment adopted now? He has no objection to it, and there may be objection to others, which will lead to debate, or something of that sort.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to serve the convenience of the Senator, but I think nearly every Senator about me has an amendment, and I should prefer, if it is agreeable to the Senator, to consider the committee amendments first and get them out of the way.

Mr. MILLS. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I do not believe we ought to continue this commission and again send a party of scientific men to Alaska for the purpose of viewing the destruction of our property by the Canadian seal poachers. It seems to me that has gone on long enough, and that unless we propose to deal summarily with the matter we had better abandon it altogether.

The fact is that in 1893 we submitted to arbitration the questions involved in a dispute with Great Britain in regard to protecting the seal fisheries in Bering Sea. The tribunal met at Paris, and after considerable discussion we were defeated on every proposition which was presented, and the tribunal finally formulated a series of provisions for the protection of seal life. Those provisions have entirely and utterly failed to accomplish their purpose. It was provided that no seals should be killed in the open waters of Bering Sea nearer than 60 miles to the islands, and it is well known that the seal herd visit the islands every season for the purpose of rearing their young, and that while the young are upon the rookeries their mothers fish in the surrounding waters. It is now shown that the fishing banks are more than 60 miles from the islands, and therefore the provisions of the Paris Tribunal afford no protection whatever.

The consequence is that sealing vessels, ships fitted out for the purpose, capture these animals in the water. The ships visit the waters every summer and kill the mother seals. The result is that we are spending large sums of money in sending men to watch the destruction of this property, and we receive no revenue whatever from the islands—no revenue whatever from the lease of these islands. We are expending about $400,000 a year to patrol the waters of Bering Sea and to send commissions there to look on while this work of butchery is performed.

The House of Representatives at the last session of Congress passed a law which provided first that an agreement should be secured, if possible, with Great Britain for the purpose of formulating regulations to protect these animals. The bill has been reported to the Senate from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it is upon the Calendar. It provides that if Great Britain will not enter into such an arrangement before the next sealing season commences, the Secretary of the Treasury shall proceed to kill every seal as fast as it lands upon the islands and end this controversy. It seems to me that is what we ought to do. Instead of sending another commission to witness our own humiliation, we ought to destroy every seal as fast as it lands upon the islands, in the interest of humanity.

Mr. President, two years ago the reports of the Treasury agents showed that 20,000 young seals starved to death because their mothers were butchered at sea, and last year 27,000 starved to death. It is well known that these young seals will live for about six weeks before death comes to relieve them, and that they travel up and down these rookeries in great distress, searching for their mothers, and finally die. Are we to continue this condition of affairs?

Mr. GALLINGER. How many died last year?

Mr. PETTIGREW. Twenty-seven thousand. These young seals died upon the islands because their mothers were killed at sea. It seems to me that we ought to stop it in the interest of humanity. It seems to me cruel to continue this performance. It seems to me we ought, in the interest of humanity, to enact some law to destroy these animals and thus stop this disgraceful transaction.

Mr. President, because of this fact the company which has leased the islands and agreed to pay into the Treasury a certain sum of money for each seal that is taken, has refused to make payments, and we have not received a dollar of revenue since 1892—not one penny last year, not one penny any year since 1892. But what is the fact in regard to the expense of carrying on this transaction? We have paid out since 1890, $2,000,000 for the expense of a fleet and for men to patrol that field and watch the Canadian poachers take our property.

We have been regaled with arbitration treaties. We have implored the British Government to settle this question, to do away with this barbarous, inhuman performance in the Bering Sea, and yet they turn a deaf ear, refusing to do anything. Still they send one arbitration treaty after another. The last treaty which we received is one to arbitrate, as I understand, the one hundred and forty-first meridian of longitude. You might as well arbitrate the multiplication table. If this Adminstration remained long enough, if it did not find anything else to arbitrate, it would send here, I suspect, a treaty to determine whether Great Britain and the United States could agree upon the multiplication table. The one hundred and forty-first meridian of longitude can be determined by any engineer. It is well known that engineers have already determined its location within 400 feet of Central City, on the Yukon River, at the present time.

But, Mr. President, the British Government refuses to do one thing for the protection of seal life. I do not intend to enter into any discussion of the question at this late hour, but I wish to put before the people the record of this proceeding for the last few years.

The cost of patrolling the waters of the North Pacific and the Bering Sea since 1891 to date has been about $1,696,000. When we add other expenses it swells the total amount to more than $2,000,000, while the total revenue derived since 1891 is but $288,000, and not a cent of revenue has been received since 1892. In the meantime we have lost into the hands of the Canadians the enormous number of more than 2,000,000 fur seals, valued at least at $10,000,000, and from certain rulings of the Treasury Department since 1893 we have lost—at least we have not received the rightful revenue to us due from the company which rents the islands—$1,188,000. I have a table showing the revenue and the expenses since 1890 in connection with this matter.

SEAL ISLANDS OF ALASKA.

[Figures taken from Secretary of the Treasury.]

Cost to public Treasury since 1890.

As to the cost of policing Bering Sea and the North Pacific each year since 1890, I have to state that the honorable the Secretary of the Navy, upon request, has informed this Department that the cost of maintaining vessels of the United States Navy in these waters since 1890, including pay and rations of officers and crews and repairs to the vessels during and immediately following the performance of said patrol duty, was as follows:

1890	No patrol by Navy.
1891	$135,281.64
1892	233,901.31
1893	163,067.74
1894	452,768.13
1895	No patrol by Navy.

The expense incurred by revenue cutters in patrolling Bering Sea from 1890 to 1896, inclusive, including pay and rations of officers and men, is as follows:

1890	$35,848.63
1891	51,650.79
1892	66,672.57
1893	47,385.79
1894	56,432.63
1895	148,677.74
1896	150,000.00

The amounts which have been expended by the Government for the support of the native inhabitants of the seal islands of Alaska follow:

1869	$11,337.32
1894	18,319.44
1895	35,563.21
1896	25,000.00

While not requested by the resolution, I append a statement of the amounts expended for salaries and traveling expenses of agents to the seal fisheries of Alaska:

1890	$10,747.71
1891	15,396.83
1892	16,071.33
1893	11,168.27
1894	10,953.09
1895	10,308.38
1896	10,000.00

In order that the Senate may clearly understand the complete failure of every attempt made by this Administration to secure the least betterment of the shameful order of affairs on the seal islands of Alaska, the following concise epitome of the successive advances of Mr. Gresham and Mr. Olney, together with the rebuffs, is given.

First, Mr. Gresham leads off:

MR. GRESHAM TO SIR JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, January 23, 1895.

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to inform you, for communication to your Government, of the deep feeling of solicitude on the part of the President of the United States with regard to the future of the Alaskan seal herd as disclosed by the official returns of seals killed at sea during the present season in the North Pacific Ocean, filed in the respective custom-houses of the United States and British Columbia, and by reliable estimates of skins shipped to London from the Asiatic coast by way of the Suez Canal.

It would appear that there were landed in the United States and Victoria 121,143 skins, and that the total pelagic catch, as shown by the London trade sales and careful estimates of skins transshipped in Japanese and Russian ports, amounts to about 142,000, a result unprecedented in the history of pelagic sealing. It would further appear that the vessels engaged in Bering Sea, although only one-third of the total number employed in the North Pacific, in four or five weeks killed 31,585 seals, not only over 8,000 more than were killed in Bering Sea in 1891 (the last year the sea was open), but even more than the total number killed during the four months on the American side of the North Pacific this season.

This startling increase in the pelagic slaughter of both the American and Asiatic herds has convinced the President, and it is respectfully submitted can not fail to convince Her Majesty's Government, that the regulations enacted by the Paris Tribunal have not operated to protect the seal herd from that destruction which they were designed to prevent, and that, unless a speedy change in the regulations be brought about, extermination of the herd must follow. Such a deplorable result should if possible be averted.

The experience of the past year under the regulations has demonstrated that not alone are the United States and Great Britain deeply interested in the preservation of the seal herd; Russia and Japan have interests commercially almost as important. Any new system of regulations of necessity should embrace the whole North Pacific Ocean from the Asiatic side to the American side, and should be binding upon the citizens and subjects alike of all these countries.

In order to add to our scientific knowledge upon this question as to the habits of the seal, its feeding grounds, and the effect of pelagic sealing upon the herd, and other similar questions, the President deems it advisable to suggest to Her Majesty's Government, and to the Governments of Russia and Japan, that a commission be appointed, consisting of one or more men from each country, eminent for scientific knowledge and practical acquaintance with the fur trade. This commission should visit the Asiatic side of the North Pacific as well as the American, and also the islands which the seals frequent, and report to their respective Governments as to the effects of pelagic sealing on the herd and the proper measures needed to regulate such sealing so as to protect the herd from destruction and permit it to increase in such numbers as to permanently furnish an annual supply of skins.

[Senate Ex. Doc. No. 67, Fifty-third Congress, third session, pages 160-161.]

I am directed by the President to propose for the consideration of your Government, and the Governments of Russia and Japan, the appointment of such a commission, and I am further directed to suggest that during its deliberations the respective Governments agree upon a modus vivendi, as follows:

"That the regulations now in force be extended along the line of the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude from the American to the Asiatic shore, and be enforced during the coming season in the whole of the Pacific Ocean and waters north of that line. Furthermore, that sealing in Bering Sea be absolutely prohibited pending the report of such commission."

Inasmuch as the sealing season will shortly commence, and the fleet will leave the western coast for the sealing grounds, I beg to suggest the necessity of speedy action in regard to this proposition.

I have, etc.,

W. Q. GRESHAM.

To this urgent letter, accompanied by detailed statements of proof of the utter failure of the Paris regulations, asking for a prompt reply before the sealing season should open for 1895 and the vessels get beyond recall, the British Government (influenced by Canadian interests) made the following tardy and abrupt reply, denying everything that the United States Government complained of:

[Handed to Mr. Uhl by Sir Julian Pauncefote, May 27, 1895.]

INSTRUCTIONS TO SIR JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

No. 93.] FOREIGN OFFICE, May 17, 1895.

SIR: I have received your excellency's dispatch, No. 29, of the 24th January, inclosing a note from Mr. Gresham, of the 23d January, relative to the operation of the regulations laid down by the Paris Tribunal of Arbitration for the fur-seal fishery, and the view entertained by the President of the United States that, the regulations having failed in their object, further provisions are required to preserve the herd from extermination.

In order to avert this result Mr. Gresham had been directed to propose:

That a commission should be appointed by the Governments of Great Britain, the United States, Russia, and Japan, consisting of one or more men from each country, eminent for scientific knowledge and practical acquaintance with the fur trade. This commission should visit the Asiatic side of the North Pacific as well as the American, and also the islands which the seals frequent, and report to their respective Governments as to the effect of pelagic sealing on the herd and the proper measures needed to regulate such sealing so as to protect the herd from destruction and permit it to increase in such numbers as to permanently furnish an annual supply of skins.

That during the deliberations of this commission the respective Governments should agree upon a modus vivendi as follows:

"That the regulations now in force be extended along the line of the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude, from the American to the Asiatic shore, and be enforced during the coming season in the whole of the Pacific Ocean and waters north of that line. Furthermore, that sealing in Bering Sea be absolutely prohibited pending the report of such commission."

Her Majesty's Government have given the facts set forth by Mr. Gresham in support of these proposals their most serious consideration, but after examining attentively the figures and information at their disposal they have come to the conclusion that the condition of affairs is not of so urgent a character as the President has been led to believe.

In the second paragraph of his note Mr. Gresham states:

"It would appear that there were landed in the United States and Victoria 121,143 skins, and that the total pelagic catch, as shown by the London trade sales and careful estimates of skins transshipped in Japanese and Russian ports, amounts to about 142,000, a result unprecedented in pelagic sealing. It would further appear that the vessels engaged in Bering Sea, although only one-third of the total number employed in the North Pacific, in four or five weeks killed 31,585 seals—not only over 8,000 more than were killed in Bering Sea in 1891 (the last year the sea was open), but even more than the total number killed during the four months on the American side of the North Pacific this season."

He goes on to say—

"This startling increase in the pelagic slaughter of both the American and Asiatic herds has convinced the President, and, it is respectfully submitted, can not fail to convince Her Majesty's Government, that the regulations enacted by the Paris Tribunal have not operated to protect the seal herd from that destruction which they were designed to prevent, and that unless a speedy change in the regulations be brought about, extermination of the herd must follow. Such a deplorable result should, if possible, be averted."

I must, in the first place, observe that arguments based on figures which include the pelagic catch on the Asiatic or western side of the Pacific are calculated to lead to erroneous conclusions as to the working of the regulations, and as to their effect on the seals frequenting the Pribilof Islands.

There can be no doubt that there has been a large increase in the number of seals taken off the Japanese coast last year in comparison to any previous year. The total number taken there in 1893 was only a little over 29,000, while last year it appears from the returns to have been not less than 51,000.

But no point has been more constantly insisted upon by those who have examined and argued the question on behalf of the United States than that the seals frequenting the eastern and western sides of the Pacific form two absolutely distinct bodies or "herds" and do not intermingle. In the opinion of the experts and counsel employed on behalf of Great Britain this doctrine was pushed too far. They held that a certain amount of intermingling might and indeed did take place in Bering Sea. But though our knowledge of seal life is still far from complete, it may certainly be held as tolerably established that the two main bodies of seals are distinct, and that increased pelagic catch on the Japanese coast does not constitute a serious menace to the seals frequenting the Pribilof Islands.

Whether that increased catch can be continued without serious diminution of seal life on the Asiatic side is a question which has still to be tested by experience.

For the present the regulations apply to the eastern side only, and their success or failure must be judged solely by their effect on the herd which they were intended to protect. I proceed, therefore, to examine that effect as shown by the figures in the possession of Her Majesty's Government.

From the table printed at page 307 of the report of the British commissioners it appears that in the years 1889, 1890, and 1891 the pelagic catch on the eastern side was as follows:

1889	42,870
1890	51,560
1891	48,000

These figures include the catch of both British and American vessels.

The figures of the American catch for later years are not available, but the Canadian catch on the eastern side in 1891, 1892, 1893, and 1894 are given in the official report as follows:

1891	52,995	1893	28,613
1892	39,107	1894	38,044

The American catch for 1894 on the eastern side is given in the table inclosed in Mr. Gresham's other note, forwarded in your excellency's dispatch No. 29, as 17,558, so that the total catch on that side last year was 55,602. This, as contrasted with the catch of 1891, shows a diminution of about 12,500.

In that year, though the modus vivendi was partly in force, the Canadian catch in Bering Sea was 29,146, whereas in 1894 it was only 26,425. This shows a diminution of about 10 per cent in the catch.

Her Majesty's Government have no returns of the American pelagic catch in Bering Sea in the season of 1891, and are therefore unable to make a comparison between the total catch there in that year and in 1894. They are unable to understand on what grounds Mr. Gresham has stated the total in 1891 to have been less than 23,585, when, according to their information, the Canadian catch alone was 29,146.

Turning now to the number of vessels employed in the fishery, these do not appear to have increased, but, on the contrary, to have decreased.

There are no trustworthy figures available as to the United States sealing vessels previous to those now furnished for 1894 by Mr. Gresham, but there are full official returns with regard to the Canadian sealing fleet, and the following table, showing the numbers and operations of the fleet during the last four years, is interesting in this connection:

Year.	Number.	Tonnage.	Number of hunters.		Total catch on both sides of the Pacific.
			White.	Indian.
1891	51	3,378	710	296	50,495
1892	66	4,456	961	511	46,382
1893	55	3,743	847	422	68,231
1894	59	3,866	888	518	90,485

It will be seen from these figures that the number of Canadian vessels and the number of hunters employed on them last season is below that of 1892, the great falling off in 1893 being due to wrecks and seizure of vessels in the previous year.

As regards the total number of vessels, both British and American, employed in the fishery, these are given at page 185 of the United States case before the Tribunal of Arbitration as 115 in 1891 and 123 in 1892, while in 1894 they were only 93—a most material decrease.

The number of vessels and of men employed on them having thus decreased, while the total catch on both sides of the Pacific has undoubtedly increased, it is clear that there has been a general increase in the average catch per man and per vessel. This is no doubt due in considerable degree to increased efficiency, to the fact that under the regulations the use of the spear has largely replaced that of firearms, and that consequently fewer of the seals shot or speared were lost. Much is probably the result of those accidental circumstances of weather and climate which go to make a good fishing season. But the fact tends also to show that more seals were met with than before, and from this point of view the increased catch does not point to any imminent danger of extinction of the species.

As regards the effect of the regulations on the number of seals frequenting the Pribilof Islands, it seems premature to attempt to form an opinion.

Her Majesty's Government have noted the fact, which is not quoted by Mr. Gresham, but has been stated on authority, that only 16,000 seals were allowed by the United States Treasury agent to be killed on the Pribilof Islands during the last season. It is a feature of the question which deserves attention, but in the absence of information as to the standard weight of skins and other conditions fixed by that officer, it is not possible to estimate the significance of this restriction. It does not, however, necessarily point to any grounds of immediate apprehension, as only 20,000 seals could be taken in 1890, though the standard in that year was undoubtedly low.

In any case, as the number of seals taken outside Bering Sea on the American side was, owing to the regulations, much less than usual, and pelagic sealing does not begin in that sea till the 1st of August, by which time killing on the islands is over, it is evident that the small take on the islands was not due to the results of the pelagic catch of last year.

Taking all these circumstances into consideration, Her Majesty's Government can not agree that any sufficient evidence as yet exists to show that the regulations have failed in their effect or that there is such urgent danger of total extinction of the seals as to call for a departure from the arbitral award by which the two nations have solemnly bound themselves to abide.

The arbitrators had before them all the information both as to the condition of the herd and the results of pelagic sealing which the resources of both nations could supply, and after exhaustive consideration they, in the judicial exercise of their discretion, fixed five years as the period after which the regulations might be revised. Only one year has elapsed, and beyond the fact that though the sealers have scrupulously adhered to the regulations, they have had a successful season, there is no substantial ground to support the contention that the period for revision of the regulations fixed by the arbitrators ought to be so materially curtailed.

To set aside their authority upon so slight a ground would, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, be a most serious blow to the authority of arbitral decisions, and to the general principle of arbitration which both Governments have at heart to promote.

Her Majesty's Government are, however, anxious to do all in their power to contribute to a fair and thorough examination of the facts connected with the seal fishery, and to the adoption in useful time of any measures which may be necessary for the preservation of the species. They have examined carefully the specific proposals contained in Mr. Gresham's note, in order to see how far any portion of them could be accepted with this view, having due regard to the important British interests involved.

As regards the proposed modus vivendi for this season, Her Majesty's Government regret that they find themselves unable to accept this proposal.

Even if some adequate grounds had been furnished for its adoption in the interest of the fishery, it is to be remembered that the sealers have already almost all started and are now scattered over the whole breadth of the North Pacific, where it is impossible to warn them.

They have made their preparations on the assumption that the interference and interruption to which their industry has been subject more or less for the last ten years had at length come to an end, and that the conditions under which it might be prosecuted had at last acquired some permanence and stability. To spring upon them again in the midst of their operations so stringent a proposal as that of the United States would be an act of great injustice, and would involve Her Majesty's Government in the payment of heavy compensation.

The measure suggested would in fact put an end to pelagic sealing, as it would have only the first four months of the year, when from various causes comparatively few seals are caught, while the sealers would have to lay their vessels up during the remaining two-thirds of the year. The adoption of such a restriction under present circumstances, and upon the only grounds which can be adduced to justify it, would be almost tantamount to an announcement that whenever there has been a successful pelagic fishing, steps will at once be taken to prevent the recurrence of such an event.

Nor can Her Majesty's Government believe that the appointment at present of an international commission, such as is suggested by Mr. Gresham would lead to any useful result.

It will be remembered that the commissioners appointed by the United States and Great Britain who visited the islands in 1891 to examine this same question found themselves unable to agree, except as to a few vague general statements, and presented reports in which they differed widely, not only as to the remedial measures necessary, but even as to many of the most important facts in seal life, and only the same result can be expected from a second more numerous commission.

Such commissioners, it must be borne in mind, can only be on the islands for a few weeks at most, while the period during which the seals frequent the islands extends from May to October or November, and the phases of seal life exhibited are constantly changing.

The question to be dealt with is the progress and the growth or decrease of the herd, and the information required to enable it to be effectively grappled with can only be gathered by continuous observations carried on constantly during the greater part of the period that the islands are resorted to by the seals, and extending over a series of years. The new commission might, no doubt, be able to gather some new facts as to seal life, but nothing but continuous and comparative study could qualify it to form a judgment as to the effects which the pursuit of the seals at sea and the slaughter on land are producing on the herd, and to suggest any remedial measures with confidence and authority.

Instead of appointing such a commission, though possibly as a preparatory step to its appointment, Her Majesty's Government would propose the appointment of agents to reside on the seal islands and to collect authoritative information by observations, which should extend over such a period as will be sufficient to enable a judgment to be formed of the effect of the fishing upon the preservation of the herds.

If such agents appointed by the United States and Great Britain were to conduct investigations jointly during the next four years, both Governments would by that time have, with the particulars derived from the sealers' logs and other sources, a body of information which would enable the two nations to approach the question of revising the regulations in a thoroughly scientific manner, and to protect, as far as possible, the numerous and varied interests involved in the seal fishery.

Her Majesty's Government do not wish, however, to be understood as desiring to postpone all discussion until that date. The agents would naturally make their reports at regular and not too distant intervals, and if the facts disclosed in these reports, or information obtained from other sources, should at any time show a state of things urgently calling for remedial measures, Her Majesty's Government would be willing at once to examine with the Government of the United States the method in which such measures could best be applied. Similarly they will be ready to do what is in their power to obtain early returns of the results of the fishery during the present year, in order that they may be examined by the two Governments at the first practicable moment.

If these proposals recommend themselves to the Government of the United States, it might be desirable also to approach the Russian Government with a view to the appointment of similar agents on the Commander Islands. There is little independent information available in regard to the conditions of seal life on these islands, and as the Russian Government desire that the regulations made by the arbitrators for the western side of the Pacific should be extended to the eastern side, it seems reasonable that there should be inquiry how far such extension is necessary and applicable.

Your excellency is authorized to read this dispatch to Mr. Gresham, and if he should so desire, to hand him a copy of it.

This distinct and abrupt refusal of the British Government was shadowed by a cable outline of its negation on the 9th of May that stirred Mr. Uhl, then Acting Secretary of State, so badly that he at once prepared and sent the following:

MR. UHL TO SIR JULIAN PAUNCEFOTE.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 10, 1895.

EXCELLENCY: On the 23d of January last the Secretary of State had the honor to address you an important communication respecting the President's deep solicitude with regard to the future of the Alaskan seal herd and suggesting to Her Majesty's Government that a commission be appointed on behalf of Great Britain, Russia, Japan, and the United States to investigate and report touching the effects of pelagic sealing and the proper measures needful to regulate such sealing so as to protect the herd from destruction and permit it to increase in such numbers as to permanently furnish an annual supply of skins; and, furthermore, proposing that during the deliberations of such a commission a modus vivendi be agreed upon extending the area embraced in the regulations of the Paris Tribunal along the line of the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude to the Asiatic shore, and absolutely prohibiting sealing in Bering Sea pending the report of such commission.

At the date of that proposition but little time remained available for reaching an agreement between the two Governments, parties to the Paris award, which could be made effectual during the present sealing season, and for obtaining the concurrence of the other Governments interested, Russia and Japan; and early action upon the subject was naturally expected. This Department is, however, yet without information as to whether Her Majesty's Government is prepared to take effective steps as suggested to check the appalling diminution of the Alaskan seal herd within the area of the award and avert the imminent destruction of the important industries to which the seal fisheries give rise.

At this late day the proposition for a quadruple investigation and report can scarcely be executed during the present year, and while it remains a matter for urgent consideration in provision of next year's needs, the delay brings into more immediate and urgent prominence the second branch of the proposal, and especially the imperative need of agreeing upon the absolute closure of Bering Sea to pelagic sealing until the four Governments may reach a convenient accord on the general features of the problem.

Extended consideration of the subject, since Mr. Gresham's note of January 23 was written has not only confirmed the grave apprehensions then expressed, but has forced upon this Government the conviction that further suggestions designed to expand by mutual agreement the scope of the Paris award, in order to make it more effective for the purpose of preserving the fur-seal herd, are warranted by the information now in possession of this Government.

The sealing season of 1894 was the first during which the provisions of the Paris award were applicable, and the pelagic catch of seals, both without and within the area defined in the award, proved to have been the largest ever known.

The statistics of the seal catch, as estimated in another note addressed to you by the Secretary of State on the same day, January 23, are confirmed by later knowledge. Reliable information discloses that 138,329 skins taken by pelagic sealers in the North Pacific and in Bering Sea from the American, Russian, and Japanese herds during the season of 1894 were sold in London. Careful estimates show that about 3,000 were retained in the United States for dressing and dyeing, making a total of 141,329. To this should be added about 800 which were known to have been on a vessel believed to have been lost, making the total catch about 142,000, of which 56,686 were taken within the area covered by the Paris award.

The following table gives the number of skins taken by pelagic sealers within said area during the years 1890–1894, inclusive:

1890	40,809	1893	23,613
1891	45,941	1894	55,686
1892	40,642

It may be estimated within moderate bounds that these figures represent only about one-third of all the seals killed, the bodies of the greater part not being recovered.

An examination of these figures must satisfy the most skeptical mind that the fur-seal herd will be speedily exterminated unless the scope and the details of the award shall be supplemented by enlarged regulation.

So far as the articles of the award relating to the North Pacific Ocean, exclusive of Bering Sea, are concerned, whereby all seal fishing from May to August is forbidden, much good has been accomplished, and favorable results were apparent on the breeding islands early in the season. The fatal defect in the scope of the award, however, was in opening Bering Sea during August and September to pelagic sealing and prohibiting only the use of firearms. It has been claimed—and there is evidence in support of the claim—that the spear is as destructive in Bering Sea as the shotgun, and some experts believe that even greater destruction is accomplished by the use of the spear than by guns, for the reason that the noise of the latter frightens away many seals which may be easily killed while sleeping on the water by spearmen. While the herd is traveling in the North Pacific Ocean, away from the islands, it is very difficult to kill seals with spears, as they are constantly swimming and rarely found asleep on the surface. In Bering Sea, however, the females leave their pups on the islands and go out for a distance of 100 or 200 miles, far beyond the inhibited 60-mile zone, to feed. They are there found in large numbers asleep on the water and can easily be killed by the silent and skillful spearsman. The large number of pups found dead from starvation on the islands during the latter part of September and October, 1894 (12,000 by actual count on the accessible parts of the rookeries and 20,000 in all by careful estimates), shows the destructive effect of permitting any pelagic sealing whatever in Bering Sea.

With the closure of that sea to pelagic sealing, and with the enforcement of the closed season in the North Pacific Ocean as established by the award, it is believed that the seals would receive no more than a fair degree of protection, whereby seal fishing might continue to be profitable both on land and sea for a long time to come. Unless such a restriction in the scope of the award be made, the fur seals will be exterminated for all commercial purposes within a very few years at the most, and the dependent industries be destroyed. These considerations, joined to the official figures of last season's catch, which are now definitely known, fully bear out the wisdom and necessity of the proposals made in Mr. Gresham's note of January 23, making it more than ever the President's imperative duty to recall to the attention of Her Majesty's Government the defects in the form and scope of the Paris award, and in the legislation thereunder for carrying out its provisions, especially that enacted by the British Government; and I am directed by the President to earnestly renew, through you, the endeavors already set on foot to secure by mutual arrangement appropriate legislation on both sides, in order that the object of the award—to wit, the preservation of the fur-seal fisheries for the mutual and lasting benefit of the citizens and subjects of the two countries—may be effectually accomplished.

The contention of Her Majesty's Government that regulations framed for the purpose of carrying out the award should be coextensive with and limited by the terms of the award would seem to be sound, but this circumstance makes it the more incumbent upon the two parties to consider certain aspects in which the award fails to provide for contingencies which one brief year's experience has shown should be promptly met. No adequate remedy seems effective except through concurrent action, for Her Majesty's Government, by insisting on following the strict terms of the award, only emphasizes the glaring defects therein and demonstrates the need of an agreement to cure them. One of the most radical infirmities of this character, so conspicuous as to amount to a miscarriage of the undoubted purpose of the award itself, is found in Article VI, which prohibits the use of firearms and explosives in fur-seal fishing, the only exception being shotguns when used outside of Bering Sea. This prohibition is directed simply against the use of these weapons for one particular purpose—that of killing fur seal—leaving the possession and use lawful for all other purposes, such as killing whales, walrus, sea otter, hair seal, and other animals found within Bering Sea.

Experience has shown it to be almost a practical impossibility to detect a sealing vessel in the act of using firearms for this one prohibited purpose. Although the searching officer may be morally certain that firearms have been used, and may properly consider the mere presence of firearms on the vessel, if accompanied with bodies of seals, seal skins, or other suspicious evidence, sufficient justification (even apart from the provisions of section 10 of the act of Congress of April 6, 1894, which is applicable only to American vessels) for the seizure of such a vessel, it must be apparent that in proceedings for condemnation brought in a court thousands of miles away from the place of seizure it will be almost impossible to secure conviction and forfeiture on the ground of illegal use of weapons. Furthermore, under the procedure necessarily following the seizure of a British vessel, the United States officer delivers the vessel, with such witnesses and proof as he can procure, to the senior British naval officer at Unalaska. At the trial no representative of our Government is present, and the British Government must conduct the prosecution and must trust to such proofs and witnesses as the American officer could collect and furnish at the time. Under such circumstances forfeiture of the vessel could not be secured except in the clearest cases of guilt.

The prohibition of the use of firearms in seal fishing in Bering Sea can be effectually accomplished only by prohibiting the possession of firearms in that sea adapted to the killing of seals.

The provision of section 10 of the act of Congress of April 6, 1894, by which a presumption of a legal use from the possession of implements forbidden then and there to be used is raised, aids materially the enforcement of the award in the case of American vessels, to which, as I have said, our act alone applies. It is greatly to be regretted that no equivalent provision is found in the British act of Parliament enacted April 18, 1894, for carrying out said award; and in this connection it is significant that in the prior act carrying out the modus vivendi of June 15, 1891, for the prohibition of all sealing in Bering Sea (54 and 55 Victoria, chapter 19), a provision similar to that in the act of Congress above cited was inserted, as follows:

"If a British ship is found within Bering Sea having on board thereof fishing or shooting implements or seal skins, or bodies of seals, it shall lie on the owner or master of such ship to prove that the ship was not used or employed in contravention of this act."

The principle thus enunciated is so evidently just and necessary that it is not easy to understand why the latter British act, legislating upon the same subject, should have contained no similar provision in terms conforming to the intendment of the award. The Secretary of the Treasury is of the opinion that although an amendment bringing the present British act into harmony with the prior act and with the American statute in this regard would render the task of enforcing the award much easier, and give more effectual results, the most satisfactory amendment would consist in common legislation rendering a vessel a subject to forfeiture if found in Bering Sea with firearms on board adapted to the killing of seal.

It should further be provided by concurrent legislation that sealing vessels having implements or seal skins on board desiring to traverse the area covered by the award during the closed season if licensed, and during any season if unlicensed, should have such implements duly sealed and their catch noted on the log book (a privilege now accorded at the option of the master under the regulations of 1895, Article IV), under the penalty of forfeiture for violation of this privilege.

This privilege, however, as above stated, should not be accorded to vessels having firearms in Bering Sea.

It is further to be noted that under the British act of Parliament the provisions of the merchant shipping act (1854) with respect to official logs (including the penal provisions) are made applicable to sealing vessels. Said penal provisions, however, do not appear in the schedule attached to the copy of the act in the possession of the Department.

I have therefore to request that you will ascertain and inform me whether such penalties include the forfeiture of the vessel and cargo. Section 8 of the act of Congress expressly provides that any violation of the award or regulations will render the vessel and cargo liable to forfeiture. It is feared that because of the specific reference in the British act to the penal provisions of the merchant shipping act of 1854 as to official logs the failure of a vessel to keep log entries might not bring her within the general liability to forfeiture contained in the British act unless said merchant shipping act, now made a part thereof, contains similar provisions. During the past season log-book entries were duly made by United States sealing vessels in Bering Sea and were transmitted to Congress.

The Department is also informed that similar entries were made by British vessels in Bering Sea, which entries have been duly transmitted by the British Government. Many vessels, however, had cleared for the coasts of Japan and Russia as early as January, long before the passage of either the act of Congress of April 6, 1894, or the act of Parliament of April 18, 1894. Inasmuch as the award was not self-operative and contained no penalties for its violation, the Treasury Department considered that the penalties provided in the subsequent legislation were not retroactive, and could not properly be applied to the failure to make the log entries required by the award before the passage of such legislation. Entry was, therefore, permitted for the catch of seals on receipt of the master's oath that he cleared in ignorance of the provisions as to log-book entries. During the coming season collectors have been instructed rigidly to enforce the law as to log-book entries; and the exact status of the British law, therefore, becomes of great importance, so that an early answer to the present inquiry is very desirable.

While upon this subject of so amending the concurrent legislation of the two countries as to secure uniformity, I may invite attention to the fact that under the British act it is nowhere made the duty of the British naval officers to seize ships when found in violation of the law. Section 11 of the United States act imposes that duty on United States officers duly designated by the President. You will recall that Mr. Gresham adverted to this point in his note to you of April 10, 1894; and in your reply of April 11 you observed that, in your opinion, the word "may" would be construed as imperative, and that, in any case, the instructions to the naval officers would probably remove all doubt on the point. It is now submitted, however, that this detail is too important to be left to mere administrative interpretation of a statute which in terms omits to prescribe this most essential duty; and in the judgment of the President this discrepancy in the concurrent legislation of the two countries should no longer continue.

Besides advancing these considerations in regard to the concurrent legislation for regulating sealing in the North Pacific and Bering Sea, the Secretary of the Treasury has asked me to ascertain, through you, whether during the past season the British Government has employed inspectors to verify the log-book entries of British vessels as to the number and sex of seal skins landed, in like manner as provided by the legislation of this country. All skins entered during the past season at United States ports, except Port Townsend, were duly examined by expert inspectors as to number and sex. By an error, however, the skins entered at Port Townsend, although duly examined and counted, were not classified as to sex.

The Secretary of the Treasury further suggests that the British Government be requested to consent to the stationing of United States inspectors at British Columbian ports for the purpose of verifying said log entries of British vessels and examining the skins as to sex, reciprocally according the British Government a like privilege in United States ports. I have therefore the honor to make such a request, and to invite as early a response thereto as may be practicable.

In thus communicating to you, by direction of the President, the proposals and suggestions of this Government, I desire, by way of recapitulation, to lay especial stress upon (1) the necessity of immediate agreement to close Bering Sea absolutely to pelagic sealers pending consideration of the proposition for extending the protective area of the North Pacific Ocean along the thirty-fifth parallel to the Asiatic coast, with the concurrence of Russia and Japan; (2) the proposal for a modus vivendi whereby the effective concurrence of Great Britain, Russia, Japan, and the United States shall be lent to the protection of the fur-seal herds; (3) the appointment of a joint commission, as suggested in Mr. Gresham's note of January 23, 1895, and (4) the advisability, if not the proven necessity, for amending the concurrent legislation of the two countries for the expansion and more precise definition of the scope of the Paris award, and the duty of the two Governments thereunder.

I have, etc.,

EDWIN F. UHL, Acting Secretary.

No answer was ever received to that letter, and a few days ago I submitted a resolution in the Senate, which was adopted, calling for a copy of the letter and the reply. The Secretary of State informed the Senate that no reply had ever been received.

No answer being received, then Mr. Olney becomes restive; a shadow of the failure to get anything he ought to get fell upon him, and he follows Mr. Uhl's letter, above cited, with a long reiteration of the same, as follows:

MR. OLNEY TO LORD GOUGH.

No. 130.] DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 24, 1895.

MY LORD: On the 27th ultimo Her Majesty's ambassador handed to Mr. Uhl a printed copy of an instruction from the foreign office, No. 93, dated May 17, 1895, in answer to Mr. Gresham's proposals of the 23d of January last, touching the necessity of further provisions to preserve the fur-seal herd of the northern Pacific and Bering Sea from extermination in view of the inadequacy of the regulations laid down by the Paris Tribunal of Arbitration, and specifically replying to the proposal of this Government for the appointment of an international commission by the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Russia, and Japan, respectively, to investigate the fur-seal fisheries of those waters, and, pending a report by said commission, for a modus vivendi prohibiting sealing in Bering Sea and extending the regulations of the Paris award along the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude to the shores of Asia.

With regard to Mr. Gresham's statements concerning the startling increase in the pelagic slaughter of both the American and Asiatic herds, I note that the reply of the foreign office takes the position that this Government, because of its contention before the Paris Tribunal that the Asiatic and American fur-seal herds are distinct and do not commingle, can not now with propriety draw any inference as to the effect of pelagic sealing on the American fur-seal herd from figures indicating increased catches over previous seasons in the total of seals killed on the Asiatic and American sides of the North Pacific Ocean.

The claim is further advanced that, although the catch of fur seals during last season on the Asiatic side was greater than in any previous year, yet the catch taken from the American herd (that is, within the Paris award area), while admittedly larger than in most previous seasons, was, in fact, not as large as that of the season of 1891. And in this connection this Government is further reminded that the success or failure of the regulations established by the Paris Tribunal must be judged solely by their effect on the herd which they were "intended to protect."

I have the honor to reply that during the hearings before the Tribunal of Arbitration at Paris it was earnestly contended by counsel representing Great Britain that the Asiatic and American herds did commingle. That fact was disputed by the American counsel in the light of the evidence before them. The tribunal, however, was not called upon to make any definite finding upon this important question. While I do not wish to be understood as expressing any opinion upon the subject, yet, in view of the admission contained in the note of your Government, in which I cordially join, that "our knowledge of seal life is still far from complete," I feel that this disputed question as to whether said herds commingle still requires most careful consideration and study. It has been suggested that the American seal herd, even if not naturally commingling with the Asiatic herd, may have been driven over to Asiatic shores by incessant slaughter during the past seasons. If such were found to be the fact on careful investigation—which investigation is unfortunately refused by Her Majesty's Government—it might appear that the total slaughter of fur seals on both sides of the North Pacific Ocean has a more intimate connection with the present condition of the American fur-seal herd than is now admitted.

However this may be, the foreign office seems to have fallen into the serious error of assuming that the proposition of the United States Government contained in Mr. Gresham's note of January 23 last was selfish in its character, having application only to the material interests of the United States Government in the American, as distinguished from the Asiatic, fur-seal herd. Nothing could be further from the truth. The President acted in the desire to protect the fur-seal fisheries on both sides of the North Pacific Ocean, Asiatic as well as American, for the benefit of mankind. Incidentally, it is conceded, this might have resulted in benefit to the interests of the United States, but the proposition was based on broad humanitarian principles, no peculiar benefit or gain being sought save what would have occurred to all mankind from the proper regulation of these valuable fisheries. It will be recalled that a proposition of similar nature, limited to Bering Sea, was made by my predecessor, Mr. Bayard, through the United States ministers in England, Japan, Russia, and Sweden and Norway to those respective Governments in 1887, and that subsequently, at the request of Lord Salisbury, then Her Majesty's secretary for foreign affairs, its scope was broadened so as to embrace the whole northern Pacific Ocean, including Bering Sea, from the Asiatic to the American shores north of the forth-seventh degree of north latitude. Unfortunately, and apparently at the dilatory instance of the Canadian Government, this proposal was indefinitely postponed by Her Majesty's Government in June, 1888.

The development of valuable fur-seal fisheries off the coasts of Japan and Russia, followed by the closed season established by the Paris award, has induced many sealing vessels to frequent those waters, thus causing a notable increase in the pelagic slaughter off the Asiatic shores. The figures given by the foreign office included only the slaughter in Japanese waters. Adding the seals killed in Russian waters, we have a total of over 73,000 in 1893 and over 79,000 in 1894. It was to regulate the killing in those waters, as well as within the Paris award area, that Mr. Gresham's proposition of January 23 was made.

But even if it be assumed that the American and Asiatic herds are distinct and have never commingled, the fact still remains that the slaughter of the so-called "American" or "Alaskan" herd during the past season has been greater than in any season in the history of pelagic sealing. The foreign office's instruction states that about 12,500 fewer seals were killed from this herd in the award area in 1894 than in 1891. There is good ground, however, to conjecture that the British computation of seals killed in Bering Sea in 1891, namely, 29,146, swelling their total computation to 63,000, comprised a number of seals taken on the western side of that sea in the vicinity of the Russian islands. The figures for the catch in the same sea in 1894 (31,585), it should be remembered, are limited to seals killed on the eastern side within the area of the Paris award.

It was a matter of evidence before the Paris Tribunal that after the promulgation of the modus vivendi of June 15, 1891, 41 British vessels were warned out of the American side of Bering Sea by American cruisers between the dates of June 20 and August 15 of that year. It is believed that many of the vessels so warned went over to the Russian side of Bering Sea and made catches there. From statistics in the possession of this Government it would appear that some 8,432 seals were so taken—6,616 by British vessels and 1,816 by American vessels. There should be deducted, therefore, from the British figures 6,616, leaving about 23,000 as the catch of British vessels in the award area in Bering Sea during the season of 1891. A closely similar result is reached by careful examination of all the reported catches of 1891, and of the affidavits scattered through the cases and counter cases of the United States and Great Britain, whereby, deducting from the catch stated in the United States counter case, 28,605, the number of seals estimatad to have been killed off the Russian coasts, 5,847, a result of 23,041 is reached. Adding to this computed British catch in Bering Sea during 1891 the number of seals computed as killed in Bering Sea by American vessels in that year, 4,930, the total number of seals killed and recovered within the award area in Bering Sea for the season of 1891 falls below 28,000.

The communication of the foreign office states the total catch of the American and British vessels within the award area, comprising the North Pacific, in addition to Bering Sea, in 1891, as 68,000. A careful computation made by the Treasury Department of the total catch for 1891, based on an elaborate calculation of all the evidence disclosed in the case and counter case of each Government, estimates the number of seals known to have been killed within the award area at 45,000, leaving about 18,000 undetermined as to the locality of the slaughter. Taking, however, the figures as given by the foreign office, 68,000, and subtracting the number estimated by other computations by the Treasury Department to have been killed in Russian waters, 8,432, we have left 59,568 as the maximum catch within the award area for 1891.

The official statement of the catch for 1892 contained in the report of the Canadian department of marine and fisheries credits 14,905 out of a total of 53,912 to the Asiatic shores; the report for 1891 gives only a total of 52,996, none being credited to Russian waters; neither does the report of the British commissioners of the catch of 1891 give any number as killed in said waters. While admittedly these Russian catches were relatively small in this year, and hence may by inadvertence have escaped the attention of the Canadian authorities, yet it is clear that the British computations of 1891 and 1892 are reached by different methods, omission, if not error, to the extent stated above being distinctly imputable to the figures of 1891.

In computing the catch of 1894, the instruction of the foreign office states that 55,602 seals were killed within the award area, incinding 17,558 as the catch of American vessels. It should be remembered, however, that in the Treasury Department tables, from which the details mentioned in Mr. Gresham's note of January 23 were taken, 6,836 skins taken by American vessels were stated as undetermined as to location. Assuming that these unlocated catches were divided between the American and Asiatic herds in the same proportion as the other skins landed during the season of 1894 at American ports by United States vessels, we should have for the total catch within the award area 55,086, plus 6,152, or 61,838 in all, representing the bodies actually recovered, disregarding those killed but not recovered, from two to five times as many, according to the evidence before the Tribunal at Paris.

This total of seals killed and recovered justifies the repetition of the statement previously made that the pelagic catch within the award area during the last year's season was the largest in the history of pelagic sealing, the nearest approximation being the season of 1891, in which, even on the theory of the British figures, not more than 59,568 seals were killed and secured. The significance of this catch of 1894 will be better appreciated when it is considered that only 95 vessels were employed as against 115 in 1891.

It is further contended in the foreign office note that the increased catch, with proportionately fewer vessels, indicates an increased number of seals in 1894 as compared with 1891, and consequently a better condition of the fur-seal herd. When, however, the startling decrease of seals on the Pribilof Islands, pronounced by experts to be at least one-half since 1890, taken in connection with the great destruction of pups from starvation on the islands last season, caused by the slaughter of their mothers at sea, is considered, it will appear, it is respectfully suggested, conclusively demonstrated that the increased catch is but a measure of the increased efficiency of the crews employed as hunters on the sealing vessels; that the seal herd is rapidly diminishing in numbers and that it is in danger of speedy extermination unless changes are made in the regulations established by the Paris award as proposed by this Government.

It is correctly stated by the foreign office note that the catch in the award area of last season outside of Bering Sea was less than during the season of 1893. It should be remembered, however, that it falls only a little short of the catch of 1893, and that it was taken during four months, January to April, while the catch of 1893 was taken during seven months, January to July. The prohibition in the award regulations of pelagic sealing during the months of May, June, and July, however, was calculated undoubtedly to do much good to the herd, and some favorable results might naturally have been expected early in the season on the islands. Nevertheless, after the sealing fleet had finished its work in Bering Sea, the alarming increase in the number of dead pups found on the islands (amounting by accurate estimate to about 20,000), revealed unmistakably the fatal error of the award regulations in opening said sea to pelagic sealing.

The marvelously increased efficiency of the pelagic seal hunters in the use of the shotgun and spear, as shown by the enormous catches of late years, and especially of the last season under the award regulations, can not fail, it is again submitted, to speedily deplete the fur-seal herd. This depletion has already necessitated a reduction of the land catches on the Pribilof Islands of 65 per cent since 1890, and the pelagic catches must soon decrease in like degree on peril of complete extermination. Reports of the coast catch of the present season of 1895 would seem to indicate that this decrease is already observable. It is to be presumed, however, that for some few years the pelagic slaughter in Bering Sea, the great nursery of the fur-seal herd, can be maintained at figures approximating to or possibly exceeding those of last year. But the end can not be far off. It is respectfully submitted that such slaughter as has taken place within the last year—largely of nursing females—affords conclusive evidence that the regulations as established by the Paris award are not giving that measure of protection that the arbitrators intended. Commercial extermination of the fur-seal herd—Asiatic as well as American—is imminent. It is to be deeply regretted, therefore, that Her Majesty's Government has declined our propositions for the appointment of an international commission, and for an efficient modus vivendi pending a more comprehensive agreement in which all the parties in interest may justly share.

While thus rejecting the suggested international commission and modus vivendi, the foreign office instruction suggests that resident agents be appointed by the United States and Great Britain to be stationed on the Pribilof and Commander islands, there to make joint investigation during the next four years, and to report from time to time as to the condition of the fur-seal fisheries.

Although this Government firmly believes that this suggestion of Her Majesty's Government is inadequate and can not satisfactorily take the place of an international commission of scientists, nor supply the need of all asked for in said modus, it is unwilling to block the way to a better approximate understanding of the important conditions of seal life.

It is thought, however, that the British suggestion may be advantageously modified in the interest of all concerned, and I am directed by the President to make a new proposition to Her Majesty's Government, based largely upon that now submitted by the foreign office, to wit: That three agents each be appointed by the respective Governments of Great Britain, Russia, Japan, and the United States, twelve in all, who shall be stationed on the Kurile, Commander, and Pribilof islands, respectively; that these agents be instructed to examine carefully into the fur seal fishery and to recommend from time to time needful changes in the regulations of the Paris award and desirable limitations of the land catches of each of the said islands; that within four years they shall present a final report to their respective Governments, and that, pending such report, a modus viveudi be entered into extending the award regulations along the line of the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude from the American to the Asiatic shores.

The importance of the subject, of which the Governments interested must by this time be abundantly convinced, leads me to hope for the early and favorable attention of Her Majesty's Government to this amended proposal.

I have, etc.,

RICHARD OLNEY.

It will be noted in this letter of Mr. Olney that he fairly begs that, even if the British Government will not listen to a cessation of the sea butchery, it agree to join with our Government in sending up a joint commission for the purpose of seeing the wretched truth which the Canadians deny.

Mr. Olney simply wasted his time. The following reply of the British ministry scornfully refuses to grant even this small boon, but is willing to let a Canadian agent or two go up informally to live on the islands and watch things. Then the British ambassador fairly rubs it in. He informs Mr. Olney that the United States State Department is utterly mistaken in its charge of injury to our fur-seal herd; that Mr. Olney does not know as much as he might have known had he been able to digest the data assembled. Let the reply to Mr. Olney speak for itself. Here it is:

LORD GOUGH TO MR. OLNEY.

BRITISH EMBASSY, Newport, R. I., August 19, 1895.

SIR: Her Majesty's Government have had under consideration your note No. 133, of the 24th of June last, containing a new proposal from your Government for the appointment of three agents by Great Britain, Russia, Japan, and the United States, respectively, to be stationed on the Kurile, Commander, and Pribilof Islands.

In your above-mentioned note a lengthy criticism is made of the figures relating to the catch of seals in successive years which were given in the Earl of Kimberley's dispatch No. 93, of May 17 last, to Sir Julian Pauncefote. A copy of this dispatch was left with Mr. Uhl on May 27 by his excellency. Those figures were taken from the Canadian official returns, the estimate of the total catch of 1891 (British and American) being that of the British Bering Sea commissioners. The statement that a small part of the catch of 1891 was actually made on the Asiatic side of Bering Sea has been noted, and steps are being taken to investigate this particular point.

I have the honor to state, however, at the same time, that in any case the criticisms of the United States Government do not appear to invalidate the contention of Her Majesty's Government that there has been no such alarming increase in the pelagic catch of seals on the American side as to justify any extension of the regulations solemnly laid down by an international board of arbitration for a fixed period of five years, after an elaborate examination and an exhaustive discussion of the voluminous evidence presented on both sides. Nothing but the absolute concurrence of the two Governments in the necessity of a change, based on new and undisputed facts, could, in the views of Her Majesty's Government, justify any departure from the regulations prescribed by that tribunal before the time appointed under the award for their revision, should such revision then be called for.

I have further the honor to point out that even on the figures given by the United States Government the catch of 1891 on the American side was practically the same as that of 1894, and that the greatly increased dexterity with which the sealers are credited, and especially the fact that the bulk of the catch was made with spears instead of firearms, justifies the conclusion that the catch of 1894 was secured at less cost to the herd than that of 1891.

I am authorized further to state, in reply to your above-mentioned note, that Her Majesty's Government can not recognize that Russia and Japan have any interest in the seal fishery on the American side of the North Pacific, and that they can not, therefore, take part in any inquiry on the Pribilof Islands in which those powers are associated, but Her Majesty's Government is ready to appoint at once an agent to inquire, conjointly with an agent of the United States alone, as already proposed; and they would also be ready to consider any request from the two powers concerned to join in an inquiry on similar terms with Russia and Japan, respectively, in the Commander and Kurile islands.

I have, etc.,

GOUGH.

In answer to the resolution which I introduced in the Senate calling for information upon this subject the reply which I have presented was not mentioned. No wonder Mr. Olney does not refer to this humiliating answer to his letter or to his own letter of the 24th of June, which brought it to him; yet he was explicitly asked for this correspondence by the Senate on the 17th ultimo. Mr. Olney, in complying with the request of the Senate, omits any reference to this abortive correspondence on his part, which is cited above. In order that the record shall be clear, the following copy of his reply to the Senate resolution is given:

54TH CONGRESS, 2d Session.	SENATE.	DOCUMENT No. 142.

FEBRUARY 20, 1897.—Referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 17th instant, a report from the Secretary of State touching the reply of the British Government in regard to the failure of the negotiations of the Paris Tribunal to protect the fur-seal herd of Alaska.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 20, 1897.

The PRESIDENT:

The Secretary of State, to whom was addressed a resolution adopted in the Senate of the United States on the 17th instant, requesting him—

"To furnish for the information of the Senate a copy of the reply, if any has been made, to the letter addressed by Mr. Gresham to Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated 'Department of State, January 23, 1895' (it appears as No. 128, Senate Executive Document No. 67, Fifty-third Congress, third session, pages 160-161), calling the attention of the British Government to the utter failure of the regulations of the Paris Tribunal to protect the fur-seal herd of Alaska, and requesting a revision of the same"— has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its communication to the Senate in response to the resolution, a copy of the printed volume entitled "Papers relating to the foreign relations of the United States, with the Annual Message of the President transmitted to Congress December 2, 1895, Part I," wherein the paper so requested is found on pages 618-623. It is in the form of instructions addressed to the British ambassador in Washington, under date of May 17, 1895, of which a copy was handed to Mr. Acting Secretary Uhl by Sir Julian Pauncefote on May 27, 1895.

The same volume also contains a response in part to the described note of Mr. Secretary Gresham of January 23, 1895, being a note from Sir Julian Pauncefote to Mr. Gresham, transmitting copies of a report from the Canadian minister of marine and fisheries respecting the catch of the Canadian sealing fleet in the North Pacific during the season of 1894 (pages 593-608).

Reference may also be appropriately made to Mr. Acting Secretary Uhl's note to Sir Julian Pauncefote, No. 99, of May 10, 1895, reciting and supplementing the considerations advanced in Mr. Gresham's aforesaid note of January 23, 1895, to which at that time no answer had yet been made. (Ibid., pages 610-615.)

Respectfully submitted.

RICHARD OLNEY.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 19, 1897.

Accompaniment: Volume of Foreign Relations of the United States for 1895, Part I.

In the full understanding of this complete and humiliating failure of the State Department to secure any betterment of these idle, costly, and cruel Paris regulations, Mr. Hamlin, representing the Treasury Department and speaking for the State Department, appeared before the Ways and Means Committee, and, in answer to a question by the chairman, February 18, 1896, he made the following remarkable statement:

The CHAIRMAN. Have you anything further, Mr. Secretary?

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish simply to add that I am informed that negotiations are now pending in the State Department with regard to the appointment of a commission similar to that provided in this bill. I have, of course, no official knowledge on this point. It is purely a State Department matter. I do not know what the present status is. I merely desire to call to the attention of the committee the fact that the matter is now in the course of negotiation between Great Britain and the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The President says in his last annual message that on the 25th of January, 1895, the subject was presented to the British Government and a request was made to unite with this Government in formulating additional regulations for the preservation of seal life, and the President states in his message that up to the time he sent his message in, no response had been received from the British Government. Do you understand there has been a response received since?

Mr. HAMLIN. Yes, sir; I understand there has been a response to that.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is the case, we ought to know what the situation is. Have you anything further to suggest?

Now, why did Mr. Hamlin give the idea to that committee that he did not know that Great Britain had flatly refused to agree to any betterment of these shameful regulations of the Paris Tribunal? What was his object in holding out to that committee the idea that something of sense and decency was going to be done? Why did he not inform the committee that Mr. Gresham's request for a joint commission and a revision of those worthless regulations had been flatly refused? Mr. Hamlin certainly knew all about it, for he was in constant communication with the State Department, and was the authority for all the figures used in the Gresham, Uhl, and Olney letters which are cited above.

Mr. Hamlin was examined at length before this committee, and was followed by Professor Elliott, who evidently did not take much stock in the success of these negotiations. Although he could not have known anything about these State Department letters at the time, he made the following prophetic answer to Mr. DINGLEY:

Mr. Chairman, I desire, after having listened to Mr. Secretary Hamlin, to say very little upon those points upon which he has touched. He is generally wholly right in saying that the articles of the Paris Tribunal failed to serve the purpose for which they were created. Last year and in 1894 we had the most conclusive evidence of that failure, and that evidence was submitted to Great Britain January 23, 1895, by Secretary of State Gresham, and she was invited to join with us in a joint commission for the purpose of amending and changing those regulations. Up to this hour she has paid no attention to the request. It is perfectly natural that she will not until the last seal is gone. Canada holds this thing in her keeping; she is the one who beat us at Paris. She is too powerful at the British Court, and she will never let this thing go.

We can write these buttered letters, and I suppose they are passing now between the State Department and Lord Salisbury. They will not result in anything worthy of credit at all until we stop and finally untie our hands, and say to these Canadian butchers, "If you do not listen to decency, we will take this life from you, and take it before you can get it." That is the only argument to use. It is a waste of time to be polite and courteous like Mr. Hamlin. He is courteous, but if he had stood during the last eight years as I have and watched this brutal pelagic destruction he would not think as he does. We never have and we never can do anything by decent argument with these Canadian butchers, and the only way to do is to untie our hands by passing this Dingley bill; then we serve notice on them that their game is up. They know that our hands are tied by the law of 1868 and they are taking these seals to-day; therefore, until we step forward and release ourselves from this position those buttered letters will pass between the State Department and Lord Salisbury until the last seal is gone.

Now, one word about this question of the treaty. Our sole object in making the Paris award was to preserve that herd from slaughter on the high seas. Great Britain agreed with us that it should be saved on the high seas. She entered into this joint agreement with us with the implied faith on her part to us that it would save the herd, and we joined with her, and have faithfully executed the articles of this agreement. They have resulted in accomplishing exactly what they were created not to do. We asked Great Britain, in the light of that treaty faith, to help us to save this life by changing these rules. She refuses. Now, do we violate any portion of that treaty when we go where we have perfect right to take that life, knowing that it is, all of it, now going into the hands of these butchers? I do not understand how any man can hesitate for a moment in saying that we should not allow this disgraceful and indecent exhibition of pelagic seal butchery to continue; for I can not conceive of any reputable man who could get up and ask for it. No Englishman could get up and ask for it, and nobody will but a Canadian butcher. I think this bill should be passed as quickly as it can; it is the only thing to be done to save these seals.

Mr. Elliott very clearly did not know what the exact tenor of those letters to which I have referred was, which he rightly supposed were passing between Washington and London, or had passed; and he is now proven to have been entirely right in his emphatic reaffirmation at a later point in this examination, where he used the following words:

Professor ELLIOTT. Now, the idea of our standing here and paying annually half a million dollars to patrol the waters of the North Pacific and Bering Sea to facilitate the destruction of our own herd to-day in this indecent manner! This bill of Mr. DINGLEY is an act of mercy; it prevents this hideous torture of starving these young seals to death. It is an act of mercy and an act of decency, and, gentlemen, it ought to be passed to-day; and I think it would meet with acclamation all over the world. Talk about diplomacy and buttered letters! They will not amount to anything; this is a thing that ought to be done at once.

The CHAIRMAN. What is your judgment of the probability under the first section of this act of securing, without the pressure of the last section, from Great Britain, through a commission, some additional regulations that will really protect and save this herd?

Professor ELLIOTT. Nothing as long as such polite, decent arguments like Mr. Hamlin's prevail, but if we pass this bill——

Mr. STEELE. And become indecent?

Professor ELLIOTT. Not at all. We prevent the slow death and painful torture of these tens of thousands of motherless young by starvation on the islands. It is an act of mercy and decency.

Mr. STEELE. That is an act of decency.

Professor ELLIOTT. That is the best part of it. If the Canadians understand that we are going to take these seals—as soon as they find that out they will drop the subject, because it will not pay to go up there next summer. Then and only then they will listen to fair argument. If they find that we can do what we intend to do they will drop this thing at once; but, sir, as long as they know we stand here with our hands tied under the statutes of 1868, which this bill repeals, these sea wolves will stick on to that fur-seal hunt until the last seal is taken.

The emphatic and unanswerable address of Mr. Elliott before this committee February 18, 1896, in favor of the immediate action by Congress in passing the pending bill, so impressed that body that it unanimously agreed to the terms, and this bill was unanimously passed by the House on the 25th of February following; it came over to the Senate and, after full deliberation, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee reported it on March 4 without amendment, and it was made a special order for March 16, 1896.

Why was this bill not taken up? Solely because the State Department had given to certain Senators the idea that it was successfully "negotiating" with Great Britain, and, that being the case, the passage of this bill would "embarrass" the negotiations and probably defeat them.

Mr. Olney had been defeated "horse, foot, and dragoons" August 19, 1895, or six long months before this Dingley bill came into the Senate. He did not inform the Senate of that fact; and until these letters that prove it were published, a few weeks ago, it was impossible to show the utter failure of his efforts to better the shameful order of affairs on the seal islands of Alaska.

Nothing has been done last year; nothing but the useless and idle visit of several naturalists, who have been thrashing over the old seal straw that had been beaten out years ago. The American naturalists say that the present order of affairs is disgraceful and ruinous. The British naturalists deny it.

When the Canadians have taken the last of our seal herd under the existing regulations, they will then talk of revised regulations; and then, even then, they will agree to nothing that does not enrich them at our expense. They can do so if we sit down here and refuse to untie our own hands; they will do so just so long as we permit them.

I contend that if the existing condition of affairs is continued, the Treasury of the United States will not receive a dollar, not even the cost of watching the loss of this property during the next three years, and that at the end of that time there will be no seals left. The existing order of things will continue unless we pass some measure, emphatic in its terms, to dispose of this question. I insist that it is our duty to pass a bill providing for the killing of every seal on the islands unless the British Government will enter into some arrangement for the thorough protection of seal life. It is in the interest of humanity, it is in the interest of national honor to do so, and it is our duty to act at once.

If we send the commission to Alaska again this year it will be more than useless. The sending of a commission to these waters is simply used as a mask to shield the work of the destruction of this property by the Canadian fishermen. We do not prevent the destruction of our property. It is a useless expenditure of money. I think that the continuation of an effort to treat with the British Government longer upon these lines is a national disgrace. I present a table showing the number of seals now upon these islands.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator state the number in the aggregrate without any trouble?

Mr. PETTIGREW. About 400,000. From the best information I can obtain there are about 400,000 seals. The number last year was decreased about 87,000, 27,000 of which were the young pup seals which starved to death upon the rookeries.

Mr. GALLINGER. How much revenue would that yield to the Government?

Mr. PETTIGREW. If they were destroyed at once, it would yield a revenue of over $4,000,000. The table which I present shows all these facts and figures.

The result of a careful survey of the number of seals left on the Pribilof Islands last summer by the agents of the Treasury Department, headed by Dr. D. S. Jordan, is 450,000 seals of all ages, from newly born to aged adults. Elliott left 1,000,000 there in 1890, and 4,500,000 in 1874.

An expert analysis of the value of the residuum of the fur-seal herd, as it is left on the seal islands (Pribilof group), season of 1897-98.

NUMBER OF SEALS.

Class A—Male fur seals, 2 years old and upward	20,000
Class B—Male fur seals, 1 year old	50,000
Class C—Female fur seals, 2 years old and upward	180,000
Class D—Female fur seals, 1 year old	50,000
Total	300,000

VALUE.

(Markets of London, 1897-98, very much depressed, and quotations below are lower than normal.)

Class A—Average for single skins if killed on islands	$20.00
Class B—Average for single skins if killed on islands	10.00
Class C—Average for single skins if killed on islands	15.50
Class D—Average for single skins if killed on islands	10.00

PELAGIC VALUES.

Class A—Average for single skins, shot or speared	$10.00
Class B—Average for single skins, shot or speared	4.50
Class C—Average for single skins, shot or speared	10.00
Class D—Average for single skins, shot or speared	4.50

RECAPITULATION.

Value of fur-seal residuum if the herd is killed on land, season of 1898, to the public Treasury.

20,000 seals, class A	$400,000
50,000 seals, class B	500,000
180,000 seals, class C	2,790,000
50,000 seals, class D	500,000
Total value of residuum of Pribilof herd	4,190,000

Value of this residuum to the pelagic hunters.

If only class A seals are killed on land, as has been the rule up to date, then the female and yearling male residuum will be worth to pelagic hunters about as follows (market price remaining low as at present):

Catch of 1898—35,000 to 40,000 seals (chiefly class C)	$300,000
Catch of 1899—30,000 to 35,000 seals (chiefly class C)	250,000
Catch of 1900—20,000 to 25,000 seals (chiefly class C)	180,000
Catch of 1901—will be a failure to secure 5,000 seals.

If the existing order of affairs is continued, the Treasury of the United States will not receive a dollar beyond the cost of watching the loss of this property during the next three seasons.

The existing order of affairs will continue unless the Dingley bill is passed at once by the Senate.

Commissions like the one which the pending bill continues are worse than useless. They are shams, and only serve to mask the shame and misery and robbery of the Canadian work. They do not check it in the least, and only provoke the derision of the pelagic hunters.

The whole business as it is now conducted is a reproach to our Government and an imposition upon the Treasury.

PELAGIC, 1896.

Seal skins sold for an average of £1 10s. 4d., or $7.58 apiece.

They cost the captors $1 to $2 apiece, according to size.

They cost for transportation, vessel charges, etc., to London and sale, $1.50 to $2 apiece.

A total average cost of $4 to $4.50 apiece leaves a profit of $3 per skin.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I hope the amendment proposed by the committee will be adopted. If the proposition to kill off the seals is intended as a bluff, if I may be permitted to use a Western slang term, it is unbecoming a great nation, and it would subject us to ridicule which we would properly merit. If it is proposed, as a line of action whereby we intend to be governed, to kill the seals because we can not take them and put the value of their product into our own coffers, then I say it is a confession on our part that as a Government we are incompetent to deal with a great question of this magnitude. It is unbecoming in us as a civilized nation. The reason why I favor the adoption of the amendment proposed by the committee, which authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to continue in service a scientific commission to investigate this question, is because the commission appointed one year go under the act similar to this amendment has been productive of the greatest benefit to us. Under that law, which was passed by Congress one year ago, it was provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should provide for the employment of persons "to conduct a scientific investigation during the fiscal years 1896 and 1897 of the present condition of the fur-seal herds on the Pribilof, Commander, and Kurile islands in the North Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea." It then went on further to define their duties.

Under that resolution the Secretary of the Treasury appointed Dr. David Starr Jordan, president of the Leland Stanford Junior University, of Palo Alto, in California, one of the most distinguished scholars of the day, a scientist equal to the brightest in this or any other nation. He took as his assistants upon that commission, who were detailed for that purpose, two distinguished scientists connected with the United States National Museum, Leonhard Stejneger and Frederic A. Lucas. They went on board the United States Fish Commission vessel Albatross. The Canadian Government and the British Government accepted the invitation proposed by our Government.

They placed at our disposal the results obtained by their commissioners, as did the Canadian Government, although the investigations carried on by the commissions appointed by those two Governments were entirely independent from those of our commission. Their commissioners were men of national and international reputation as scientists. D'Arcy W. Thompson, of the University of Dundee, and Mr. Gerald E. H. Barrett-Hamilton, of Dublin, were commissioners for Great Britain, and Mr. James M. Macoun and Mr. Andrew Halkett, of Ottawa, were commissioners for Canada.

They were absent some two months upon this commission, and in this preliminary report made by Dr. Jordan, which I hold in my hand, there is a detailed account of their work. It has been productive, I say, of more good than any scientific expedition ever sent out by any Government that did not cost more money than this one cost our Government. Their instructions were fully and in detail given by the Secretary of the Treasury. I will read only one clause, as I do not wish to weary the Senate. It says:

> The principal object of this investigation is to determine by precise and detailed observations, first, the present condition of the American fur-seal herd; second, the nature and imminence of the causes, if any, which appear to threaten its extermination; third, what, if any, benefits have been secured to the herd through the operation of the act of Congress and act of Parliament based upon the award by the Paris Tribunal of Arbitration; fourth, what, if any, additional protective measures on land or at sea, or changes in the present system of regulations as to the closed season, prohibited zone, prohibition of firearms, etc., are required to insure the preservation of the fur-seal herd.

This report goes on in detail to recite and give a daily journal of their observations. They have collated and presented to the country the habits of the seals and the conditions on the islands where the seals migrate during the summer months, how they return, and how the poachers have made prey upon them. The result is summed up here in a few words by Dr. Jordan. He says:

> That the way is open to a permanent, honorable, and amicable adjustment the present writer does not doubt. The facts in the case no longer admit of cavil. The high character and unquestioned ability of the commission of investigation appointed by Her Majesty's foreign office in 1896 afford a guarantee of judicial fairness in any future action of the British Government.

I am informed by private sources that the commissioners are in full accord with Dr. Jordan's views upon this great and important question not only affecting the interest of our country, but the commerce of the world, for every seal skin that is taken and sent to the market produces that much more of value and benefit in the great commercial markets of the world, as well as the useful employment afforded to the persons who take it and cure it. Dr. Jordan sums up his criticism as follows:

> I may here express my feeling that the monstrous proposition to destroy the seal herd because it has been injured by pelagic sealing ought not to be considered for a moment. It would be a confession of impotence unworthy of a great and civilized nation. Its result would be to transfer to ourselves any odium which has deservedly fallen upon those who would recklessly destroy a most useful and a most interesting race of animals.

There is the testimony of one of the leading scientists of the day. Mr. President, it should weigh in the scale of our calm and deliberate judgment against the theoretical proposition of some one who has imagined that we are suffering our honor to be tainted because some British vessels have on the high seas taken herds of seal that belong, we claim, to us. But if all our efforts fail, if we can not come to an amicable arrangement with Great Britain and Canada and Russia in reference to the zone where the fur seals inhabit and where they migrate to and from, and can not arrange with those countries so as to protect the seal, we have a plan whereby we can preserve them ourselves.

It is like the old Spanish Don who has his great cattle ranch. He brands his cattle and they go off into other places, and if they are taken by others the skin belongs to him and they are accused justly and convicted of felony. But imitating that, we can do what is more practical. The seal feed upon the water and after gorging themselves with fishes and animalculæ they sleep and float upon the waters. In that condition the poacher approaches them and with spear or gun he takes them. He does it because he wants the fur skin, which is valuable, and in doing that, as the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] says, he has destroyed perhaps the females which are on the islands considered sacred and are never permitted to be taken by our Government agents who are there to protect the interests of the Government in the seals.

It has been proposed by practical men who understand the fur seals, their habits, ways, and customs, that by branding the female seals the fur skin becomes worthless. It does not injure the animal. The result is that the incentive which is given to the poacher to go clandestinely and take the seals upon the high sea no longer exists, for there is no profit in the enterprise to him. Then by herding the male seals upon the islands for a few months or weeks we have nothing to fear from the poachers, for it can no longer become to them a profitable venture or enterprise.

So far as it has cost our Government for patrolling the seas we have our revenue cutters. The responsibility of caring for our crews and their equipment is just the same whether anchored in the placid waters of Puget Sound or San Francisco Bay or sailing upon the ocean. The only difference is in the fuel they consume. They should go to sea. They should patrol those seas, not only to prevent poachers from taking the fur seal, but for the purpose of preventing smuggling into the States of our country and the Territory of Alaska.

The fur seals of Alaska have been a profitable venture to the Government. From 1870 to 1890 the Government received in royalty for seal furs over $6,000,000, and to-day our contract with those who are leasing the islands is $60,000 per annum and $9 for every fur seal taken. If they have not paid, as the Senator from South Dakota charges they have not, surely they are indebted to our Government and the officers of the law have not enforced it.

Mr. PEFFER. How many seals are there now?

Mr. PERKINS. Dr. Jordan estimates that there are from 350,000 to 400,000 seals that they have already counted there. I have not been through the report in detail, but it is very, very interesting.

With this light before us, Mr. President, I say it would be unwise and impolitic for this Government to discontinue this paltry appropriation of $5,000 and not adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota. We should be animated by higher motives than the little boy who said that if he could not have the candy himself he would spoil it, so that no one else could eat it. This is a great enterprise, and I should blush with shame for my country's honor if we should publish here that because you have been taking seals that we think belong to us, or that the result of the arbitration commission with England was not what we hoped or expected it would be, then we will kill off the seals, and nobody shall have the benefit of them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is Professor Jordan's report a public document?

Mr. PERKINS. It is. It is entitled Observations on the Fur Seals of the Pribilof Islands; Preliminary Report. I succeeded in receiving an advance copy only yesterday.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is published by the Government?

Mr. PERKINS. It is published by the Government. I want to repeat, that he as authority is second to none in this country, and he is recognized as the peer of the scientists of other countries.

I do not wish to weary the Senate; but I am somewhat familiar by my long personal observation with the habits of the seals. I have been in the Bering Sea time and time again. I am familiar with our great possessions in Alaska, and therefore I can not refrain from replying to my friend from South Dakota, who, I think, has never been to any of those islands, and who, as I know, is animated, as he says, by philanthropic purposes that the poor young seal pups may not perish. I think we can find philanthropic work to engage our attention at home, caring for the poor dumb beasts here, and let the seals go for one year more. I hope the committee amendment will be adopted. I have before me a letter, received a few days since, from Dr. Jordan, in which he says:

> England shows every indication of a desire to do the fair thing. This intention is especially clear in the fact that she has sent an honorable commission, which is familiar with all the facts ascertained by us, the head of the commission having been with me every day throughout the summer, and he and I being in agreement on all questions of policy as well as on all matters of fact, so far as was developed by our conversations during the expedition.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, let us see what the situation is that we have to contend with. In 1893 we made an agreement, or, rather, we had a tribunal meet at Paris, and they made certain regulations or formulated certain provisions by which it was proposed to protect the seal life in those waters, and it was made unlawful to kill any seals within a circle of 60 miles about the island. We supposed that that would protect the animals; that the limit of 60 miles would give them a sufficient area in which to fish and feed their young. After those arrangements were made we found that the fish were not within the 60-mile circle. We found that one of these animals can swim 20 miles an hour at sea. We found that they go 200 miles from the island for fish, and they leave their pups upon the island. Each year since 1893 not less than 20,000 of the pups have starved to death because their mothers were killed at sea.

Now, the proposition is made to continue this condition until they all disappear. The proposition is made that the seals shall be killed one year after another, while their children starve to death, and thus serve the purposes of humanity. The simple proposition is, that we shall provide that if the British Government will enter into an agreement to protect this seal life they shall be protected, but if they will not we will destroy the entire life at once, and prevent this disgraceful scene of starvation; that is all. It seems to me it far more accords with the sentiment of philanthropy that this should be done than that the spectacle should be exhibited to the world of the starvation of the pup seals each season. Let us see what Mr. Jordan says about this matter:

SEALS KNOWN TO HAVE DIED ABOUT THE ISLANDS OF ST. PAUL AND ST. GEORGE FROM VARIOUS CAUSES, SEASON OF 1896.

Cows found dead on rookeries	131
Bulls	26
Bachelors	3
Pups, from trampling, drowning, straying, etc	11,045
Pups, from starvation	16,019
Bachelors (quota)	30,000
Pelagic catch	29,396
Total	86,624

The same thing will go on during the coming season, and what is Mr. Jordan's remedy? It is that we shall brand the female seals, so that the poachers will not capture them, because then, I suppose, the seal skins will be worthless. In the first place, perhaps it would be well to describe how the seals are killed. They employ Indians and white men who are expert spearsmen. Only a few days ago a large number of the most expert spearsmen in the world, who had been engaged in spearing porpoises in the Northern Atlantic, were taken across the continent to join the sealing fleet this year and engage in the business of the Canadian poachers. They go out in small boats and spear the seals. I suppose that Professor Jordan would have the seals come up to the boat and be looked over to see whether they were branded before the spearing operation was performed. The proposition is simply ridiculous.

Mr. President, this is our property, and if we have not courage enough as a people to protect it, if we have so much time to make arbitration treaties with Great Britain while this property is being destroyed and our fleet gather around the island and officially look on and see it done, it seems to me we had better remove the cause of irritation and take the property ourselves.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, having been one of the board of arbitrators that settled, or supposed they had settled, this seal question, I have always had a delicacy in discussing it in the Senate, because it is the judgment of that board that seems to have led to the difficulty.

The board of arbitrators, in fixing the boundary within which seals should not be captured around the Pribilof Islands, adopted a 60-mile limit. Mr. Blaine, while Secretary of State, before the board met, had offered to the British Government to settle all of the controversy in regard to fur-seal fishing if they would agree to a 30-mile limit around those islands. As a matter of course, the arbitration was a little embarrassed by that offer of the American Government. It did not then appear, nor do I believe it appears now, that the female or mother seals, after their young had been born on this group of islands, would go 60 miles outside of the limit of those islands for the purpose of feeding. It is very true that by the evidence, which at the time we were investigating this subject was very meager, although there were 1,100 witnesses examined, it did not appear that the fish upon which these seals fed changed their feeding ground. The fish assemble in Bering Sea in very large quantities. Enormous masses of fish assemble there, and the seals of course follow them up and feed upon them. The fish change their feeding grounds, it now appears, sometimes as much as 150 miles away from the island, but before the commission met it was generally believed, and it was so testified by a great many witnesses, that the feeding of the seals was done somewhere within 30 or 40 miles of the island.

It may be that the trouble we have reached in this case has been due entirely to the migratory habits of the schools of fish; that they changed their feeding grounds and have therefore gone outside of the 60-mile limit, and the seals have followed them outside of the 60-mile limit, and there they have fallen within the reach of the spears and guns, or spears now, of the pelagic hunters. If that is true, it is something that can not be provided for in any other way than in the method Russia provided when she had possession of the Bering Sea.

I feel that the Government of the United States occupies an awkward predicament about this business, and I think that the attitude that we now hold toward it is one that has resulted from the mistake of the State Department and of the Treasury Department in insisting that the Government of Great Britain would join with them in regulations which were calculated to execute the decree or the award of that arbitration. That is where I believe the trouble is now and has been all the time since the award was delivered.

To run over the facts about this matter very briefly, Russia, for one hundred years before we got the ownership of those islands from her, had policed Bering Sea, which is almost an inclosed sea, and had kept out of it all intruders who might be there for the purpose of capturing the sea otter or the fur seal. No government in the world objected to it, and Russia exercised a free hand in the protection of the interests of her people and her Government in the Bering Sea waters.

That was the condition of this question at the time we acquired the ownership of those islands. It was something like twenty or twenty-five years later than the treaty of 1824 between Great Britain and Russia in regard to the right of fishing in the Bering Sea. That right at the time was directed to and was really confined to the whale fishing, and not to the fur-seal fishery, for the fur-seal hunting at that time was not designated as a fishery and never was so designated until by some unfortunate use of language that phrase was put into the treaty of arbitration.

Now, there was Russia occupying Bering Sea with her power of policing those seas for the purpose of protecting that great industry on the islands, which is of such a peculiar nature that it can not be protected in any other way than by exercising over Bering Sea a police jurisdiction, and you have got to take in the whole of that sea in order to make the policing effectual.

Russia gained in this way a prescriptive right by the common consent of the nations of the world thus to regulate and thus to protect that very important industry upon those islands, and she, following that prescriptive right, excluded all nations from that privilege, and nobody objected. The United States, however, became the purchaser of Alaska and of the Pribilof group of islands, the Aleutian Peninsula, and all that vast and very valuable body of land lying on the northwest of the Canadian Dominion. There is no doubt that in this acquisition the Government of the United States very greatly excited the jealousy and the anger of the British Government. The moment we took possession of the islands, and before we had even an opportunity to pass a law for their protection, the Canadian pelagic sealers went in there and commenced raiding the seal herds not merely upon the sea, but also upon the land, and in the first year of their raiding they destroyed 300,000 seals of that herd.

Thereupon Congress waked up and commenced providing very stringent legislation, applicable not to our people alone, but to all people, forbidding pelagic hunting anywhere in Bering Sea and within our limits, and our limits run on a line of longitude far to the west of the Pribilof Islands. In the exercise of the duty devolved upon the Executive by that act of Congress, some twenty-four or twenty-five ships which were out there violating that statute were seized—the first ship seized being an American ship owned in San Francisco; and so he followed on afterwards until we had seized and confiscated several of our own ships. But some twenty-two ships of Great Britain were seized and held subject to confiscation, and some of them were confiscated for violating those statutes of the United States.

Thereupon arose a controversy between Great Britain and the United States as to the international, or the oceanic rights, I will call it, of pelagic fishing, as they term it. They claimed that all of the open waters of the world were open to their fishing, that they could go anywhere they pleased to catch fish in any part of the sea the world round, and it was their privilege secured to them under the laws of nations. We denied it. We put our denial upon the ground, first, that we had a property in the seals themselves growing out of the peculiar habits of those animals which amounted to domestication, that in consequence of their natural habits they were really domestic animals and belonged to the Government of the United States, and in that ownership our Government excluded not merely the citizens of other nations from destroying these animals or capturing them, but prevented our own people from capturing them. The laws enacted were in the nature of game laws, and they applied to all the people in the world, our own included.

The controversy got to be a very sharp one. Vessel after vessel was captured and carried into our ports for confiscation. Thereupon the two Governments, finding themselves unable to settle the controversy, resorted to the favorite and famous project of arbitration.

At that time there was a strong party in the United States who demanded that the Government should plant itself squarely upon the same rights that we had acquired from Russia and vindicate them by the strong arm of power, if it was necessary to be done. There was another party in this country that you might call the business interests party, or the peace party, who contended that that great subject should be submitted to arbitration.

Thereupon the two Governments agreed to a treaty of arbitration, accompanied with a modus vivendi, which lasted, first, until they could make the treaty, and then lasted afterwards until the treaty could be executed by getting the award from the tribunal. They formulated a submission. They compelled the Tribunal of Arbitration, instead of insisting upon the rights of America that were peculiar to her, to plant themselves upon the international law, and when we came to look through the international law, which was the guide of our action, we found no precedent, and in the international law, if you find no precedent, you find no law, for the international law is nothing more nor less than an aggregation of precedents growing out of the practice of nations. There was the commission then chained down to the international law without a precedent, Great Britain claiming the universal right of fishing and we denying it upon the basis that the property was of such a peculiar character that the fishing laws did not apply to it. Well, as is usual in such cases, where the arbitration is made up of European arbitrators, the decision was against us, and it will be so every time. This is the "advance agent of prosperity" on the subject of arbitration.

We find ourselves here to-night discussing the question whether we shall destroy these seals in order to get rid of that question, on the one hand, or whether we shall brand the female seals in such a way that the pelts, when taken, will be of no value, and therefore the industry will cease. Has all this resulted merely from that decision? It has not, because that commission, in forming rules and regulations for the government of pelagic hunting, went outside of international law and established such regulations as they believed, upon the evidence of 1,100 witnesses at the time, would be effectual to prevent any hunting of any important character, at least in Bering Sea; they forbade the use of firearms in Bering Sea in the destruction of seal life. They also limited, as I have said, a territory there of 60 miles, reaching out into the ocean in every direction from these islands, within which nobody, not an American citizen or anybody else, could be permitted to kill a seal under any circumstances, and that was supposed at the time to be an ample protection.

Was it? It was, if the Government of Great Britain had exercised common honesty in the execution of the award. She turned the Canadians loose upon our property there and from the moment we acquired possession, and when our statute was passed to protect that property against our people and her people, she denied their authenticity under the law of nations. We had a controversy about it; we had arbitration; we got the award; we got the regulations pledging each Government to enact statutes and to make subordinate regulations for the purpose of executing this general decree; and now what is the result? Here we are lamenting that the award was made, and trying to find some way of escaping from it. We first tolerated this state of facts, that while we were keeping eight or ten—as many as ten ships in that country—policing those seas, Great Britain has never furnished but one, and that ship stayed in the harbor at one of those Alaskan ports for more than two-thirds of the fishing season that she was sent out to protect.

Here is a Government now professing an earnest desire to protect these fur seals, uniting with us in an award. The award is rendered, requiring her to join with us in regulations for the purpose of protecting the seals; but when we come to the test Great Britain declines to do it. She made regulations during one season, and then declared that she would make no more; that she would not go any further in the direction of trying to protect those fur seals in the execution of that award; and here we find that the first difficulty that arises really between the United States and Great Britain, requiring action on our part, is a difficulty arising out of the nonexecution of an award. It is my deliberate judgment that if we get a general arbitration covenant with Great Britain, or with any other power, agreeing in advance to arbitrate all questions, the result will be just what is shown on this floor to-night—that we shall have more trouble in executing the award than we had in getting it, a great deal more.

There is to-day more danger of disturbance of friendly relations between the United States and Great Britain for her failure to execute that award than there ever was in the seal question when it first originated. If the Government of the United States had planted itself where it took ground in the beginning of Mr. Cleveland's Administration, upon the declaration then made of its right to seize and hold and confiscate the pelagic sealers there, and had maintained it, there would have been no fur-seal question disturbing us to-night, and we should have millions of fur seals instead of hundreds or thousands—a very valuable industry, one that ought not to be allowed to perish for the sake of civilization, for the sake of taste, and, above all, for the sake of a class of animals who have a peculiar domesticity imposed upon them by nature, which leads them to shelter upon those islands during the summer months, and makes them more dependent upon the protection of man than the cattle which range across the prairies of this country.

Well, here we are. I do not think that either of the expedients which have been offered here to-night are at all valuable. The destruction of the seals, however, in order to escape from the difficulty, strikes my mind with abhorrence. I can not realize the thought at all that it is proper in the United States Government to go and destroy the seals absolutely, and forever destroy that species of animal.

Mr. CARTER. On that point I should like to ask the Senator, who has given much thought to this matter, if the destruction of seal life would not at the same time destroy the only means of livelihood possessed by the Indians on the Aleutian Islands, and thus render them solely dependent on the charity of the Government?

Mr. MORGAN. They are dependent now on the charity of the Government. We have taken the subject out of their hands, and, if I may so say, consecrated by law this entire seal family or seal species as a resource of the Treasury. There is no citizen in the United States, not even those people who live in the Aleutian Islands, or any other person, who has a right to kill a seal. That is done entirely under the authority of the law and by the agents of the United States, and, if it is not done in that way, it is done unlawfully.

Mr. CARTER. But if the Senator will permit me, is it not true that the Alaskan Fur Seal Company have a contract with the Government, whereby they are permitted to kill a certain number of seals annually; and do not they employ the inhabitants of those islands almost exclusively in the work to be performed, and allow them of the seals killed certain portions for sustenance?

Mr. MORGAN. That is very true, and an important part of their support is the flesh of a certain class of seals that they eat during the killing season. We, by taking possession of those seals and declaring Government ownership over them, have come under an obligation to which we have always been faithful, of supporting those people; and it has cost a good deal of money to support those Aleuts up there, who have been engaged in seal hunting heretofore, and have lived largely on the products of their fisheries and hunting.

Mr. President, to return to the point I was making, one proposition offered is to destroy the seals absolutely. That looks like cutting off your nose to spite your face; it looks as if it were a timid way of treating a question of this kind, unbecoming to the United States; and it is cruel, if cruelty to animals enters into the consideration at all, because it destroys a very useful, a very innocent, and a very attractive species of animal. I do not know that I would vote for a law which would destroy any class of animals capable of contributing to the comforts and elegancies of life, and to the sustentation, incidentally, of the people who depend upon this thing for their livelihood. I do not think that I could vote for such a bill as that.

Then the idea of branding them and sending the females out is only to deter the pelagic hunters from killing the seals, because if killed, the pelt would be of no value. I think that would be a very difficult thing to do, and would lead to great complications and great troubles.

The thing to do is this: Let the Government of the United States require of Great Britain to carry this contract out in good faith. Why are we dodging and shying around the question all the time, when we know it is her fault, her deliberate fault, in refusing to execute the award according to its terms and its spirit also that this trouble has arisen. Great Britain, if she is in earnest about this, and honest or sincere about it, will come forward and join with us in good faith in executing this award. She does not do it. She sits by there and encourages this traffic, encourages it in every way. When we have seized vessels and confiscated them, Great Britain, in order to prevent her subjects in Canada from losing anything and from being discovered in pelagic hunting, actually voted the money and paid the cost. Those vessel owners now demand of us an arbitration. While we had them under condemnation, the Dominion Government voted the money and paid those people for those raids upon us; and it is now demanding the money back, and I suppose under existing circumstance will get it.

What are we to think of the attitude of the Government of the United States seizing over twenty-two British ships and carrying them into port for confiscation; and then they got us at last, when the pressure got to be pretty heavy and the resistance was somewhat strong on the part of Great Britain, where we would seize a vessel and put it again in the possession of its own captain and tell him to go back to one of his own ports and report there to the British authorities?

We would seize him and then abandon him. Here is where our spirit failed, and there is where the blunder was committed. We ought then, in the beginning of this controversy, to have stood by our statute, which is yet unrepealed on the statute books, and we should have declared that it was the duty of this Government, which involved its honor, to see its laws executed in that Bering Sea.

Now mark, if you please, the march of conviction on this subject of prescription rights. When I was in the Bering Sea Tribunal, and his honor Judge Harlan was there, I made the point that we were protected by prescription in our rights, and that it was a good doctrine of international law. Well, when we came to look through the international law, we could not find a precedent. We could find the principle everywhere in the municipal laws of all countries, in the common law of England—which is common to Great Britain and the United States—we could find the principle there, but we could not find any decision under international law sustaining the doctrine of prescription. When, however, we got to dealing with Venezuela, our Government insisted that the doctrine of prescription should come in, and Great Britain consented to it, making the prescription fifty years instead of sixty-five, you observe, so that the line that had been run by Schomburgk, and upon which Great Britain also planted herself, should necessarily become the line of division between Venezuela and Great Britain.

So the doctrine of prescription has come into being, and will determine that question in Venezuela; but it could not be tolerated that it should have any effect upon American rights in Bering Sea when we succeeded by purchase to the rights of Russia, although Russia had exercised this power without denial for a century before we got in there.

That is the picture; that is the situation. I think, Mr. President, that in continuation of the examination which has been heretofore made, which seems to have been very successful in ascertaining the actual situation in the island, the amount of seal life there is there and the losses that are being sustained—21,000 pups perishing there on the shore in a season—I think we had better continue this commission for the purpose not only of informing ourselves, but of informing Russia and France, who are interested in this question, and the whole civilized world as to the conduct of this peace-loving, arbitration-seeking Government of Great Britain. We had better continue it and get some more information. It invoives only an expenditure of six or eight thousand dollars, I believe, and the labors bestowed there seem not to have been entirely completed.

I think the true policy for us now to observe is to continue that investigation, and then I do hope that the incoming Administration will have the fortitude—if I may use that expression in connection with such a subject—to insist that Great Britain shall comply with that award, and shall assist faithfully in its execution. If that is done, in my opinion we shall have no more trouble about the fur seal. By the time Great Britain is compelled to go to the expense of keeping a fleet there—such a one as we keep there—to protect the fur seals against the raids of her own people, then, perhaps, Great Britain will change her policy on that subject and conclude at last that it is best to let us alone. But we are peace seekers, or we have got to be since the beginning of the last Administration, when we shrank from a duty that we entered upon so boldly. We have got to be a nation of people who are all the time seeking shelter and cover. In other words, we are taking that attitude which was taken by an unfortunate class of American people in the time of the Revolutionary war, who sought British protection. I do not want any British protection; I want American protection. I want the rights of these people as they are guaranteed to us by the laws of nations and also by the award of that tribunal faithfully executed. I am in search of information now, in order to plant our feet upon firm ground, so that this incoming Administration may be able to demand of Great Britain that she shall perform her duty. Therefore, I am in favor of the Senate amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe the amendments which were passed over have now been acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 5, line 12, after the word "expedient," I move to insert the word "and;" so as to read, "shall deem it expedient and in the interest of the public service."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move, in line 14, of the same clause, to insert the word "and" after the word "brick;" so as to read: "the substitution of stone for brick and terra cotta in the public building now in process of construction at Racine, Wis."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 63, line 21, I move to strike out the word "reappropriates" and insert the word "appropriates;" and in line 22 to strike out the words "and twenty-five;" so as to read: "which appropriates the sum of $100,000 for the survey of public lands within the limits of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 68, line 4, after the words "United States," I move to insert "including the collection of statistics of gold and silver;" and in the same line to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty-five;" so as to read:

For the preparation of the report of the mineral resources of the United States, including the collection of statistics of gold and silver, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 88, line 13, after the word "Buffalo," I move to insert the words "including necessary observations and investigations in connection with the preservation of such channel depth."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 94 I move to insert the proviso which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 94, in line 6, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of War may carry to completion the present project of improving the falls of the Ohio River and Indiana Chute Falls, Ohio River, by contract, as provided in the "Act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," which became a law June 3, 1896; or the necessary materials may be purchased, and the work done otherwise than by contract, in his discretion, if more economical and advantageous to the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. This is an amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] as a proviso to this appropriation, which has been reported from the Committee on Commerce, and it is the wish of the Engineer Department that it shall be inserted in the bill, in order that they may carry on this work otherwise than by contract, if they shall desire to do so.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask the Senator from Iowa whether that would still leave the limit at $300,000?

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment does not change the amount appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 97, after line 9, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 97, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

The unexpended balance of the appropriation for the improvement of the Suwanee River, in Florida, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended for deepening the west pass of the Suwanee River at its mouth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 73, line 10, after the word "transportation," in the clause making appropriations for reindeer in Alaska, I move to insert "whether by a vessel of the United States or otherwise."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 86, after line 10, I move to insert as a separate paragraph what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 10, on page 86, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of War, through the commissioners of the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park, to improve the Lafayette or State road in Georgia from Lee & Gordon's mill, in that State, to the town of Lafayette, $26,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On page 90, after line 4, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 4, on page 90, it is proposed to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause to be made a survey and estimate of cost of deepening and widening the straight channel in Maumee River and Bay, with a view to obtaining and permanently securing a channel of a uniform width of 400 feet and 20 feet deep at low water, the cost of said survey to be paid out of money already appropriated for the improvement of said channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to insert after line 3, on page 56, what I send to the desk, which will be agreed to without any objection, I am sure.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 3, on page 56, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the attorney to send copies of all acts of Congress to all judges of United States courts and the Territories, $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. On page 125, line 2, after the word "dollars," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 125, line 2, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

That the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint three commissioners, whose duty it shall be, under the direction of the Attorney-General, to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States. That they shall proceed with their work as rapidly as may be consistent with thoroughness, and shall report the result of their labors to the Attorney-General when completed, to be by him laid before Congress, and shall make such other reports during the progress of their work as they shall see fit to the Attorney-General, to be laid before Congress at his discretion. That their report shall be so made as to indicate any proposed change in the substance of existing law, and shall be accompanied by notes which shall briefly and clearly state the reasons for any proposed change. That each of said commissioners shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, which, as also a sum sufficient to pay the expenses of the commissioners, to be approved and certified to by the Attorney-General, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I offer an amendment to come in after line 22, on page 103.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 22, on page 103, it is proposed to insert:

That for the purpose of ascertaining the character and value of the improvements made at the Pass of Aransas, on the Gulf coast of Texas, by the Aransas Pass Harbor Company, a board of three engineers shall be appointed by the President from the Engineer Corps of the Army; and such board shall personally make examination of the work done by said company for the purpose of deepening the channel and removing the bar at or near said Pass of Aransas. It shall be the duty of the board so constituted to report the depth of water upon the bar at the time of their examination; the character of the work done and the cost of same: the character and cost of any unfinished work contracted to be done by said company; the probable result upon the deepening of the channel across the bar of any work contracted for or contemplated by said company, but not then finished; the value to the Government of all work done or contracted to be done by said company for the purpose of deepening said channel or removing said bar, and such other information as they may deem essential to be known to Congress in making future provision for the purchase of said works by the United States Government. Said board shall report the result of their investigation to the Secretary of War on or before the first Monday in December, 1897, and the Secretary shall immediately transmit the report to Congress; and $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of the said board and for the services of the said engineers, the amount of such compensation for said services to be fixed by the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. As chairman of the Committee on Commerce, I desire to offer three or four amendments for absent Senators. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] is detained from the Chamber by ill health, and on page 89, after the word "dollars" in line 2, in the appropriation for improving Cumberland Sound, Georgia and Florida, I move to add the words "be immediately available."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 97, after line 16, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to investigate the extent of the obstruction of the navigable waters of Florida, Louisiana, and other South Atlantic and Gulf States by the aquatic plant known as the water hyacinth, and to perform such experimental work as he shall deem necessary to determine some suitable and feasible plan or method of checking and removing such obstacle, so far as it is a hindrance to interstate or foreign commerce, and to report the results of such investigation and experimental work; and the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the cost thereof.

Mr. FRYE. After the amendment just adopted, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted, on page 97, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to cause a survey to be made to examine into the feasibility and advisability of the improvement of the waterway beginning at a point at or near the site selected for Lock No. 13, on the Warrior River, and continuing up Valley River from its mouth, following the general course of said stream, to Bessemer, Ala.; thence up the valley to Birmingham, and beyond, to Five Mile Creek, at a point where sufficient head can be obtained to supply water for that part of said route between Five Mile Creek and Bessemer, Ala., so as to secure a channel to have a minimum depth of 6 feet and be at least 50 feet in width at the water line, and to ascertain the cost of such improvement; and the cost of such survey shall be defrayed from the unexpended balance of the funds heretofore appropriated for the improvement of the Black Warrior River from Tuscaloosa to Daniels Creek.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask my colleague whether that is a case of a continuing contract?

Mr. FRYE. No. It provides for a survey. It is practically nothing but a survey.

Mr. HALE. For an entirely new work?

Mr. FRYE. No; it has been surveyed before, but this is connecting with the Tombigbee River the river which runs from Birmingham down.

Mr. HALE. It is a provision for such a survey as is ordinarily put on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. FRYE. Such surveys as are ordinarily put on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. HALE. This will be a pretty good river and harbor bill.

Mr. FRYE. I am inclined to think it will be.

Mr. HALE. I think so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. Following the amendment which has just been adopted, it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of a dredge boat for use in the harbor improvement at Sabine, Tex., $100,000, and for the expense of operating the same during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, $30,000; in all, $130,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I understood that was to be a proviso to the appropriation for Sabine Pass.

Mr. FRYE. That it should be paid out of the main appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. FRYE. No; the committee cut that down $100,000. I did not intend to offer it in that way. The Senator misunderstood me, if he thought I did.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a separate and independent appropriation?

Mr. FRYE. It is a separate and independent appropriation. They could not afford to drop out $130,000 more.

Mr. HALE. What is to be done with the dredge?

Mr. FRYE. It is to operate between the jetties and keep it clear. It is very strongly recommended by the War Department.

Mr. HALE. The funds for this harbor are all included in the other appropriation, and they are under contract.

Mr. FRYE. They are all under contract.

Mr. HALE. What fund would the Secretary have with which to keep this boat employed?

Mr. FRYE. Only the appropriation which is made in the amendment. There is an appropriation of $30,000 in the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. HALE. It is an additional appropriation?

Mr. FRYE. It is.

Mr. HALE. It does not go with the continuing contract?

Mr. FRYE. It does not.

Mr. HALE. It is new matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I offer an amendment as to the public building at Salt Lake City, to come in after line 2, on page 7.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to expend the $75,000 heretofore (in 1896) appropriated for the purchase of site and commencement of construction of a public building for court-house and post-office at Salt Lake City, the entire cost of site and building not to exceed $500,000.

This sum was voted in the last appropriation bill, but it has not been used by the Secretary of the Treasury, and I simply ask that he may be directed to proceed or it may be reserved as an appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Utah whether the limit of cost of the ground and building was placed at $500,000 in the last act?

Mr. BROWN. Not in the last amendment, but in the bill that passed the Senate, yes; and there is an estimate by the Supervising Architect and by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will consent to strike out that portion of the amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly, if the Senator asks it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think we ought to do that in this bill, whatever else we do.

Mr. BROWN. I am willing that it shall be stricken out.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to say before it is read, as an excuse in regard to it, that the Secretary gives as a reason why he does not expend the $75,000 in purchasing a site that he does not know the limit of the cost of the building.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator's amendment is to authorize and direct him to purchase a site, and I take it that is as far as the Senator wants to go this year.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator is right. That is as far as I care to go this year, but at the same time the objection would be overcome by suggesting the limit of cost. That is the reason.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to expend the $75,000 heretofore (in 1896) appropriated for the purchase of site and commencement of construction of a public building, court-house, and post-office at Salt Lake City, Utah.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. GEAR. I offer an amendment to be inserted after line 7, on page 96.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

Provided further, That the sum of $50,000 of said sum shall be expended for continuing the work of constructing artificial banks between the mouth of Flint River and running along the west bank of the Mississippi River to the month of the Iowa River.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask that the committee amendment on page 135, beginning in line 12, may be reconsidered, so that I may offer a substitute for a part of it from the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer a substitute for that part of the amendment beginning with the "And" in line 15.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the word "And," in line 15, page 135, down to and including the word "proper," in line 21, and insert:

And the Public Printer will bind and deliver to the compiler of Messages and Papers of the Presidents 500 copies of said compilation bound in the same style of the personal copies of Senators, Members, and Delegates. The compiler shall prepare a full table of contents and a complete index for such compilation, and he shall be paid therefor by the Public Printer out of the appropriation for public printing and binding such sum as the Joint Committee on Printing shall decide to be just and proper.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. Also from the committee, I offer another amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

For constructing and equipping a steam revenue cutter for service on the Atlantic coast of the United States, with headquarters at the port of New York, the sum of $175,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. On page 55, after the word "dollars," in line 12, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

All immigrants upon their arrival in the United States shall be brought for proper examination to the place or places designated for that purpose.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am authorized by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to move the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

The Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds and the Supervising Architect of the Treasury and the Architect of the Capitol are hereby constituted and appointed a committee to examine sites and consider the prices of lots suitable for the memorial building proposed to be built by the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, to commemorate the services of the heroes of the Revolutionary war; and said committee shall make a report to Congress as early as possible.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to offer an amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, after the word "dollars," in line 24, it is proposed to insert:

For public building at Norfolk, Va.: For extension of limit of cost of site and building from $150,000 to $270,000, $100,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I reserve the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. I will state that the public building at Norfolk, Va., was provided for by a bill passed in 1891; the site therefor was purchased and the building begun. But the Department recommended, the suggestion coming from them and not being inspired in Congress or elsewhere, that such a building as was needed at Norfolk would require more money. A bill to provide for such a building, fireproof and suitable to accommodate the various establishments at Norfolk, accordingly passed the Senate at its last session, and still lies unpassed in the House.

This building is estimated for by the Department, and the amendment is recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It is an amendment in due course of business and is called for by the necessities of the occasion.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt that everything the Senator from Virginia has stated is true. Yet the amendment proposes a change of existing law. If we should begin to enlarge the limits of cost of public buildings already in course of construction or where sites have been purchased, it would be impossible for us to have any end to this bill.

Mr. DANIEL. That is done in the pending bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I just asked the Senator from Utah [Mr. BROWN] to strike out a provision of that sort in an amendment he offered. I make the point of order that the amendment proposed changes existing law, and therefore can not go on the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. I beg leave to call attention, if I may be permitted to do so, to an item in this bill, just preceding the amendment which I have offered:

For extension of limit of cost of site and building from $1,300,000 to $1,400,000, $100,000.

The amendment is exactly in accord with the construction of the bill which we have before us.

Mr. ALLISON. What page did the Senator read from?

Mr. DANIEL. Page 4.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Virginia whether the amendment has been reported from a committee?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes, sir; it has been reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which I have the evidence before me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's statement is all that is necessary. The Chair did not hear the Senator.

Mr. DANIEL. It has been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and it is estimated for by the Department.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Chair decide that the amendment is in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that the amendment is in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to page 113, after line 6, where I move to insert:

For new barn, $3,500; for electric-light plant, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. The total must be changed.

Mr. SEWELL. The total should be changed to correspond with the increase.

Mr. ALLISON. The clerks will be authorized to make the change.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

Mr. CLARK. I beg leave to offer an amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "survey," in line 9, page 66, it is proposed to insert:

And all the lands in the States of Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and South Dakota set apart and reserved by Executive orders and proclamations of February 22, 1897, are hereby restored to the public domain, and subject to settlement, occupancy, and entry under the land laws of the United States the same as if said Executive orders and proclamations had not been made.

Mr. ALLISON. I reserve the point of order on the amendment that it is new legislation, entirely independent of any appropriation in the bill. However, I will waive the point for the moment, until the Senator from Wyoming can be heard.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have no desire to be heard on the amendment, except to present a few facts to the Senate in regard to the reservation that was made by the order of the President on February 22, which, to give it the most charitable interpretation that can be applied to it, was made, in my opinion, without full and proper information, and I ask the attention of the Senate to the amendment.

The amendment provides for restoring 21,000,000 acres of land to the public domain—21,000,000 acres of land that has been taken from the public lands of the United States, from the settlers, from the farmers, from the prospectors of the Rocky Mountain and coast region—on the recommendation of a committee appointed by the American Scientific Association. The ostensible object of the reservation is the preservation of the forests upon the 21,000,000 acres of land.

I wish to state to the Senate, that it may understand the situation, and I do it in no spirit of harsh criticism of the Executive, that on the 21,000,000 acres of land segregated from the public domain enterprise was stopped at the borders; the exploiting of mines was absolutely and entirely stopped; town sites were embraced. In these reservations are thousands of men to-day, with their farms upon the reservations, and all this was done without consultation, so far as I have been able to inform myself, with any Senator or any Representative in Congress from any of the States affected by the order.

That this reservation works and will work hardship, none can question. In my own State I can speak of my personal knowledge, and of other States I can speak from what the Senators and Representatives from those States have told me. In one reservation in my State, known as the Big Horn Reservation, something over a million acres of land have been taken from the public domain. That is at the summit of the Big Horn Mountains, in the northern part of the State, next to the Montana line. When we protest against this reservation, we are met by the statement that there are very few settlers there, as shown by the plats of the General Land Office, and yet that entire country is now, this day, full of men opening up a new mineral region, which we hope will pour immense quantities of wealth into the coffers of the country. They are compelled to pause with pick in the air because this reservation, withdrawing the lands, takes them away from the exploiting and the prospecting and the exploration of the mines.

If it had been desired to preserve the forests, the Big Horn forest reservation would have been dropped 100 miles to the south, because 100 miles, certainly 50 miles, to the south of that reservation is the very place where the forest needs preservation, if anywhere, because there are found forests that protect the head waters of the Big Horn and the other streams which carry the waters of that country, and which should be preserved.

I can not think that if true information had been given to the Executive this order would have been made. I do not question his authority to make the reservation of 21,000,000 acres of land in my own and adjoining States, under the strict letter of the law. I do, however, question his right to make it under the spirit of the law. The Congress of the United States in 1891, in the expiring moments of the Congress, passed a law that was not duly guarded in its terms. I can not believe that the Senate and the House of Representatives ever expected that it would be executed in the way it has been executed. That law provided that the President of the United States, when in his judgment it should be necessary for the preservation of the forests of the United States, should set apart as forest reserves such portions of the public domain as in his judgment might be necessary.

At the former session of the present Congress a law was passed appropriating $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the National Academy of Sciences, for the purpose of exploring our whole country, finding out the condition of our forests, and reporting and suggesting such legislation as was thought by them to be necessary and desirable. These gentlemen—and I was talking with one of them immediately after the order was issued; whether or not they used the appropriation I am not informed—five scientific gentlemen from the East, went to the Western States. They gleaned from some sources, from somewhere, what they considered to be information in regard to our forests, and they started in their work in July. Early in the fall they returned, and I assume that the President, acting upon their recommendation, has made the order withdrawing these 21,000,000 acres of land from settlement. I wish to state here that at least in one case, the only one as to which I inquired directly—the Big Horn Reservation of which I have spoken—an eminent scientist and a member of that commission acknowledged to me under the press of interrogatories that not a member of the commission had ever been upon this reservation or within miles and miles of it.

Now, I wish the Senate to understand the condition of affairs; that these reservations have been made without due consideration, without personal knowledge on the part of the commission as to whether or not any timber is upon the reservations, without any knowledge as to whether or not the water supply will be guarded; but arbitrarily, with the stroke of a pen, without consultation with any of the people of the States most interested, the order is made, and we ask the Senate, by legislation, to annul that order. It still leaves the President free under the law of 1891, if he makes the proper investigation, to segregate such parts of the public domain as will serve the purpose which the law contemplates. The adoption of this amendment means that the picks will again begin to strike in all these reservations, and that a man who has a home in these reservations can again go out and get his firewood from the timber on the public domain.

The effect of these reservations is that while care is taken in the proclamation to say that the settler who is there with a bona fide title shall not have his title challenged, yet in effect it provides that he shall not burn a stick of timber in all that land to light his hearth. All the reservations are made at the behest of these scientific gentlemen. I honor them for their knowledge; they are an ornament to the country; I read their reports with admiration; but they belong to that class of scientific gentlemen who think more of the forest tree than they do of the roof tree, and we have a whole lot of people in the West who think as much of their roof tree as the people of any other part of this nation.

We believe it is an injustice to us. We believe that instead of the development of our country being retarded, it should be advanced. We believe that the life of the man is worth more than the life of the tree. We have timber that can be used there for commercial purposes, and these scientific gentlemen ought to know it.

In some of the reservations, if this amendment be not adopted, or one like it, it means the absolute confiscation of hundreds of thousands of dollars of actual, tangible property, and I am not stating the fact too strongly. In a reservation that is made in the State represented by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] there is a reservation that takes within its borders some of the greatest paying gold mines on the continent of America. Those mines absolutely can not be worked; they absolutely can not raise their product from the ground unless they have the benefit of the timber growing upon the public domain. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been invested there, and hundreds of thousands of dollars have been virtually confiscated by this order which, in my judgment, was so hastily made on the anniversary of the birth of Washington.

Mr. President, I have felt a good deal of hesitation in offering this amendment. I am conscious of what it means. It means the annulling of a deliberate order of the Executive of this nation, and were I not impressed with the absolute necessity of this action, and the immediate necessity of present action, I would not have thought of offering the amendment. I respect the office of the Executive of this nation; there is no higher one on the face of the earth; but if, in order to protect the people of my own State or of an adjoining State, I am compelled to offer an amendment of this kind, it shall be offered. I hesitated in offering it, because I was told by members of the Senate that the adoption of the amendment would mean the veto or the failure of the sundry civil appropriation bill. I can not believe that that is possible. I can not believe that the President of this great Republic, if he has, as he must have, the good of his people at heart, would be so piqued because Congress, in its wisdom and after due deliberation, has seen fit to restore the homes of the people, that he would veto a great appropriation bill. But no matter if that should be the temper in which we meet the Executive, I for one am ready to meet the question on that ground, and I say here and now that neither on this bill nor any other will I sacrifice what I consider to be the well-being of the people of my State to satisfy the pique of any branch of this Government.

But it is urged that the amendment should be modified; that it should be made more moderate in its tone; that it should be put in a little different shape; that we should suggest that some exception should be made to the general order. In my judgment, it is either this or nothing. In my judgment, unless the whole order be revoked, the time will never come when these reservations will again be thrown open to the public domain. The lonely settler within the heart of the Big Horn or Jacksons Hole Reservation may remain lonely all his life because the President of the United States has placed a bar about him hundreds of miles perhaps, dozens of miles anyway, and at the edge of that has said to all the people of the United States besides, "You shall not go in and be a neighbor of this citizen, who has settled in good faith upon land which we want for a forest reservation."

Mr. President, there is no demand for these reservations, as such reservations have been made by the people of the States in which they lie. A gentleman had the assurance to tell me the other day, "It is needful that we should protect the frontier settlers." That, perhaps, is true. It is possibly true that the men who have prospected and exploited and lived under the hardships and toils of frontier life need some protection for themselves. But we have the experience of other parts of the country to caution us. We have the experience of the swamp-land act; we have the experience of a dozen other matters connected with the public-land surveys, and, in the light of that experience, we believe we know what is best for us.

No people on the face of the American continent are so anxious for the proper preservation of the forests and the water supplies of the West as the people of the public-land States. It means everything to us that they shall be properly preserved. But, on the other hand, it seems to us that the reservations should be made only when necessary; that they should be made only after an actual observation upon the ground. It appears to me impossible for four or five gentlemen, even though they stand at the head of the science of forestry in this country, to sit down at the Sheridan Inn, or elsewhere, 50, 60, 100, or 200 miles from a reservation and draw upon a map with any degree of intelligence the proper boundaries of a forest reserve.

Mr. President, I hope that the point of order reserved will not be insisted upon. This is the most vital question that has touched the people of the West during the present session of Congress. Gentlemen in the East can not appreciate it. You do not know how our people feel about it. You do not know what it means to us. It means the arrest of development in large parts of the West. It means the arrest of mining enterprises in large parts of the West. Some of these reservations are along railroads and town sites. It means that no man can warm his cold family with a stick of public timber, even though they be perishing, under the penalty mentioned in the law and the proclamation. We would not have complained of it had it been done with due deliberation. We do believe that it ought never to have been done except upon the best information obtainable, and I am satisfied that such has not been had.

I have spoken more especially with reference to my own State. I believe that other States are affected as badly or worse. I sincerely hope that the amendment may be adopted. It means more to us than the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations can conceive. It involves substantially the development of that whole Western country.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Wyoming will be again read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "survey," in line 9, page 66, it is proposed to insert:

And all the lands in the States of Wyoming, Utah, Colorado, Montana, Washington, Idaho, and South Dakota set apart and reserved by Executive orders and proclamations of February 22, 1897, are hereby restored to the public domain, and subject to settlement, occupancy, and entry under the land laws of the United States, the same as if said Executive orders and proclamations had not been made.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wyoming if those are all the States to which the order applies? Are there any other States?

Mr. CLARK. My impression is that the amendment covers all the reservations in the order referred to, and the only order of which complaint is made.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted. It is hard to realize what injury must necessarily come from such an order. We had a long and heated controversy here, which took several sessions of Congress before we could straighten it out, on account of the selections that were made for reservoir sites. A law was passed authorizing reservoir sites to be selected and set apart. That was all very well. They were to be surveyed and set up, but the language of the law was so construed by the Department that vast regions were first reserved, and then they got an Executive order that withdrew all the public lands from entry, closed every land office, and it took us a long time before we could get back by legislation to a point where the people could use the public lands in that part of the country.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I desire to state that this amendment has been favorably reported by the Committee on Public Lands. I neglected to state that fact.

Mr. STEWART. The selections were made, not from an examination of the reservations, not on the ground, but it was done here, taking the townships that were laid out even before they were surveyed, extending and marking them on the plats in the Department, they not knowing anything about what they were doing, and great hardship resulted from that proceeding.

I understand that the recent order includes about 23,000,000 acres. Am I correct?

Mr. CLARK. Twenty-one million acres.

Mr. STEWART. Twenty-one million acres are enough to make a large State. It excludes it from exploration and development, and will retard mining and the use of the lands for all time unless the restriction shall be removed. It is true that those who inhabit the country must necessarily use the timber. That is one of the necessary incidents of habitation. But in the mountain region, as a rule, there are vast areas of mountain land where timber grows on land which is not used for occupation. The timber can grow there, and it is very well to protect it; but to make a sweeping order without surveys, without knowing the limits, and to include the mineral and everything else, and stop the progress of the country it seems to me is very unwise.

If there had been surveys setting apart particular localities where there was no mineral, where people were not occupying the land, selecting localities in limited quantities, to preserve the timber at the heads of the streams, that would be all very well, if nothing more than that was contemplated. Now, instead of following that plan and surveying the land and knowing what was being done, so as to make a reasonable selection, here is a sweeping order covering 21,000,000 acres of land. It ought not to be set apart in this way. I think the President has been misled by enthusiasts who want to protect all the forests there are in the United States, and not have them used at all. They are generally persons who have been educated in countries where forests were preserved and cultivated, but that is a very different thing.

Mr. TELLER. Valuable trees.

Mr. STEWART. Valuable trees, etc. In other communities they had seen that done, and they undertake to apply it to a mountain region, where it is necessary that it should be open to exploration and development, if you are going to mine it at all. If silver mining has become so disreputable and wicked that it ought not to be prosecuted, let me say that those regions contain gold mines, and lead mines, and copper mines, coal mines, probably, and various other mines that are so essential, and it is necessary to prospect them and develop them if that country is going to grow. I think this is a very unwise way of proceeding. If it had come here with the maps and charts, so that we could see what they were reserving, and with a report as to the character of the lands, it would be all very well; but here 21,000,000 acres of land, which would cover an ordinary State, are included in an order without any investigation.

Mr. DUBOIS. And without consulting a single representative of the States in which the reservations are made.

Mr. STEWART. And it is done without consulting a single representative from that region. It seems to me it ought not to have been done. I think there is no danger at all that the President would veto a bill of that kind. I think if his attention had been called to it by some one in whom he had confidence (if he has confidence in anyone), if his attention had been called to this mode of excluding settlement and excluding prospecting and excluding explorations in that country—and those pursuits are the life of it; it can not prosper at all without them—he would not have made this sweeping order. He can not be so wedded to the order made (inasmuch as an order of that kind must have been made without reports and maps, and it was done without any consultation with the representatives) that he could take any offense if Congress should see fit to reopen those lands to the use of the people. If the commission of forestry will make the selections and make a report in reason, so that we can see where the reservations are and that the selections do not interfere with the community, and see that they do not contain mines that people are working and intending to work, and do not cut off the resources of the country, as we are all in favor of reserving the forests we will cooperate with them, but we do not propose to cooperate in this way, which is so destructive. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, in the closing hours of the Fifty-first Congress an act was under consideration, entitled "An act to repeal the timber-culture laws, and for other purpose," which, while originally introduced for one special purpose, developed into a general revision of the public-land laws. Without previous consideration by any committee of Congress, as I am informed upon the floor of the Senate during the debate, section 24 was proposed as an amendment, and it is under and by virtue of authority contained in that section 24 that the President recently issued the proclamation complained of.

It is customary in all the Departments, I presume, certainly in the Department of the Interior, in dealing with public-land matters, immediately on the passage of a law by Congress, for the Department to promulgate rules and regulations for its proper and intelligent administration. Such was the course pursued specially with reference to section 24 of that act, and the mischief, if mischief exists in the cases brought now to the attention of the Senate, originated in the failure to comply with the rules and regulations promulgated at the time. No attempt was made to give notice to the citizens of the State in which the reservation contemplated was located; no attempt was made to consult the State officers or interested parties relative to the public welfare in the vicinity of the proposed reservation.

The rules and regulations promulgated in 1891 directed the special agents of the General Land Office in attempting to administer section 24 of the law to personally investigate upon the ground the condition of the country proposed to be included in a forest reservation. After ascertaining by such investigation of the physical character that the land could be properly included in a reservation, they were further directed to consult the State officers, the citizens residing in the vicinity, and further still to publish in the local paper printed nearest the proposed selection, likewise in a paper of general circulation in the State, a description of the land proposed to be embraced within the limits of the reservation, the notice to incorporate a clause inviting all persons liable to be injuriously affected to make known the basis of their opposition to the proposed action. Without attempting to explain those instructions, I will ask that they be read from the desk, as probably the reading will convey the information more rapidly than I could describe it.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the Senator state whether those regulations by the Department were complied with?

Mr. CARTER. None of the conditions were complied with so far as I am informed, and I have made very diligent inquiry into the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Circular of instructions relating to timber reservations.]

P.] DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., May 15, 1891.

TO SPECIAL AGENTS OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

GENTLEMEN: Your attention is hereby called to section 24 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," which reads as follows:

"SEC. 24. That the President of the United States may from time to time set apart and reserve, in any State or Territory having public lands bearing forests, in any part of the public lands wholly or in part covered with timber or undergrowth, whether of commercial value or not, as public reservations; and the President shall, by public proclamation, declare the establishment of such reservations and the limits thereof."

To carry into effect said provisions it becomes important to reserve all public lands bearing forests or covered with timber or undergrowth on which the timber is not absolutely required for the legitimate use and necessities of the residents of the State or Territory in which the lands are situated, or for the promotion of settlement or development of the natural resources of the section of the State or Territory in which the lands are situated, or for the promotion of settlement or development of the natural resources of the section of the State or Territory in the immediate vicinity of the particular lands in question.

In so doing it is of first importance to reserve all public lands in mountainous and other regions which are covered with timber or undergrowth at the headwaters of rivers and along the banks of streams, creeks, and ravines, where such timber or undergrowth is the means provided by nature to absorb and check the mountain torrents and to prevent the sudden and rapid melting of the winter's snows and the resultant inundation of the valleys below, which destroy the agricultural and pasturage interests of communities and settlements in the lower portions of the country.

For the purpose of securing the necessary data upon which to base recommendations for such forest reservations, the following instructions are issued:

Special agents, upon being detailed to secure the data in question, will proceed, without undue delay, to make in the districts assigned to them a thorough and careful personal examination of the public lands bearing forests or covered with timber or undergrowth, and ascertain by personal observation and by interviews with Government and State officials in the vicinity of such lands, and with citizens who have an interest in the public welfare, all facts pertaining to the value of said forests or timber lands for all uses, purposes, and requirements. The result of such investigations should be duly made the subject of report to this office.

In submitting such reports a recommendation should be made in each case as to whether the lands described should be set apart as a public reservation, setting forth in full the reasons for arriving at the conclusions stated. The agent should also in every instance, so far as practicable, procure and submit with his report the expression of opinion in writing of the officials and citizens interviewed by him relative to the special value of each tract or area of land reported upon.

In recommending reservations of timber lands, special agents should describe such lands by natural drainage basins; and whenever it is in the interests of the industries carried on in the district to except any lands within said basins from reservation by permitting the timber to be cut to meet the wants of the people, such excepted tracts should be described in Land Office terms, as sections, townships, ranges, etc.; but when surveys have not been extended over the lands thus excepted, the lands should be described by natural boundaries in such a manner that they may be readily distinguished from other lands, and that proper provision for their survey by Land Office methods may be made.

After making an examination of the timber lands of any drainage basin and having decided to recommend the same for reservation under the provisions of this circular, before submitting report in the matter a notice should be prepared by the agent stating that such recommendation will be made to the General Land Office, and setting forth a description of the basin, together with a description of any public lands embraced therein which it may be proposed to have excepted therefrom. It should also be stated therein that the object of such publication is to give timely notice of the proposed reservation in order that all parties interested, who either favor or oppose its establishment, may be afforded due opportunity to submit their views to this office, by petition or otherwise, for the purpose of having the same considered prior to the final establishment of such reservation.

This notice should be posted in the land office or offices of the district wherein such lands are situated, and a copy of the same should be published at least once a week for three successive weeks in some newspaper published in the county, or each of the other counties, wherein such lands are situated, and also in at least one other newspaper of general circulation in the State or Territory. If no newspaper be published in the county or counties in which the lands are situated, then the publication should be made in a newspaper published in the county nearest to such lands.

A printed copy of the notice of publication should be submitted with the agent's report, together with the affidavit of the publisher or foreman of each newspaper attached thereto, showing that the same was successively inserted the requisite number of times, and the dates thereof.

Should knowledge be acquired by the agent that any particular tract or tracts of public timber land are being, or are likely at an early day to be, despoiled of the timber which should be preserved for climatic, economic, or other public reasons, and that the early reservation thereof is necessary, the agent should report the matter at once to this office, describing in general the location of said lands, and stating reasons for believing that necessity exists for early action. Should the services of a surveyor be required to locate and define by proper exterior bounds and lines any tract or tracts therein which should be excepted from reservation, he should submit an estimate as to the total cost of such survey and the time required to complete same. Upon receipt of such report proper measures will be promptly taken by this office in the premises.

Very respectfully,

T. H. CARTER,
Commissioner.

Approved.

GEO. CHANDLER,
Acting Secretary.

Mr. CARTER. It so happened in the course of events that I was connected with the land service at the time these regulations were promulgated, and assisted in the administration of the law for some time in conformity with these rules and regulations. Notwithstanding the precautions taken, giving timely public notice, we found that mistakes were made which injuriously affected citizens and important interests as well.

The complaint made against the mode of procedure in the case before the Senate for consideration rests upon the total failure to give any notice to any party in interest of the proposed reservation of these enormous bodies of land in the respective States. The serious consequences destined to follow this hasty and inadvertent action are most amply and fully illustrated. For instance, on the northern boundary of Montana a very large reservation has been described and proclaimed by proclamation. Upon the easterly boundary of that reservation there exists a mineral region said to contain deposits of copper in combination with gold and silver of fabulous richness. This fact became so apparent that at the last session of Congress the Government purchased about 900,000 acres of that land from the Blackfeet Indians at the price of $10 per acre or thereabouts, and provided that the land should be sold only to mineral claimants at $10 per acre. Before the land is actually surveyed or a dollar received by the Government to recoup it for that investment this proclamation is issued withdrawing the land from mineral entry, thus absolutely destroying the investment made by the Government for the purpose of encouraging the development of the mineral resources of the country.

Again, located near the city of Butte, in the State of Montana, there is one of the most remarkable deposits of copper yet discovered on the earth or within its crust, known as the Anaconda mine. It is a very large vein of ore. It requires an immense amount of timber each day to keep the walls and stopes from falling in and destroying the lives of men and closing up operations. Well-nigh a train load of timber is drawn daily to the Anaconda mine for the purpose of propping the stopes and levels and drifts. The pay roll of the company amounts to about $10,000,000 per year for disbursement in that country. The timber is procured for the purpose indicated in the upper portion of the Bitter Root Valley. The company has built upon the Bitter Root River a sawmill plant, at an expense of about $300,000, for the purpose of preparing the timber for the mines. The only readily available source of timber supply is at that point. Preparations were made to secure the timber there. A permit had been granted by the Department of the Interior to cut the timber. Yet upon investigation it is ascertained that the source of timber supply of the mine is incorporated in a timber reservation by a proclamation of which no human being in or out of Montana had notice until it emanated from the Executive hand, save, perhaps, those who recommended the action.

Mr. TELLER. No one in Montana had any knowledge of it?

Mr. CARTER. No one in Montana, no one in Idaho, no person connected with the representation of the State here, no State officer, no member of the company nor person connected with it, had any knowledge or notice whatever of the proclamation. What will be the result? It must be borne in mind that under existing law, for the purpose of protecting forests from spoliation, we are prevented from removing timber across State lines which happens to be cut on the public domain. Hence this company can not well go without the limits of the State to secure the supply needed, and, if it were driven to that necessity, the excessive cost of transportation in that part of the country would really jeopardize the mining operation; and the sawmill would be an absolute loss to the company.

I use this only for the purposes of illustration. There are other enterprises and other mines in that State which will be affected just as the Anaconda mine. Let me state here that the mineral output of that country, dependent for its continuation upon an untrammeled supply of timber to prop up the mines, amounts to over $50,000,000 per annum. I am asked by a Senator near me if a miner can cook his breakfast with wood taken from one of these reservations. Of course not, without incurring the pains and penalties prescribed in the proclamation.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CARTER. Most assuredly.

Mr. LINDSAY. I ask the Senator if the amendment were so modified as to exclude from the operation of the President's proclamation timber necessary for mining and domestic purposes, whether it would not answer all the immediate necessities of the case, leaving the other portion to be investigated when the Senate has time to look into it?

Mr. CARTER. That would obviate some of the difficulty, but not all of the difficulty. The entire region over which these forest reservations extend is a mineral country. By the terms of the proclamation persons are prohibited from entering within the limits of the reservation to prosecute their regular occupation in seeking treasure. This constitutes an important industry in that country. Its pursuit involves the progress of its civilization; its success involves the wealth of the nation in that part of the country; and it contributes largely to the energies of the country at large.

In the State of South Dakota there exists a mine known as the Homestead, a mine that has been sending forth a steady stream of gold to the mints of the United States for well-nigh a quarter of a century. The entire hill is now held up by timber cut and put in there to prop up the points where the ore is extracted. Continuous timber supply is an absolute prerequisite to the continuance of the mining operations. I believe 160 stamps are dropping there to-night, crushing the ore, taking from the store of no human being, injuring no one, but adding to the wealth of all and giving employment in that part of the country, I am told, to several thousand men, whose families are located there and who are dependent upon the continuance of this mining operation for a livelihood. Towns, villages, farms, mines, mills, all the operations of the people of that region, have been indiscriminately included in a reserve, without any provision for the appointment of an agent for the people or to furnish them protection.

Mr. President, there can be no reflection upon the Executive in attempting through the legislative department of the Government to secure the uninterrupted development of the country. It can not be that pride of opinion will prevent the correction of a mistake when it is called to the attention of any officer of this Government. The difficulty in this matter arose not through any mistake of the President. The manner in which these matters are attended to in the executive office of the President we all understand. I have prepared a great many of such proclamations which were signed by the President in a pro forma manner. He did not undertake in any instance to inquire of me bounds or subdivisions, but accepted what came from the Department of the Interior as being the result of due deliberation and proper investigation.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Montana allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. Was there not a year or two years ago constituted by act of Congress a forestry commission, who were required to consider this whole matter and report recommendations to the President in regard to forest reservations?

Mr. CARTER. I understand that they were to report to Congress upon certain matters.

Mr. GRAY. I am inclined to sympathize with what the Senator is stating.

Mr. TELLER. I will read from the last sundry civil appropriation act what the Senator undoubtedly refers to. It was passed in the last Congress:

> Forested lands of the United States: To enable the Secretary of the Interior to meet the expenses of an investigation and report by the National Academy of Sciences on the inauguration of a national forestry policy for the forested lands of the United States, $25,000.

Mr. GRAY. Is that the whole of it?

Mr. TELLER. That is all of it; and I understand that is the commission which recommended the setting apart of these reservations.

Mr. FRYE. Did they recommend it to the President?

Mr. TELLER. They recommended it to the Secretary of the Interior, or to the President.

Mr. CULLOM. The President has the power to issue such a proclamation without a recommendation.

Mr. CLARK. The President has the power without any recommendation, under the law.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the fate of the pending sundry civil bill can not hang upon the determination of the Senate in reference to this matter. Upon being advised that the plain regulations promulgated by the Department itself for the government of the Executive, for his guidance and information, have not been complied with, when it is made apparent that the people understood from those rules and regulations that timely notice would be given, and that in consequence they had no reason to apprehend what appears to be in this case an inadvertent and untimely action, the Executive will concur in the action of Congress, and most cheerfully concur, I have not the slightest doubt.

Mr. CANNON. I think, Mr. President, that if Senators will take this case home to themselves, there can be no question of the vote if the matter shall be allowed to go to a vote. There was withdrawn by the recent Executive order from the public domain an area of land larger than the entire land and water area of the State of Maine, four times as much as the entire land and water area of the State of Massachusetts, nearly two-thirds as much as the entire area of the State of Iowa. There are sitting in this body fourteen Senators from the States in which the reservations are located, and not one of the fourteen Senators was consulted with regard to the matter or knew anything concerning it until the publication of the order appeared in the newspapers.

It appears to me that if Senators will consider what their own feelings would have been to have had so large a portion of public domain in their States withdrawn from the use of the people, they will cordially support the amendment in its present form. I take the liberty of saying, without any concert of action with other Senators representing States similarly affected, that if the entire order can not be rescinded I would very much prefer to have it remain in its present form. In other words, rather than have any attempt to amend the proposition of the Senator from Wyoming, so as to provide a partial remedy for the wrong inflicted, I would prefer that we should submit for the time being to the entire wrong.

No two of these reservations are similarly situated. Eight hundred and seventy-five thousand acres of public land in the State of Utah were withdrawn from entry. That tract adjoins nearly 6,000 square miles set apart as Indian reservations. It includes the homes of settlers; it includes mines; it includes the timber which the people cut for their firewood, and some small forests, very small indeed, in which are located sawmills. The line comes down to within 2 or 3 miles of several towns. The perpetuation of the order for any considerable time must work a very grievous hardship upon all the people of that locality. It withdraws all the land of many valleys from the use of the flock masters. Men who have herds of cattle and flocks of sheep will not be permitted under the law and under the proclamation to graze them upon any portion of those lands. No one will be allowed except in danger of the penalty of the law to cut a stick of timber as large as your finger from a portion of that forest reservation.

It appears to me, Mr. President, that bearing in mind that all of the people of the West have been desirous of having reservations made which should protect the sources of their water supply, the disposition on the part of Representatives and Senators and the State officials to cooperate with the national Executive at any time at his behest in the selection of such lands for reservations as would protect the water supply, the least which the Senate and Congress can now do is at this first opportunity highly to resent an order the great effect of which must be a serious hardship upon the people of the West.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my suggestion as to a point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in this connection. This Executive order withdraws from settlement and occupation about 1,000,000 acres of the mining district known as the Black Hills in South Dakota. That region is occupied by 10,000 people engaged in farming, stock raising, and mining. It is but sparsely timbered, and certainly no one who had examined it would have thought of making a forest reservation of it.

Without consulting any representative of the State of South Dakota, without consulting any of the people of South Dakota, the Executive has chosen to set that region apart as a forest reservation and withdraw it from settlement and occupation. Through the center of that tract of a million acres of land there is a railroad 50 miles in length, having stations every 6 to 10 miles, where people are engaged in all the productive industries that go with a farming, a stock-raising, and a mining country. There are several mines and mills, and hundreds of men are employed in the mines producing the precious metals. There is there a county seat, and in fact nearly the entire population of the county is embraced within the reservation. The county seat, Custer City, has a population of 1,200 people, and yet they are embraced within a forest reservation. The town of Keystone, where there are several large mines and mills, had a voting population last fall of 400. The only possible remedy that can relieve those people is the setting aside of this order absolutely. They can take no compromise whatever. The condition that they can cut timber from the public domain and carry on their mining operations would be but a slight relief.

I have a telegram, Mr. President, which I will read:

LEAD, S. DAK., February 25, 1897.

Senator R. F. PETTIGREW, Washington, D. C.:.

President Cleveland's Executive orders, issued Monday, reserving nearly a million acres of land in the Black Hills of South Dakota for a forestry reservation, will ruin every industry here. Do all possible to have the order suspended. If you can, get it revoked until the people here can be heard. Please send me a copy of the order describing the location of the lands reserved. T. J. GRIER.

The legislature of South Dakota has acted upon this matter, and sent me the following resolution:

A joint resolution memorializing the members of Congress of the United States from South Dakota, requesting the President to modify a certain proclamation respecting lands in the Black Hills in South Dakota.

Whereas the President of the United States, on the 22d day of February, 1897, issued his proclamation withdrawing from settlement certain unsurveyed mineral lands in the Black Hills within the boundaries of the State of South Dakota; and

Whereas the withdrawal of such lands from settlement, location, and appropriation will retard the growth and prosperity of this State, and the development of its mineral resources: Therefore

Be it resolved by the senate of South Dakota (the house of representatives concurring), That our Senators in Congress be instructed and the Representatives of this State in Congress be requested to do all in their power to obtain from the President such a modification of said proclamation as will leave open for location and appropriation the mineral lands of the Black Hills of South Dakota.

ANDREW E. LEE, Governor.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we can do nothing less than vacate this Executive order by the amendment, if we desire to do justice to the people whom we have encouraged to occupy that country.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, the lateness of the hour and the urgent desire to promptly pass the pending bill admonish me to say only a few words.

The State that I have the honor in part to represent was attached to the State of Montana in the withdrawal by Executive order in the Olympic range of, I believe, a little over 2,000,000 acres of land. I seriously doubt, Mr. President, whether any examination has ever been made by anybody of that reservation. As far as we who live in that State know, only three people have entered the Olympic range. It was, until within the last three years, a terra incognita, and had been but little prospected; but over on the other side, in the Cascade Mountains, under a previous Administration, there was a withdrawal for forestry reservation known as the Pacific Reserve. This included a large body of lands, and quite a hardship was imposed by making this withdrawal, for the reason that a large number of prospectors had located mineral claims in the Cascade Mountains. They sent a protest to Congress seeking advice and information. A bill was passed by the House of Representatives some time during the last session, was reported favorably by the Committee on Forest Reservations of the Senate, and is now pending.

If we should withdraw all the lands, as provided for in that bill, we would do about the proper and apposite thing. That would give an opportunity to preserve the timber. It would also give an opportunity for mineral locations, and the opportunity to develop the mineral industry of the Cascade Mountains. I think that bill ought to pass, or some amendment should be adopted to the pending bill which would give the locators in the mountains on the mineral lands an opportunity to develop them.

Mr. DUBOIS. I shall not detain the Senate, but I simply desire to have printed in the RECORD the statement which I hold in my hand, which shows the lands which have been reserved in the various States—amounting in all to 21,379,840 acres—in the last Executive order. I do this simply to make it a part of the record in order that the committee may use it in conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper referred to by the Senator from Idaho will be printed in the RECORD, in the absence of objection.

The paper referred to is as follows:

Mr. MANTLE. Mr. President, the objections to this Executive order have been so well stated that it is unnecessary for me to reiterate them. I rise simply to tender my thanks on behalf of the people of my State to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ALLISON] for having withdrawn the point of order against the pending amendment.

* Estimated in acres.

I am inclined to think that Senators do not apprehend the enormous mischief to be worked to the people of those States if this order should be permitted to remain in force. In the State of Montana there are over 5,000,000 acres of land set apart in this Executive order. A great deal of that land, thousands and thousands of acres of it, have not a stick of standing timber upon it, most of it having already been cut.

I come from a community in my State, Mr. President, which would be peculiarly affected by this order. It is a mining community, embracing about 50,000 people. If this order were to go into effect, I have no hesitation in saying that within two months 10,000 men would be thrown out of employment because of the inability of those mining companies to secure the timber with which to carry on their mining operations.

I think I might safely say that if this order is to stand and remain the law of the land it ought to be accompanied with a provision for enlarging the penitentiaries and the jails of that country, for two things are apparent, that either the industries and the activities of that section of country must cease or else the terms of this order must be violated every hour and every day. I do not want to see the people of the State of Montana reduced to this extremity or put in a position where, in order to exist, they will be compelled to violate the law of the country; and I appeal to Senators here to step in at this juncture and exercise a little of that generous sympathy, which we have been so willing and so ready to extend to others outside of the domain of the United States, to our own citizens, who are to be put into such a pitiable plight by the provisions of this order, if it is to remain in full force and effect.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURSTON. I move to amend the bill by inserting after line 11, on page 73, what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 11, on page 73, it is proposed to insert:

Domestic sugar production: To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to continue inquiry and ascertain the progress made in the production of domestic sugar from beets and sorghum, including the area of available land adapted thereto by irrigation or otherwise, and to investigate all other matters concerning the same, for cost of labor, traveling, and other purposes, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer an amendment to come in after line 16, on page 97, which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 97, following the amendments already adopted after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to submit estimates of the cost of removing the ledge at Pulling Point, in Portsmouth Harbor, New Hampshire, so far as the same is an obstruction to navigation of large vessels going to the navy-yard.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, at the end of line 11, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and required to establish branch hydrographic offices at Duluth, in the State of Minnesota, Sault Ste. Marie, in the State of Michigan, and Buffalo, in the State of New York, the same to be conducted under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to establish a Hydrographic Office in the Navy Department," approved June 21, 1866; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to secure sufficient accommodations in the said cities of Duluth, Sault Ste. Marie, and Buffalo for said hydrographic offices, and to provide the same with the necessary furniture, apparatus, and supplies, and service allowed existing branch hydrographic offices, at a cost not exceeding $15,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that will be amended by saying "for this purpose" instead of "to carry out the provisions of this act."

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the words "provisions of this act," at the end of the amendment, and insert "for this purpose."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I accept that modification.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the amendment ought to be amended by striking out the words "and required." It is sufficient simply to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make this investigation. The words "and required" occur twice, I think, in the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator's suggestion would improve the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, in line 1, after the word "authorized," to strike out "and required;" and in line 10, after the word "authorized," to strike out "and directed."

Mr. PETTIGREW. I accept the modification of the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wish to submit some papers in connection with the amendment just agreed to, and have them printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

The papers referred to are as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 23, 1897.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE NAVAL AFFAIRS,
United States Senate, City:

The Navy Department approves the amendment, intended to be introduced to the naval appropriation bill by Mr. PETTIGREW, for the establishment of branch hydrographic offices at Duluth, Minn., Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., and Buffalo, N. Y., but provisions should be made therein that the appropriation may also be expended for furniture, supplies, and services as now pertaining to existing branch hydrographic offices.

HERBERT.

STATEMENT IN FAVOR OF ESTABLISHING BRANCH HYDROGRAPHIC OFFICES.

The aim of these amendments is to establish on the Great Lakes, under the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department, a set of branch hydrographic offices, such as now exist on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. The great feature of branch offices consists of personal visits to ships and to nautical and shipping men, for the purpose of gathering new information of benefit to commerce, which information is sent to the main Hydrographic Office, where it is edited and published for the benefit of commerce generally. The branch offices also correct barometers, thermometers, chronometers, and charts for ships, and point out the latest charts; and each branch office contains on its shelves a complete set of the charts of the world, including sailing directions, pilot directions, etc. Each branch office also answers inquiries relative to nautical matters, such as the best route to pursue, existence of wrecks, port regulations, etc.

The library of charts in each branch office may be consulted by the public freely. Since charts must be corrected almost daily for the reception of new information, it is rarely attempted by any public library, other than branch hydrograpic offices, to keep a set of nautical charts. The main hydrographic office and the branch offices therefore provide the only complete libraries of nautical charts in the United States. On the Great Lakes it is now admitted by the best shipmasters that instrumental navigation, such as is used to safeguard the ships upon the oceans, should be extended to the lake region. It is the further object of the branch offices to encourage and facilitate advancement in the knowledge of navigation. Through the instrumentality of the Hydrographic Office two schools of navigation under private direction are already in successful operation on the Great Lakes, where there are under instruction a large number of officers of the Naval Reserve, owners of yachts, and captains and officers of merchant vessels.

The appreciation shown by the public, and by navigators, of the branch hydrographic offices on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts is the best reason that could be urged for the establishment of a set of branch offices on the Great Lakes. Through the instrumentality of the branch offices, the Hydrographic Office has secured a corps of voluntary observers of the mariners of all nations, the membership of which numbers from 1,500 to 2,000. The totals in the appended table show the immense amount of work done by these offices during the fiscal year 1896 for the benefit of commerce. It is shown that personal visits were made to 9,702 ships and that 13,549 visits were received; 11,544 barometers were corrected, 2,867 chronometers compared, 8,810 charts corrected for navigators, and 1,407,228 notices to mariners distributed.

It is remarkable that, notwithstanding the immense and rapidly growing commerce of the Great Lakes, the Government has done but little to help it, whereas a great deal of money has been spent from year to year to benefit commerce on the ocean. Nearly all of the maritime associations on the Great Lakes have passed resolutions favoring the establishment of branch hydrographic offices on the Great Lakes and highly approving the extension of the work of the Hydrographic Office in that region, where about 95 per cent of the commerce belongs to the United States.

Another feature of the branch offices is the display of a time ball, connected electrically each day directly with the Naval Observatory at Washington, whereby the correct time is given to mariners and the public generally. The immense store of data relating to marine meteorology now in the possession of the Hydrographic Office, which in amount exceeds that in possession of any other government, has been collected mainly through the instrumentality of the branch offices.

C. D. SIGSBEE,
Commander U. S. N., Hydrographer.

Mr. LINDSAY. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 93, in line 13, after the word "otherwise," it is proposed to insert "and said $83,000 shall be immediately available;" so as to read:

Provided, That of the amount authorized to be expended, $83,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended in addition to the $50,000 herein appropriated in continuing construction and completion of Lock and Dam No. 7, by contract or otherwise, and said $83,000 shall be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on the Census and the House Committee on Appropriations have agreed upon the preliminary organization of the Census Office for the purpose of taking the next census. It is the expectation that the volumes comprising the next census, instead of being twenty-five, as in the census of 1880, will not exceed five or six. The scope of the next census is to be defined by Congress at its next session; but it is very desirable that the preliminary organization shall be made immediately. I therefore, by direction of the Committee on the Census, ask that the provisions of the bill now upon the Calendar of the Senate, which has been reported from the Committee on the Census and has been approved by the House Committee on Appropriations, may be added to this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

That there shall be at the seat of government a census office, the duties of which shall be the taking of the Twelfth and succeeding censuses and the collection of other information, as hereinafter provided.

That the census office shall be under the charge of a director of the census, who shall be appointed, as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive a salary of $6,000 per annum; and there shall be also an assistant director of the census, to be appointed in like manner, who shall be an experienced statistician and shall receive an annual salary of $4,000; and there shall also be in the census office, to be appointed by the director thereof, a chief clerk, at an annual salary of $2,500; five chief statisticians, at an annual salary of $3,000 each; one stenographer, at an annual salary of $2,000, and as a temporary office force, until the force of the census office shall be classified and provided for through regular appropriations, such number of employees, not to exceed 32 in all, as the director of the census may find necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, such employees to consist of clerks of classes 4, 3, 2, and 1, and at $1,000 per annum, watchmen, assistant watchmen, messengers, assistant messengers, laborers, skilled laborers, and charwomen. The chief statisticians herein provided for shall be persons of known and tried experience in statistical work. One of the clerks of class 4 shall be designated as disbursing clerk, and shall, before entering upon his duties, give bond to the proper accounting officers of the United States in the sum of $10,000, which bond shall be conditioned that the said officer shall render a true and faithful account to the proper accounting officers of the United States quarter-yearly or oftener, as may be found necessary, of all moneys and property which shall be by him received by virtue of his office, with sureties to be approved by the Solicitor of the Treasury. Such bond shall be filed in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury, to be by him put in suit upon any breach of the conditions thereof.

That the chief clerk, disbursing clerk, and the chief statisticians provided for in the preceding section may, in the discretion of the director of the census, and all other census employees authorized by this act below the assistant director of the census, shall be appointed in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the Government," approved January 16, 1883, and the amendments thereto and the rules established thereunder; but when requisitions are made upon the Civil Service Commission for certifications for the appointment of clerks in any of the grades herein provided for the said Commission shall, if the director of the census so indicates, give preference in certification from the eligible lists to persons who have served in the clerical force of the Eleventh Census.

That it shall be the duty of the director of the census to submit to the Secretary of the Treasury, on or before October 1, 1897, estimates for such classified force as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act relative to the census.

That during the necessary absence of the director of the census, or when the office of the director shall become vacant, the assistant director shall perform the duties of the director.

That the Twelfth Census shall be restricted to such specific topics and features as may be authorized by Congress, and to this end the director of the census shall proceed at once to make all necessary preparations for the next decennial enumeration, and shall submit to the Congress in December, 1897, a report, with recommendations, relating to such topics or features as he may deem adequate for the purpose intended by this act; and in his report he shall make such further suggestions and recommendations relating to the details necessary for taking the Twelfth and subsequent censuses and for the continuous work of a permanent census office as he may deem proper.

That the director of the census is hereby authorized to print and bind in the census office such blanks, circulars, bulletins, and other small matters as may be necessary and advisable for the proper conduct of the census office.

That such records, books, and files as relate to preceding censuses as may be necessary in conducting the work of the census office, and the printing-office outfit used in the Eleventh Census, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and such furniture and property of whatever nature used at the Eleventh Census as can be spared by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be transferred to the custody and control of the census office created by this act; and all such property, furniture, and records shall be inventoried by the proper officers of the Department of the Interior when such transfer is made to the director of the census, and a copy of the inventory shall be filed and preserved in the office of the Secretary of the Interior and in the office of the director of the census.

That the Director of the Census may authorize the expenditure of necessary sums for the traveling expenses of the officers and employees of the Census Office, stationery, and the necessary expenses incidental to the carrying out of this act, the furnishing of offices and the rent thereof, not to exceed a rental of $5,000 per annum, and the conduct and maintenance of the printing office herein authorized, and shall annually make a detailed report to Congress of such expenditures. And for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act relative to the census the sum of $75,000, to be available on the passage of this act, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall continue available until exhausted; but nothing contained in this act shall be construed as changing existing law so far as it relates to the completion and the distribution of the results of the Eleventh Census.

Mr. GORMAN. I think that amendment is subject to the point of order that it is new legislation.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator will not make the point of order. The amendment contains the appropriation for starting the next census. It is reported by the Committee on the Census, and this simply makes the necessary provision for organizing the census force by means of this appropriation. I would ask the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] in all good faith why it is not in order?

Mr. GORMAN. This matter may have been considered by the Committee on Census, but it has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It is certainly new legislation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator make the technical point that it has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ALLISON. It has been.

Mr. GORMAN. It has been?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes. It makes an appropriation for starting the next census, and I would like the Senator in all good faith to tell me why it is not in order—appropriating $75,000, and having been referred to his committee—to begin the organization of the next census.

Mr. GORMAN. I think it is general legislation.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; it is special legislation in connection with that subject.

Mr. GORMAN. There is no necessity whatever for loading this bill down. I have no doubt the general scheme of having a permanent census is a great one, but I think we had better let something go over until after the 4th of March. I can not withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not wish to put any strain on the Chair to decide whether this is or is not in order, and I will take the decision of the Senator from Maryland and put the responsibility on him of objecting to the adoption of this amendment. But it is just as much in order and ten times as necessary as a great many amendments that have been put on this bill while the Senator from Maryland has sat in his chair and has not objected.

Mr. GORMAN. I should be glad if I could withdraw my objection to the amendment. But the temper shown in this body this afternoon indicated that anything on the face of the earth might be put on the pending bill. It has run up now, I think, to about fifty-four or fifty-five million dollars. We have made a river and harbor measure of this bill; we have made a public-buildings appropriation measure of this bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. All by the committee of which the Senator is a member.

Mr. GORMAN. No, but by the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; by the committee.

Mr. GORMAN. Here we stand to-night at nearly 11 o'clock with the largest appropriation bill that has ever passed Congress, one that carries more money than the condition of the Treasury will warrant, when every Senator is aware of the fact that from July last until to-day we have a deficiency of $48,000,000 in the Treasury—that is, the expenditures have been that much greater than the receipts; when every Senator is aware of the fact that if we continue to add amendments to this bill, and make provision for necessary and unnecessary objects, the probability is that we shall have to deal with this question again.

I do not hesitate to say that the Congress of the United States will be properly subjected to the charge of extravagance, to the charge of useless expenditures, to the charge of creating useless offices, offices piled up here at this session of Congress, when there can be no earthly necessity for it. There is no earthly necessity for it. We shall have time hereafter to consider whether we shall increase appropriations already amounting to $500,000,000 a year, when we are confronted, as we shall be within twenty-five days, with the question of increasing taxation. We ought not at this time, when a new Administration is about to take charge of the Government, to lay foundation for the charge that by prior extravagance we have compelled them to increase taxation. For one, I object to it. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] asks me how much the bill carries. I would say fifty millions as it came from the House of Representatives, and, with the additions made to it by the Senate, I have no doubt it will exceed $54,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Not quite so much.

Mr. GORMAN. Not quite so much, the Senator says. Well, $51,000,000, as reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and, in addition, whatever has been put on the bill by this body. But here is a proposition to make a new department of the Government. If it is wise, I have no doubt——

Mr. CHANDLER. This does not create a permanent Census Bureau.

Mr. GORMAN. Practically that is what it does.

Mr. CHANDLER. It begins the work of the next census this year; and it will save money to the Government to begin it this year.

Mr. GORMAN. That may be, Mr. President; but let it wait until after the 15th day of March, when we can consider it. I have no doubt that the committee which considered it have given it proper consideration, but I think it ought to come as an independent proposition when we can look into its details and can give time to its consideration, and not put it on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I wish to say just one word. I have believed for a good while that the manner in which we went to work to take the census was a very expensive one, and that there ought to be some change in the law, as to the time in which the work should begin. I do not suppose that it is necessary for me to say, because every Senator knows, that the taking of the census has been a most expensive affair, especially the last two censuses, as to which I myself have had some knowledge. This large expense has resulted for the greater part from the delay by the Government in making preparation for it.

We have allowed legislation to be neglected until we reached the very point of time when the work should begin. The consequence has been that from want of knowledge the results of part of the work done had to be discarded, and the whole thing resulted in a comparatively poor census and an exceedingly expensive one. Hence the Committee on Census this year concluded that we ought to report a bill at this session providing for the creation or the appointment of a census officer with some power to proceed and get ready for the work.

While this preliminary preparation may cost forty or fifty or sixty thousand dollars, I have no doubt that its expenditure would result in a saving to the Government of half a million dollars or more, whereas if we let it run along again until we reach the point of time at which we shall be forced into the performance of that duty, we shall again have an expensive census, and a census not so well taken as it might be if we should adopt this amendment or something like it, and thus prepare for the work, so that the Government might go at it in the right way.

I appreciate the remarks of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] with reference to the large amount carried by this bill, but the addition of the little sum proposed in the pending amendment will be but slight. I would not insist upon it if I did not believe that it would result in saving hundreds of thousands of dollars if passed at the present session. By the amendment some man would be appointed to take charge of this work and organize it, and lay the foundation for the taking of the census in the right way before the time comes for the actual doing of the work itself. I will go with the Senator from Maryland in trying to save money and avoid all unnecessary expenditure, but I think this is one of the things we ought not to hesitate about. If there is any way to save money in the performance of public duty, it is in preparation of the kind contemplated by this amendment. I therefore hope the Senator from Maryland will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. GORMAN. I can not do it, Mr. President.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to make a last appeal to the Senator from Maryland. The cost of the last census was over $11,000,000. This is an appropriation of $75,000 to start the organization of a census office, and surely the money will be saved to the Government by beginning now. I really hope the Senator from Maryland will withdraw his point of order. There are members of his own committee who think this thing ought to be started, and I do not like to have him try his annual economic fit upon me.

Mr. GORMAN. I am very glad always to oblige the Senator from New Hampshire. I think that annually he makes this same appeal to me to withdraw objection to appropriations of money.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, Mr. President, never before. This is the first time in ten years.

Mr. GORMAN. I must decline; Mr. President, to accommodate my friend on this occasion. He will have ample opportunity, and I want him and his friends to take the full credit after the 4th of March, to ring in the proposition that we ought to have established these offices. I do not want to deprive them of the opportunity, and I therefore insist upon the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is made by the Senator from Maryland that the amendment is general legislation. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not at all disappointed in the Chair, but very much disappointed in the Senator from Maryland. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARTER. I offer an amendment, to come in on page 83, at the end of line 14.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

And the Secretary of War may in his discretion use not to exceed $20,000 of said sum to purchase the former post traders' building at Fort Assiniboine, in Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. On page 91, after line 9, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, and agreed to, as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to expend from the appropriation of $25,000 "For dredging Salmon Bay and improvement of the waterway connecting the waters of Puget Sound at Salmon Bay with Lakes Union and Washington by enlarging the said waterway into a ship canal, with the necessary locks and appliances in connection therewith," made by the "Act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works of rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," received by the President August 7, 1894, the sum of $10,000 for making a definite survey and location of the improvement of the said waterway from the head of Salmon Bay to termination on Smiths Cove, and connect with former survey from Lake Washington to head of Salmon Bay, and for preparing a cadastral map showing each piece of property required to be deeded to the United States or from which a release is required, with its metes and bounds.

Mr. SQUIRE. In connection with the amendment just adopted I submit certain papers, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

The papers are as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., December 24, 1896.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith a letter, dated the 21st instant from the Senate Committee on Commerce, inclosing for the views of the War Department thereon S. 3300, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, "A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to expend a portion of an existing appropriation for making a survey and location of the improvement of the waterway connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lakes Union and Washington, and preparing a cadastral map."

The river and harbor act of August 17, 1894, in making an appropriation of $25,000 for dredging Salmon Bay, and the improvement of the waterway connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lakes Union and Washington, provides that no part of said amount shall be expended on the improvement until the entire right of way and a release from all liability to adjacent property owners have been secured to the United States free of cost and to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War. By the sundry civil act of March 2, 1895, the authority of Congress was given for the expenditure of $5,000 from the appropriation of August 17, 1894, in making a definite survey and location and in preparing the papers necessary to secure the right of way to the United States. The report giving the results of this survey is printed in the annual report of the Chief of Engineers for 1896, page 3356 et seq.

This survey, however, only included the route from Lakes Union and Washington to the foot of Salmon Bay. Since that time the Secretary of War has, in accordance with authority granted by law, selected the "Smiths Cove route," which necessitates the condemnation of right of way from Salmon Bay to Smiths Cove, over which portion of the route no survey has yet been made and for which survey no portion of the existing appropriation for the improvement of this waterway can be used without the special legislation herein proposed. The cost of such survey can not now be definitely determined, but it is not thought it will be $10,000. It is, therefore, suggested that after the word "dollars," in line 14 of the accompanying bill, there be added the words, "or as much thereof as may be necessary."

A copy of the bill as thus amended is herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. P. CRAIGHILL,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. DANIEL S. LAMONT,
Secretary of War.

SEATTLE, WASH., February 25, 1897.

Hon. WATSON C. SQUIRE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Replying to yours of to-day, I have to say: The action of the Honorable Secretary of War, changing the route of Lake Washington Government Canal, pursuant to act of Congress, so as to debouch into Smiths Cove instead of Shilshole Bay renders necessary an additional survey to cover and connect that part of the canal running from head of Salmon Bay to Smiths Cove with the previous survey. The very same reasons exist for this as for the previous survey. Without it, the condition imposed in the appropriation for construction can not be met, for it is impossible for us to convey to Government a right of way or a release from damages that is unsurveyed and therefore undefined.

Our citizens are endeavoring with utmost good faith and diligence to meet the condition. They have procured an act of our legislature for condemnation of the right of way and all items of damages in order that the right of way and damages may be condemned and paid for and the right of way and release from damages be turned over to the United States. A suit is now pending under that act and in process of trial for such condemnation as far as the right of way and damages have been defined by survey. Our citizens are exceedingly urgent that the right of way and release be tendered to the Government as speedily as possible, and are only prevented from proceeding to condemn and tender the remainder of the right of way and items of damages by the failure of the Government to define by survey what it is exactly that the Government wants. Our city and country are practically a unit on this matter. It will be very strange if the Government refuses to define a condition which it requires to be met. We hope to hear within a few days that the amendment to the sundry civil bill will carry the item of $10,000 for this necessary and reasonable survey.

ROGER S. GREENE,
Chairman Lake Washington Government Canal Committee.

SEATTLE, WASH., February 26, 1897.

Hon. WATSON C. SQUIRE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Replying to yours of yesterday, I beg to say our citizens are amazed at hesitation to appropriate $10,000 for survey of that portion of route for Lake Washington Government Canal recently changed by the honorable Secretary of War. Two previous appropriations await securing of right of way by us, which can not be completed until Government defines the ground of this new portion. Condemnation proceedings against 800 defendants are now on trial and well toward completion for securing right of way so far as defined by Government. All previous steps of the United States, of State legislature, and of our city and county will be placed in suspense and be discredited if provision is not made now for defining on the ground the recent change specified by Secretary of War. With full knowledge of facts, there can be no ground for withholding the amount needed to complete this survey.

W. D. WOOD, Mayor of Seattle.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am authorized by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 5, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, such additional land as he may deem necessary, and to cause to be erected an addition or extension to the United States custom-house and post-office building at Bridgeport, Conn., for the use and accommodation of the Government office in said city, upon plans and specifications to be prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, the cost of said additional land and extension or addition not to exceed $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer an amendment, to be inserted on page 55, after line 17. This amendment, I will say to the Senate, is in the nature of legislation, but is very much desired by the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is unable to be present during these night sessions, and I will ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After line 17, on page 55, it is proposed to insert:

Sections 2525 and 2526 of the Revised Statutes are hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2525. On and after October 1, 1897, there shall be in the State of Vermont two collection districts, as follows:

"First. The district of Vermont to comprise the counties now constituting the First Congressional district of Vermont, in which district Burlington shall be the port of entry, and St. Albans, Alburg, East Alburg, Swanton, Highgate, Franklin, West Berkshire, Windmill Point, and Richford, subports of entry.

"Second. The district of Memphremagog to comprise the counties now constituting the Second Congressional district of Vermont, in which district Newport shall be the port of entry, and North Troy, Derbyline, Island Pond, Canaan, and Beecher Falls subports of entry.

"SEC. 2526. There shall be in the district of Vermont a collector, who shall reside at Burlington, and whose salary shall be $2,000 per annum; and in the district of Memphremagog a collector, who shall reside at Newport, and whose salary shall be $2,000 per annum: And provided further, That the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise, without appraisement, are hereby extended to each of the several ports in the two districts provided for herein, and to the subports of St. Albans, Richford, Island Pond, and Beecher Falls."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be agreed to. I will say that it has been referred to the Committee on Commerce, and has been reported favorably by that committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CHANDLER. In whose behalf did I understand the Senator from Iowa to say he offered the amendment? Did he say it was offered in behalf of the senior Senator from Vermont?

Mr. ALLISON. And the junior Senator, who sits by my side, I may also say.

Mr. CHANDLER. Although the senior Senator be absent, I feel that an amendment of this importance should not be adopted in his absence, unless vouched for by the junior Senator, who is present.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will say with reference to this matter that there are 35 collection districts in New England. I take these figures from the last report of the supervising special agent of the Treasury. Of those 35, there are 14 in Maine, 10 in Massachusetts, 5 in Connecticut, 3 in Rhode Island, 1 in Vermont, and 1 in New Hampshire.

Of course, Boston is the largest district. Senators will understand that the labor of a district depends more upon the number of entries that are made than upon the amount of the duties collected. The entries made in Vermont are three-fourths as many as the entire entries in the ports of Boston and Charlestown, and they are more than four times as many as the entire entries in the other thirty-three districts of New England. If the district is divided, as proposed, each district will be larger than any other district in New England, except the port of Boston and Charlestown.

Now, a word about the situation. The northern border of Vermont is a very wide one, and there are six or seven railroads coming in, some of them at the extreme northwestern corner and the others at the northeastern corner. The collector is located in the northwest. He is well located for about one-half of the business of the district, and very badly located for the other half, being separated from it by a mountain range. He can more easily get to Boston or New York, 300 or 400 miles away, than to the other end of his district. This measure is in the interest of economy, and provides for two collectors, each one in the center of his district.

Mr. GORMAN. Let me ask the Senator from Vermont when this provision is to go into effect?

Mr. PROCTOR. On the 1st of October. The term of the present collector will expire either in August or on the 1st of September. It gives him, of course, another month or two's lease of official life, but it goes into operation at the beginning of a quarter, which is important, and it is quite important that it should be determined on early, so that provision may be made for it. I have consulted fully with the present collector, who is a most able and excellent gentleman. The measure was framed, I may say, substantially in the Treasury Department, with the exception of a few details, and was submitted to the present collector.

Mr. GORMAN. I am, of course, in great sympathy with the Senators from Vermont in their desire to increase the number of public offices, and to get their fair share in Vermont of the number of collectorships. It is true that they have been discriminated against—Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Maine having had more than their full share. I had hoped, however, that this increase of offices, which must come, would be at least delayed until the party of which the distinguished Senator, as we understand on this side of the Chamber, is one of the prime ministers, should come into power in all branches of the Government.

I had hoped, after the many declarations which have been made by our friends on the other side in favor of civil-service reform, a reform which they have so much at heart, the core of which I understand to be that good men should be retained in office, that Mr. Bradley B. Smalley, who is one of the model collectors of the United States, would possibly be retained because of his great efficiency; and I am sorry to know that we are now to sacrifice him, and that he is to be the first victim, by legislation. I really think the Senator ought to spare us on this side of the Chamber the painful necessity of speaking to such an amendment at this time.

The result of the November election has brought to the country a new Administration, and our friends on the other side will shortly come into full possession of the offices, and not only of the present offices, but of an increased number. Vermont, however, has but one collector, and as this amendment does not, as they say, and as I understand, largely increase the expenses of the Government, and as it gives opportunity to two patriotic men to protect the flag and uphold the honor of the Government, I shall not make the point of order on it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to say a few words in reference to the economy——

Mr. HALE. If the debate is to be continued, I raise the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is made. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] on the point of order.

Mr. HALE. If the matter is to be discussed further, I make the point of order.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will withdraw his point of order, I will not debate the question. Does the Senator accept the offer?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the point of order withdrawn?

Mr. HALE. It is withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In behalf of my colleague, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 57, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

For payment to the heirs and legal representatives of those who were killed while in the employ of the United States in the discharge of their duties on the 3d day of July, 1893, at the United States torpedo station on Goat Island, in the harbor of Newport, R. I., by the explosion of the gun-cotton factory, $15,000; of which sum there shall be paid to the legal or personal representatives of each of the following persons the sum of $5,000: Frank Loughlin, Jeremiah Harrington, and Michael O'Reagan: Provided, That where the deceased left a widow and children the widow shall receive one-half and the children shall share alike.

Mr. HILL. I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to be imitating the tactics of the other Senator who offered an amendment. The Senator from Rhode Island offers the amendment on behalf of his colleague.

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague has been detained, and I promised him before he went away that I would offer the amendment for him.

Mr. HILL. The other amendment was offered on behalf of an absent Senator. Still, from the names mentioned in the amendment, it looks a little Democratic, and I will not offer objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SQUIRE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 119, after line 14.

The SECRETARY. After line 14, on page 119, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to apply the sum of $25,446.93, being balance remaining unexpended of the appropriation made by the "Act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1893, and for prior years, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1893, for the purchase of a site in the State of Washington, and for the erection of a penitentiary thereon, to the construction of a wing to the penitentiary building at Walla Walla, in the State of Washington.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized to convey the land already purchased under the said act to the State of Washington and to transfer to the said State of Washington the penitentiary building when completed.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I wish to say only one word. I am not going to discuss the amendment. I will simply refer to the fact that an appropriation of $30,000 was made for the penitentiary at Walla Walla in 1893. About $5,000, or a little more, of that money has been already expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior, in his annual report submitted to Congress in December last, gives the reasons why this sum should be reappropriated. It has been already reappropriated, but on account of technical difficulties, which came as between the Department of the Interior and the Department of Justice, the Secretary of the Interior recommends that this appropriation be made; and the amendment has been drawn in consequence of a consultation by myself with the head of the Interior Department. I venture to ask that that portion of the report of the Secretary of the Interior in relation to this subject be incorporated in my remarks.

PENITENTIARY BUILDING, STATE OF WASHINGTON.

In the deficiency appropriation act approved March 3, 1893 (27 Stat. L., 661), an appropriation for the purchase of a site in the State of Washington and for the erection of a penitentiary thereon was made in the following terms:

"Penitentiary building, Washington: To carry into effect section 15 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota and South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments and to be admitted into the Union and on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States:' For the purchase of grounds and the erection thereon of a penitentiary in the State of Washington, under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, and upon such tract or parcel of land in said State as shall be designated by said Secretary, $30,000: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be devoted exclusively to the purchase of the necessary grounds and to the erection of a penitentiary in said State; and the penitentiary of the State of Washington is hereby located at or near the city of Walla Walla, Wallawalla County, in said State."

Shortly after the passage of said act the governor of the State of Washington and the secretary of the board of directors of the Washington State Penitentiary called attention to the appropriation by Congress for the purposes above mentioned and claimed that it had been appropriated for the purpose of erecting a wing to the State penitentiary at Walla Walla, in which conclusion, however, the Department did not concur, inasmuch as the act in question did not in terms so provide or grant to the State of Washington the lands to be purchased or the penitentiary building to be constructed thereon, nor authorize the transfer of the same to the State by the Secretary of the Interior when completed.

Subsequently, in September, 1893, in response to an inquiry, the United States Senator from Washington (Hon. WATSON C. SQUIRE) was advised as to the view of the case aforesaid, and it was suggested, as the appropriation for the penitentiary was small, it might be advisable, in the interest of economy, to construct the same as a wing to the existing State penitentiary building, provided the United States could purchase the necessary ground and have the use in the construction, if required (without cost to the Government), of a part of said penitentiary wall, the absolute control, however, of the new wing to remain, upon completion, in the United States.

No response having been made to such proposition, in June, 1894, the Department, as a preliminary to the commencement of the work contemplated in the act, appointed a commission for the purpose of examining and recommending a suitable site near Walla Walla, Wash., on which to construct the penitentiary building. The tract selected by this board, consisting of 40 acres of land near the city of Walla Walla, was accepted by the Department, the title of the vendor thereof was approved by the Attorney-General, and thereafter, upon the conveyance of the land to the United States, the consideration named in the deed therefor, to wit, $4,000, was paid.

Thereafter plans and specifications for the penitentiary to be constructed near Walla Walla were prepared, but no contract for the work was let nor has any building been constructed, for the reason that the Attorney-General, who had been requested to direct an officer under his supervision in Washington to designate on the site purchased a suitable location for the building, declined to do so, holding in effect that it was evidently not the intention of Congress to provide, in the act of March 3, 1893, for the construction of a Federal penitentiary at Walla Walla, but merely one for the State of Washington. Subsequently that officer was requested to advise the Department whether the land purchased in the name of the United States as a site for such penitentiary building, and the building to be constructed thereon after its completion, could be transferred to the State of Washington without further legislation, to which the following reply was made:

"I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of the 9th instant, and to say in reply that I think further legislation is required in the matter of the penitentiary at Walla Walla, Wash. For the reasons stated in my letter of the 9th instant, I think the situation is anomalous. The appropriation (27 Stats., 661) under which you purchased grounds and propose to erect a penitentiary in the State of Washington is in terms made "to carry into effect section 15" of the enabling act under which the two Dakotas, Montana, and Washington were admitted into the Union. The act of March 2, 1881 (21 Stats., 378) had appropriated $30,000 for the erection of a penitentiary in the Territory of Dakota. Section 15 of the enabling act expressly granted to the State of South Dakota the lands acquired under the act of 1881 and any unexpended balances of the moneys thereby appropriated; and, having also transferred to Montana the penitentiary and all lands connected therewith at Deer Lodge City, provided:

"'And the States of North Dakota and Washington shall, respectively, have like grants for the same purpose, and subject to like terms and conditions as provided in said act of March 2, 1881, for the Territory of Dakota.'

"This was merely a promise to make the four States equal by providing North Dakota and Washington with penitentiaries, as had been done with South Dakota and Montana. The act of 1893 (27 Stats., 661) was merely in the line of performing that promise. But, as I am advised that Washington already has a penitentiary, it seems to me the attention of Congress should be called to the matter before any further expenditure of money is made. Certainly there is no authority at present for the transfer of the land you have already bought with the money appropriated by the last-named act."

The attention of Congress should be directed to this matter to the end that if such was its intention originally, the act should be so amended as to authorize the construction of the penitentiary building provided for in the act of 1893 as a wing to the penitentiary building of the State of Washington at Walla Walla; furthermore, that authority be conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior to convey the land already purchased under said act to that State and to transfer to the latter the penitentiary wing when completed.

Of the appropriation of $30,000 for the purpose stated in the act of March 3, 1893, there has been expended for expenses of commission to select site for building, preparation of plans and specifications, and purchase of 40 acres of land, the sum of $4,553.07, leaving an available balance at this time of $25,446.93.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I offer an amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 130, at the end of line 22, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That hereafter the clerks of the several United States circuit and district courts in South Dakota, Montana, and Washington shall be entitled to charge and receive the same fees and compensation allowed by law to similar officers performing similar services in the States of North Dakota, Oregon, and Idaho.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer an amendment that has been favorably reported by the Committee on Fisheries, and is recommended by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, after line 25, it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of the fish hatchery belonging to the State of California, located at Battle Creek, in said State, now operated by the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, together with water rights and privileges appertaining thereto, and 10 acres more or less of land adjoining said hatchery, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. In behalf of the chairman of the Committee on Immigration [Mr. LODGE], and in behalf of the committee, I offer an amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill:

That the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of carrying out the recommendations made in the report of the Immigration Investigating Committee, dated October 7, 1895, may make leases and renewals thereof, for a term not exceeding ten years, of certain lands on Ellis Island, New York Harbor, not exceeding 37,500 square feet, adjacent to and connected by bridge way with the main building, for the erection of a building to be used as a land and labor bureau.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to hear something about the amendment before it is voted on.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have some papers in my hand that show the project, but I will say that it is deemed by the immigration authorities advisable to have a large building erected there by private parties to aid in distributing immigrants around over the country.

Mr. GRAY. That matter has been brought up, it appears to me, before; it has been broached in the Senate, and it evoked some criticism and some opposition that the Government should be in partnership with private parties in this matter of regulating immigration into this country. It may be unobjectionable, but it does not seem so to me.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say that the Senator is mistaken. The Government is not to be in partnership with any private parties. This simply authorized the lease of some ground.

Mr. GRAY. I understand, and if I am wrong the Senator will correct me, that the project is to lease Government land to private parties and erect buildings for the reception of immigrants who are now under the control of the Government immigrant inspectors, in order to distribute them throughout the country by the transportation agents who will have access to that building. I think that is almost too much of a project to incorporate at this late hour on Sunday night in an appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I see no objection to it myself.

Mr. GRAY. I have given some thought to it. There is some objection to it.

Mr. ALLISON arose.

Mr. GRAY. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I arose to make the point of order on it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suppose the point of order is no stronger, being made by two Senators, is it, Mr. President?

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FAULKNER. I feel some delicacy about asking recognition, but if there is no one else to offer an amendment, I rise to submit one.

On page 51, I move to have stricken from the bill the matter commencing with line 6 and to line 23, inclusive, which is the provision of the bill as it comes from the House, in reference to the transfer of the General Post-Office Department and certain bureaus under it to the city post-office building. Of course it is recognized that this was not intended originally for this purpose, but the object of my amendment is not to interfere, provided it is proper to make the transfer. Upon examination of the hearings before the committee of the House and other information which I have obtained, it is clear that there is at least 10,000 square feet of space less assigned to the General Post-Office in the city post-office building than they are now occupying in the offices in which they are at present located. They are to-day overcrowded, and can not properly work or perform their duties in their present location.

If this be a correct statement of the facts, shown in the hearings on pages 241 and 242, which was called to the attention of the committee before the bill was reported, I think it is proper that this matter should go into conference: and if, as I understand, there is a difference of at least nine or ten thousand square feet in favor of the present location, it may be remedied, if the committee think proper to make the transfer, by not including all the bureaus suggested in this amendment, but leaving some of them where they are located until further arrangements can be made. I want to put the matter in conference, so that it may be examined by the conferees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 5, on page 51, it is proposed to strike out all of the bill down to and including line 23 on the same page, as follows:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall notify the Postmaster-General as soon as the post-office building in the city of Washington is completed and ready for occupancy, and thereupon the Post-Office Department, including the Money-Order Office and the office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department, including the records of said office now in the Union Building, and the office of the Topographer, shall be removed to said post-office building, and shall occupy therein, together with the city post-office, such rooms and other space as shall be assigned by the Postmaster-General, and thereafter said building shall be under the control of the Post-Office Department.

As soon as the present Post-Office Department building is vacated as herein provided the same shall be turned over to and thereafter be under the control of the Interior Department, to be occupied by the Indian Office, General Land Office, and such other offices or parts of offices or bureaus of the Department as the Secretary of the Interior shall direct.

Mr. NELSON. I make the point of order against the amendment. It is plainly the object to get the amendment into conference, and I do not want it to get into conference. I do not want it to get into a position where it can possibly be in conference. If it is further insisted on, I shall call for a yea-and-nay vote upon it.

Mr. FAULKNER. It is a House provision, and no point of order can be made on my motion. It is made in absolute good faith to enable the conferees to ascertain whether this can be done, and if not fully, in justice to the public service, that they can take from it one or two of the small bureaus and leave them where they now are.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit to the Senate the motion of the Senator from West Virginia. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Several SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. FAULKNER. I withdraw the call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANTLE. I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 8, after line 10.

The amendment was read and agreed to, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to select, designate, and procure, by purchase or otherwise, a suitable site for a public building in the city of Butte, Mont., there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000. Said site shall contain at least 16,000 square feet of ground, and shall leave an open space around the building to be erected thereon, including streets and alleys, of at least 40 feet. The appropriation herein made shall be available during this fiscal year for the purchase of said site.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment which in another shape has passed the other House of Congress, has been reported favorably by a committee of the Senate, and which does not carry a dollar of appropriation.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any person or persons to sell, dispense, or otherwise dispose of intoxicating liquors of any kind, or any compound or preparation thereof, either in the Capitol building in the District of Columbia, or upon any part of the public grounds upon which said building is situate. That any violation of this act shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall, for each separate offense, be punished by a fine not exceeding $500. That the courts of the District of Columbia exercising criminal jurisdiction shall have jurisdiction of all violations of this act.

Mr. HILL. In the interest of temperance, I am compelled to object to this prohibition amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am very sorry, considering the day and the occasion, that the Senator objects, but I presume the amendment is subject to a point of order. Does the Senator make the point of order?

Mr. HILL. I was one of those who protested against the session to-day, and I knew that a great deal of wrong was likely to be done.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator make the point of order?

Mr. HILL. If we are to have a session on Sunday and other days, we must have the usual appliances, such as a well-regulated restaurant. While I do not object to applying prohibition to New Hampshire, I do object to applying it to the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. We will vote on the amendment if the Senator simply objects.

Mr. HILL. I object, and make the point of order that it is unconstitutional and out of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire withdraw the amendment?

Mr. GALLINGER. It had better be ruled upon.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will withdraw it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. VEST presented a memorial of 150 business men of St. Louis, Mo., remonstrating against the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of Bates City, Columbia, Liberty, and Mayview, all in the State of Missouri, praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McBRIDE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BIRDS AND ANIMALS IN YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask that the bill (S. 1654) to amend an act entitled "An act to protect the birds and animals in the Yellowstone National Park, and to punish crimes in said park, and for other purposes," be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary. That is agreed to by the Senator who reported it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

FUNDING OF TERRITORIAL INDEBTEDNESS.

Mr. BRICE. The bill (H. R. 10271) authorizing the funding of indebtedness in the Territories of the United States passed the Senate a day or so ago, and a motion was made to reconsider the vote by which it was passed. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. NELSON. I object. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is not in his seat, and he asked me to object in case the matter was brought up.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. BRICE. I move to lay on the table the motion to reconsider, which I understand is not a debatable question.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. TELLER (to Mr. NELSON). Do not do that.

Mr. BRICE. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. I said to the Senator from North Carolina early in the evening that at this time in the evening I should make the motion. I understand he would have withdrawn the motion, but he did not care to withdraw the opposition to the bill, and I therefore said to him that this motion would be made at this time. It is late in the session. The motion is not debatable, and I ask for a vote on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair submits to the Senate the motion of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. NELSON. Is the motion debatable?

Several SENATORS. No.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to lay on the table is not debatable.

Mr. NELSON. I shall call for a quorum if the motion is insisted upon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio to lay on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PETTIGREW and Mr. NELSON called for a division.

Mr. TELLER. That will destroy the session for to-night. We might as well have the yeas and nays.

Mr. NELSON. I do not want this bill to go through, and I insist that it shall not go through to-night. I call for a division on the question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. A division is called for.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that he withdraw his motion and renew it at some other time.

Mr. STEWART. When there is a quorum present.

Mr. HALE. Evidently we can not get through with this to-night. There is no quorum present.

Mr. CHANDLER. And we can go on with other business.

Mr. FAULKNER. We might as well stop anyhow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators in favor of the motion will rise and stand until they are counted. The Chair has no discretion in the matter, a division being demanded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senator from West Virginia to withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, so that the Senator from Colorado can call up the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which ought to be read to-night.

Mr. NELSON. I can not withdraw the demand for a division, and I will explain why. There is one paragraph in the bill which Senators, if they knew of it, would never approve.

Mr. CULLOM. Then I hope the Senator from Ohio will not press his motion to-night.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is very evident there is not a quorum here, and this motion can not be disposed of to-night. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, March 1, 1897, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 1, 1897.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. TELLER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

LIST OF CLAIMS ALLOWED.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 24th ultimo, a list of additional judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, amounting to $541,865.95; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEGATION BUILDINGS ABROAD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in connection with his letter of the 15th instant in regard to official residences for United States ambassadors and ministers, a dispatch from Mr. Wayne MacVeagh, United States ambassador at Rome, upon the subject; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD BAXTER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an additional settlement by the accounting officers of the Treasury in favor of Edward Baxter, special assistant United States attorney for the middle district of Tennessee, amounting to $6,500; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

WHARF AT WAKEFIELD, VA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for Government wharf at Wakefield, Va., $987; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. SQUIRE presented the credentials of George Turner, chosen by the legislature of Washington a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1897; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

Mr. SHOUP presented the credentials of Henry Heitfeld, chosen by the legislature of the State of Idaho a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1897; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

REPRINT OF SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the Public Printer may be ordered to print the sundry civil appropriation bill with the Senate amendments numbered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the petition of Rev. Dr. J. G. Butler, pastor of the Lutheran Memorial Church; of Rev. Howard Wilbur Ennis, of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip; of W. H. Pennell, chairman of the Christian citizenship committee of the District of Columbia Endeavor Union; of W. S. Dewhurst, president of the District of Columbia Epworth League; of Mrs. S. D. La Fétra, superintendent of the Christian citizenship department of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union; of Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the Reform Bureau, and of Rev. L. B. Wilson, D. D., presiding elder, in behalf of two mass meetings of citizens, all in the city of Washington, D. C., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Typographical Union No. 6, of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of Rev. S. B. Ervin and sundry other citizens of Castine, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the petition of Rev. W. H. Hormel and sundry other citizens of Canton, Mo., and the petition of Rev. Z. M. Williams and sundry other citizens of Gallatin, Mo., praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Foristell, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation to further protect the first day of the week as a day of rest in the District of Columbia; to prohibit interstate gambling by telegraph, telephone, or otherwise; for the appointment of an impartial, nonpartisan industrial commission, and also to raise the age of consent to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRICE presented a petition of the State board of health of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a permanent census service; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Samuel Arch & Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, and a petition of Osborn, Hutchins & Hunt, of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the passage of the Torrey bankruptcy bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of H. M. Parker, of Elyria, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation regulating fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, and associations; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the E. W. Vanduzen Company, of Cincinnati; of H. Belmer, vice-president of the Cincinnati Barbed Wire Fence Company, of Cincinnati; of R. L. Ireland, assistant secretary of the Globe Iron Works Company, of Cleveland; of Stephens & Widlar, of Cleveland; of the Canfield Oil Company, of Cleveland, and of the Salem Wire Nail Company, of Findlay, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Girard; of Mabel F. Hall, corresponding secretary of the Pleasant Ridge Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, of Cincinnati, and of 44 citizens, all in the State of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of sundry citizens of Massachusetts, praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of North Adams, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Richard A. Ford, president of the District of Columbia Baptist Young People's Union, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the transmission by mail or interstate commerce of pictures or descriptions of prize fights; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Rev. J. G. Butler, D. D., in behalf of a mass meeting of citizens of Washington, D. C.; of Rev. Howard Wilbur Ennis, of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip; of W. H. Pennell, chairman of the Christian citizenship committee of the District of Columbia Endeavor Union; of W. S. Dewhurst, president of the District of Columbia Epworth League; of Mrs. S. D. La Fétra, superintendent of the Christian citizenship department of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union; of Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent of the Reform Bureau, and of Rev. L. B. Wilson, presiding elder, in behalf of a union meeting held in Washington February 28, 1897, praying for the passage of the so-called Aldrich antiprize fight bill, to prohibit the transmission of pictures and descriptions of prize fights through the mails; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Springfield, Mass., and a petition of members of the First Congregational Church of Amherst, Mass., praying for the ratification of the pending arbitration treaty with Great Britain; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Central Labor Union of Brockton, Mass., remonstrating against the adoption of certain proposed amendments to the so-called seaman's bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALDRICH presented the petition of John Worthington, editor of the Herald, of Newport, R. I., praying for the passage of House bill No. 4566, to amend the postal laws relating to second-class mail matter; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry petitions of churches and societies of Rhode Island, and the petition of Rev. John Evans and sundry other citizens of Westerly, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation to raise the age of consent to 18 years in the District of Columbia and the Territories; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry petitions of various churches and societies of Rhode Island, praying for the appointment of an impartial, nonpartisan industrial commission; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of Anthony, R. I.; of sundry churches and societies of Rhode Island; of members of the Congregational church of Kingston, R. I., and of Rev. John Evans and sundry other citizens of Westerly, R. I., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting interstate gambling by telegraph, telephone, or otherwise; which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of the Young People's Societies of Christian Endeavor of the Globe Congregational, the Baptist, and the Methodist Episcopal churches of Woonsocket; of members of the Congregational Church and Christian Endeavor Society of Kingston; of sundry churches and societies, all in the State of Rhode Island, praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURPIE presented sundry petitions of citizens of Royal Center, Atlanta, and Indianapolis, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. THURSTON presented sundry petitions of citizens of Brunswick, North Platte, Dawson, and Dewitt, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation regulating beneficiary societies, orders, and associations; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of sundry citizens of Bond County, Ill., praying for the enactment of a Sunday-rest law in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of Staunton and Rockbridge, in the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of the Torrey bankruptcy bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of J. A. Crosby, of Aurora, Ill., and a petition of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor and of the Court Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of Rockford, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol building; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of Chicago and Peoria, Ill., and a petition of sundry citizens of New York, praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Dekalb, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry petitions of citizens of Peoria, Chicago, and Monmouth, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the passage of the so called Loud bill, relating to second-class mail matter; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of District Assembly No. 9, Knights of Labor, of Chicago, Ill., and a memorial of the Amalgamated Workingmen's Association of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 9647, to authorize the extension of the lines of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, in the District of Columbia; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BERRY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Nettleton, Ark., praying for the passage of the antiscalping railroad ticket bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE. I report back from the Committee on Appropriations the bill (H. R. 10329) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for prior years, and for other purposes, with amendments, and submit a report thereon. I shall call up the bill as soon as possible.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1185) granting a pension to Rachel Patton, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6352) to simplify the system of making sales in the Subsistence Department to officers and enlisted men of the Army, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1166) for the relief of Dorence Atwater, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. ALLEN on the 11th ultimo, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred with the accompanying report to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 211) providing for a comprehensive index to Government publications from 1881 to 1893, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2974) to correct the military record of Corydon Winkler, late private, Eighth Company, First Battalion First Ohio Sharpshooters, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3733) granting a pension to Elizabeth Pittman, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. From the same committee, I report favorably two vetoed pension bills—the bill (S. 1323) granting a pension to Maria Somerlat, widow of Valentine Somerlat, and the bill (H. R. 1139) granting a pension to Caroline D. Mowatt—with the recommendation that they be passed, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bills will be placed on the Calendar.

HENRY A. DU PONT.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to submit a privileged report. It is the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the case of Henry A. Du Pont, claiming a seat in this body from the State of Delaware. The report is signed by all the members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and is very brief. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD without reading it, and that it also be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the petition of Henry A. Du Pont, of the State of Delaware, claiming a seat in the Senate from that State in virtue of an election by the legislature thereof on May 9, 1895, have considered the same, and report:

Mr. Du Pont presented to the Senate December 4, 1895, a petition for admission as Senator from the State of Delaware for what then remained unexpired of the term beginning March 4, 1895.

It appeared that at a joint convention of the two houses of the legislature of the State of Delaware, duly held on the 9th day of May, 1895, 15 votes were cast for Mr. Du Pont and 15 votes for other candidates. One of the votes cast for other candidates was the vote of the acting governor of the State of Delaware, who had succeeded to the executive chair on the death of the governor. He was a senator and the speaker of the Delaware senate at the time of the alleged election, the term of office for which he had been elected for senator and speaker having not expired. If he were entitled to vote, Mr. Du Pont was not lawfully elected. If he were not so entitled, Mr. Du Pont had a majority of 1 vote. The question of his right to vote depended upon the question whether his accession to the executive chair by virtue of the constitution of the State should deprive him of his title to vote as a senator.

That question was the only one raised in the discussion of Mr. Du Pont's title to a seat in the Senate. The Committee on Privileges and Elections reported in his favor and there was a full discussion of the question.

On the 15th day of May, 1896, the Senate passed the following resolution by a majority of one vote:

"Resolved, That Henry A. Du Pont is not entitled to a seat in the Senate from the State of Delaware for the full term commencing March 4, 1895."

Mr. Du Pont now prays to have this question reopened. The grounds of his application, as stated in his petition and by his eminent counsel in an argument addressed to the committee, are:

First. That there was a mistake in the pairs as announced when the vote on this resolution was taken, so that a Senator who was in favor of Mr. Du Pont was paired against him. On investigation we find that no such mistake occurred, and that every Senator who desired to vote, who was in favor of Mr. Du Pont, either voted for him or was paired in his favor.

Second. That the petitioner expects to satisfy the Senate that it was wrong in its construction of the constitution of Delaware when it held that the vote of the acting governor for another candidate than Mr. Du Pont was lawful.

New Senators have entered the Chamber since the resolution just cited was adopted. Nothing else has changed. The case then stated and acted upon is the case now stated. The simple question is whether the Senate, notwithstanding its decision of May 15, 1896, will now admit Mr. Du Pont to a seat.

The majority of your committee now, as then, are of the opinion that this decision of the Senate was wrong. But the Senate is made by the Constitution the judge of the elections, qualifications, and returns of its members, and its judgment is just as binding in law in all constitutional vigor and potency when it is rendered by one majority as when it is unanimous.

It is clear that the word "judge" in the Constitution was used advisedly. The Senate in the case provided for is to declare a result depending upon the application of law to existing facts, and is not to be affected in its action by the desire of its members or by their opinions as to public policies or public interest. Its action determines great constitutional rights—the title of an individual citizen to a high office and the title of a sovereign State to be represented in the Senate by the person of its choice. We can not doubt that this declaration of the Senate is a judgment in the sense in which that word is used by judicial tribunals. We can conceive of no case which can arise in human affairs where it is more important that a judgment of any court should be respected and should stand unaffected by caprice or anything likely to excite passion or to tempt virtue. When the Senate decided the question it was sitting as a high constitutional court. In its action we think it ought to respect the principles, in giving effect to its own decision, which have been established in other judicial tribunals in like cases, and which the experience of mankind has found safe and salutary.

We do not doubt that the Senate, like other courts, may review its own judgments where new evidence has been discovered or where, by reason of fraud or accident, it appears that the judgment ought to be reviewed. The remedy which in other courts may be given by writs of review or error or bills of review may doubtless be given here by a simple vote reversing the first adjudication. We have no doubt that a legal doctrine involved in a former judgment of the Senate may be overruled in later cases. But there is no case known in other judicial tribunals in which a final judgment in the same case can be rescinded or reversed merely because the composition of the court has changed or because the members of the court who originally decided it have changed their mind as to the law or fact which is involved.

It seems to us very important to the preservation of Constitutional government, very important to the dignity and authority of the Senate, very important to the peace of the country that we should abide by this principle. There are few greater temptations which affect the conduct of men than the temptation to seize upon political power without regard to the obligation of law. To act upon the doctrine upon which this petition rests would expose the Senate to the temptation to reverse its own judgments and to vacate or to award seats in this Chamber according as the changing majorities should make possible. If such practice should be admitted, it would, in our opinion, go far to weaken the respect due to this body and the respect due to constitutional authority.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. VILAS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE subsequently, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. VILAS this day, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted the following order; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Ordered, That Senate Report No. 1517, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, be reprinted, with the minority report, for the use of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. CHANDLER, it was Ordered, That 500 copies of Senate Report No. 1517, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, be printed, with the minority report, for the use of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 27th instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 205) granting a pension to Mary O. H. Stoneman;

An act (S. 2729) granting a pension to Emma Weir Casey;

An act (S. 2877) granting a pension to Hiram Santas;

An act (S. 3623) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Gonld Carr, widow of the late Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Joseph B. Carr, United States Volunteers, deceased; and

An act (S. 3666) to remove doubts as to the power of the supreme court of the District of Columbia to provide for a vacancy in the office of attorney of the United States for the District of Columbia.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: A few minutes ago I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the sundry civil bill was passed, because in my absence last night, and in the absence of other members of the Committee on Immigration, an amendment was made to that bill, relating to the subject of immigration, changing the existing law very vitally, without any notice whatever to my committee or without any knowledge on our part that such an amendment was contemplated. I entered a motion to reconsider in order that I might, if possible, get the bill back here and have the amendment stricken out. I have received, however, assurances that the amendment will be abandoned in conference, and on that understanding I desire to withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

HARRIET M. KNOWLTON—VETO MESSAGE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith without approval Senate bill No. 719, entitled "An act to restore a pension to Harriet M. Knowlton."

Maj. William Knowlton, a most worthy volunteer soldier, died of wounds received in battle on the 20th day of September, 1864.

In 1865 his widow, the beneficiary named in this bill, was pensioned at the rate of $25 a month, commencing on the day of her husband's death, with an additional allowance for four minor children, dating from July, 1866.

She continued to receive this pension and allowance until November, 1867, when she married Albin P. Stinchfield.

Thereupon her name was dropped from the pension roll, she having by her remarriage lost her pensionable condition, and her children were pensioned at a small monthly rate from the date of their mother's remarriage until June 1, 1880, when the youngest became 16 years of age.

The beneficiary, after living with her second husband about twenty-two years, secured a divorce from him in the year 1889, and it is now proposed to pension the divorced wife as the widow of her deceased soldier husband at the rate she received while she was actually his widow thirty years ago.

Her pensionable relation to the Government terminated with her marriage, and her divorce from her second husband could not upon any ground of principle restore it. A departure from this rule, even in aid of cases of hardship, can not fail to establish precedents inviting the abandonment of reasonable and justifiable pension theories.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 1, 1897.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is another case such as the President has been in the habit of vetoing during the last few weeks. I move that the bill and accompanying message be referred to the Committee on Pensions for further investigation.

The motion was agreed to.

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN COMMISSION REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Congress:

I transmit herewith the report of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Columbian Commission.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 1, 1897.

NOTE.—The report and accompanying documents have been sent to the House of Representatives with a similar message.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask that the report may be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be referred without printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the report will be referred to the Committee on Printing, without printing.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be considered as they are reached.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

THOMAS W. SCOTT.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask the Senator from Colorado to yield to me, that I may request the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9184) for the relief of Thomas W. Scott, late United States marshal.

Mr. TELLER. I will yield, but I wish Senators would let us go on with the appropriation bill. Such matters can be called up afterwards. I yield to the Senator from Virginia, however.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Thomas W. Scott, late United States marshal, eastern district of Virginia, $350, due him by reason of the custody of G. M. Bain, jr., of Norfolk, Va.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WESLEY A. PLETCHER.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask the courtesy of the honorable Senator from Colorado to permit me to call up a private pension bill.

Mr. TELLER. Is it a House pension bill?

Mr. TURPIE. Yes, sir; it is a House bill.

Mr. TELLER. I will have to yield for a House pension bill, I suppose, but I do not want to yield for anything else. I will yield in this one case.

Mr. TURPIE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5183) granting an increase of pension to Wesley A. Pletcher.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Wesley A. Pletcher, late of Company K, One hundred and sixty-first Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, a pension of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension now drawn by him.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORFEITED DOMESTIC SMOKING OPIUM.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senator from Colorado to allow me to call up a bill which has to go to the other House on account of a slight amendment, and it is rather important that it should be passed at the present time.

Mr. TELLER. If the bill will not bring on any discussion, I will let the Senator from Vermont call it up.

Mr. MORRILL. If it does, I will withdraw it at once.

Mr. TELLER. I hope, however, that Senators will not appeal to me any more.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10203) to amend section 40 of "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, so as to authorize the sale of forfeited domestic smoking opium to the highest bidder.

I will state that the Committee on Finance were unanimously of the opinion that instead of going into the business ourselves while we are trying to suppress it we should, instead of authorizing its sale at auction, authorize its destruction.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "words," to strike out "may be sold to the highest bidder, pursuant to the provisions of section 3460, Revised Statutes, if not valued as therein provided at over $500; but if valued at more than $500 the sale shall be made pursuant to the judgment of the court in the proceedings for condemnation or forfeiture," and insert "shall be destroyed;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 40 of an act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, be amended by adding at the end of said section the words "and shall be destroyed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MORRILL, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. PLATT were appointed.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10167) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "General expenses," on page 8, after line 4, to insert:

Free public library: For librarian, $1,600; first assistant librarian, $900; second assistant librarian, $720; and for rent, fuel, light, fitting up rooms, and other contingent expenses, $3,500: in all, $6,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Contingent and miscellaneous expenses," on page 10, line 13, after the word "advertised," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That all penalties on taxes due and payable on or before the 1st day of July, 1896, be, and the same are hereby, remitted, provided that the taxes due and payable on or prior to said date are paid with 6 per cent interest on or before the 1st day of January, 1898.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 25, to insert:

To enable the register of wills to compare, correct, and reproduce certain records, or will books, including clerical service and purchase of books, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 12, after the word "paid," to insert "unless Congress shall hereafter specifically direct payment thereof;" so as to make the clause read:

For special repairs to market houses, $1,500. That the act approved February 13, 1895, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes,' approved June 16, 1880," be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and all proceedings pending shall be vacated; and no judgment heretofore rendered in pursuance of said act shall be paid unless Congress shall hereafter specifically direct payment thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Permanent system of highways," on page 12, after line 14, to insert:

For payment of judgments for the land condemned for the extension of Sixteenth street by the supreme court of the District of Columbia in case No. 419, District court, $210,000, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 20, to insert:

To pay for lands to be condemned under the highway act approved March 3, 1893, for the extension of Rhode Island avenue from Le Droit avenue to Harewood avenue northwest, namely, for lands between Le Droit avenue and Harewood avenue, not exceeding $35,000, and for lands between Harewood avenue and Florida avenue, not exceeding $30,000, in all, $65,000, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 6, to increase the appropriation for assessment and permit work from $125,000 to $175,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 10, page 13, under the head of "Improvements and repairs," to increase the appropriation for work on streets and avenues named in Appendix Bb, Book of Estimates, 1898, from $100,000 to $200,000, namely:

Georgetown schedule, from $9,166 to $18,332.
Northwest section schedule, from $29,583 to $59,166.
Southwest section schedule, from $13,666 to $27,332.
Southeast section schedule, from $21,684 to $43,368.
Northeast section schedule, from $25,900 to $51,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 4, to insert:

For paving with asphalt East Capitol street, between Eleventh and Thirteenth streets southeast, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 7, to insert:

For paving H street, between Twenty-second and Twenty-third streets northwest, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Sewers," on page 15, line 14, to increase the appropriation for suburban sewers from $36,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 19, to increase the appropriation for completion of the upper portion of the Rock Creek and B street intercepting sewer from $90,000 to $130,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 25, to increase the appropriation for constructing, in part, the Tiber Creek and New Jersey avenue high-level intercepting sewer from $50,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Construction of county roads," on page 17, line 9, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That the owners thereof shall dedicate the spaces for widening said Columbia road within the limits named, for conformity with the recorded plans of highway extensions.

And insert:

Provided, That if any surplus remains of the sum hereby appropriated, the same shall be expended for paving Baltimore street from Columbia road to Twentieth street, and thence along Twentieth street to the Adams Mill road entrance to the Zoological Park: Provided, however, That the portions of Baltimore street and Twentieth street so paved are, or shall be, dedicated by the owners for conformity with the plans for highway extension.

So as to make the clause read:

For paving Connecticut avenue and Columbia road, between Florida avenue and Eighteenth street extended, $36,000: Provided, That if any surplus remains of the sum hereby appropriated, etc.

Mr. TELLER. I desire, by direction of the committee, to amend the proposed amendment by striking out, after the word "extension," in line 12, the words "Provided, That if any surplus remains of the sum hereby appropriated, the same shall be expended," and inserting after the word "for," in line 14, the words "regulating and;" so as to read "regulating and paving Baltimore street;" and in line 16, after the word "Park," to insert "$4,000." The clause would then read:

For regulating and paving Baltimore street from Columbia road to Twentieth street, and thence along Twentieth street to the Adams Mill road entrance to the Zoological Park, $4,000: Provided, however, That the portions of Baltimore street and Twentieth street so paved are, or shall be, dedicated by the owners, for conformity with the plans for highway extension.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 19, to insert:

For grading and regulating Clifton, Irving, Yale, Bismark, Harvard, Columbia, Steuben, Kenesaw, Wallach, and Thirteenth streets, from Seventh to Fourteenth streets, completing improvements, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 23, to insert:

For grading and regulating Sherman avenue, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 18, to insert:

For grading and regulating Kenesaw avenue and Park road, $10,000: Provided, That Park road, or Park highway, between Kenesaw avenue and Klingle road, be dedicated to the District of Columbia, for conformity with recorded plans of highway extensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 5, to insert:

For paving Spruce street, Le Droit Park, from Larch street to Harewood avenue, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 7, to insert:

For grading and graveling Albermarle street and opening same to Grant road, continuing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 10, to insert:

For grading and graveling Twenty-second and Twenty-fourth streets, Langdon, $4,000 dollars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 12, to insert:

For grading and regulating Twelfth street extended, from Florida avenue to Mount Olivet road, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 15, to insert:

For paving Massachusetts avenue extended, from Twenty-second street to Sheridan Circle, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 17, to insert:

For grading Pennsylvania avenue extended, southeast, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 19, to insert:

For grading and regulating Emporia street, from Twelfth street to Brentwood road, $5,000: Provided, That the owners thereof shall dedicate the spaces for widening and extending said street within the limits named for conformity with the plans of highways extensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 24, to insert:

For continuing the improvement of the road extending from Broad Branch road to Chevy Chase Circle, $5,000: Provided, That as to the part of said road dedicated as a public highway in 1896, the owners of adjoining property shall dedicate the spaces for widening said part for conformity with the plans of highway extensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 6, to insert:

For improving Thirty-seventh street between Back street and Tennallytown road at or near Schneider lane, $374.48 (the same being unexpended balance of appropriation of June 11, 1890, for paying court expenses and fees of commissioners, and paying for ground taken, and damages to property to open and extend said street), together with $500 additional for the same purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 15, to insert:

For paving Spruce and Bohrer streets, from Larch street to Florida avenue, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 17, to insert:

For improving and protecting Connecticut avenue extended beyond Rock Creek, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 20, after the word "paving," to insert "Princeton street and;" in line 22, before the word "dollars," to strike out "four thousand five hundred" and insert "nine thousand;" and in line 23, before the word "five," to strike out "forty thousand" and insert "one hundred and thirty-four thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For grading, regulating, and paving Princeton street and Roanoke street from Thirteenth street to Fourteenth street, $9,000; in all, $134,500.

Mr. TELLER. That must be amended so as to correct the total. It should read "$138,000" in lieu of "$134,500."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 19, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "eighty-five;" and in line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "sixteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

Lighting: For illuminating material, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning public lamps on avenues, streets, roads, and alleys; purchasing and expense of erecting new lamp-posts, street designations, lanterns, and fixtures; moving lamp-posts, painting lamp-posts and lanterns; replacing and repairing lamp-posts and lanterns damaged or unfit for service; for storage and cartage of material, $185,000: Provided, That no more than $20 per annum for each street lamp shall be paid for gas or oil, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, painting, and cleaning, under any expenditure provided for in this act: Provided, That all of said lamps shall burn every night, on the average, from forty-five minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise: Provided further, That before any expenditures are made from the appropriations herein provided for, the contracting gas companies shall equip each street lamp with a self-regulating burner and tip, so combined and adjusted as to secure, under all ordinary variations of pressure and density, a consumption of 5 cubic feet of gas per hour.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 8, before the word "lighted," to strike out "now;" in line 9, after the word "Washington," to insert "on the 1st day of January, 1897;" in line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and for necessary extension of such service, fifty-five" and insert "forty;" and in line 19, after the word "Washington," to insert:

Provided further, That hereafter there shall be no extension of electric-lighting service, and it shall be unlawful to open any of the streets, roads, avenues, alleys, or other public highways, or any of the parks or reservations, in the District of Columbia, for the purpose of laying electric wires, cables, or conduits therein, until specifically authorized by law.

So as to make the clause read:

For electric arc lighting, including necessary inspection, in those streets lighted with electric arc lights in the city of Washington on the 1st day of January, 1897, $40,000: Provided, That not more than 25 cents per night shall be paid for any electric arc light burning from forty-five minutes after sunset to forty-five minutes before sunrise, and operated wholly by means of underground wires; and each arc light shall be of not less than 1,000 actual candle-power, and no part of this appropriation shall be used for electric lighting by means of wires that may exist on or over any of the streets or avenues of the city of Washington: Provided further, That hereafter there shall be no extension of electric-lighting service, and it shall be unlawful to open any of the streets, roads, avenues, alleys, or other public highways, or any of the parks or reservations, in the District of Columbia, for the purpose of laying electric wires, cables, or conduits therein, until specifically authorized by law.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to pass over this amendment.

Mr. TELLER. From the seventh line down to line 25?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes; the whole paragraph relating to electric arc lighting.

Mr. TELLER. Let it be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bridges," on page 23, after line 9, to insert:

That the Chief of Engineers of the Army shall report to Congress at its next regular session plans for and the cost of erecting a stone arch bridge, and also a steel bridge with stone foundations, over Rock Creek on the line of Massachusetts avenue extended, the full width of said avenue, and for this purpose the sum of $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Washington Aqueduct," on page 23, line 19, to increase the appropriation for engineering, maintenance, and general repairs from $20,000 to $21,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 21, to insert:

Washington Aqueduct tunnel: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to resume work on the Washington Aqueduct tunnel and its accessories and the Howard University reservoir, authorized by section 2 of the act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," and to prosecute and complete the same; the work on the said tunnel and accessories to be carried on in accordance with the plans of the board of experts as set forth in its report dated January 17, 1896, House Document No. 163, Fifty-fourth Congress, first session, which plans have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War. And to carry out the provisions of said act and this paragraph the balance remaining unexpended from the appropriations made by the said act of July 15, 1882, and by subsequent acts for said purpose, amounting to $360,746.38, is hereby reappropriated, to be advanced out of the revenues of the United States, and not subject to the conditions of the capital account created by the act of July 15, 1882, and the sum of $360,746.38 is also hereby appropriated, out of the surplus general revenues of the District of Columbia, to be applied to such parts of the work and in such order as to time as the Secretary of War may deem necessary to promote as soon as practicable the completion of the entire system of said works: Provided, That the sum herein set apart and appropriated shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers; and the work shall be carried on by contract or otherwise as the Secretary of War may deem best for the public interests.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "For janitors, and care of buildings and grounds," on page 28, after line 7, to insert:

Of the Wallach building, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 10, after the name "Sumner," to strike out "Wallach;" so as to make the clause read:

Of the Curtis, Dennison, Force, Gales, Garnet, Grant, Henry, Peabody, Seaton, Sumner, and Webster buildings, at $900 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 13, to increase the total appropriation for public schools from $58,996 to $59,996.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 18, to increase the appropriation for repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds from $32,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 21, to increase the appropriation for the purchase of tools, machinery, material, and apparatus to be used in connection with instruction in manual training from $8,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 11, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses, including furniture, books, stationery, etc., from $28,500 to $29,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 19, to increase the appropriation for text-books and school supplies for use of pupils of the first eight grades, etc, from $38,000 to $42,000.

The reading of the bill was continued; and line 21, on page 30, was read as follows:

For purchase of water filters, $2,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator in charge of the bill, I understand, is not averse to amending that item so as to make the appropriation immediately available. The money is needed more now, owing to the condition of the water of the Potomac in the spring season, than it will be needed after July 1. In line 21 I move to insert the words "to be immediately available."

Mr. GORMAN. The amendment is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Buildings and grounds," at the top of page 31, to insert:

For one eight-room building and site, seventh division, county, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 2, to insert:

For one eight-room building and site, northeast, sixth division, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 4, to insert:

For four-room addition to Birney School, eighth division, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 6, to insert:

For lot adjoining Curtis School building, to be acquired by purchase or condemnation, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head "For Metropolitan police," on page 32, line 19, before the word "privates," to strike out "two hundred and eighty-six" and insert "three hundred and eighteen;" in line 21, before the word "privates," to strike out "one hundred and ninety-four" and insert "two hundred and twenty-six;" and on page 33, line 9, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred and seventy-six thousand nine hundred and forty" and insert "six hundred and forty thousand three hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For major and superintendent, $3,300; captain, $1,800; 3 lieutenants, inspectors, at $1,500 each; chief clerk, who shall also be property clerk, $2,000; clerk, $1,500; clerk, $900; 4 surgeons of the police and fire departments, at $540 each; additional compensation for 12 privates detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, $2,880, or so much thereof as may be necessary; 9 lieutenants, at $1,320 each; 31 sergeants, at $1,140 each; 318 privates, class 1, at $900 each; 226 privates, class 2, at $1,080 each; 20 station keepers, at $720 each; 8 laborers, at $480 each; laborer in charge of the morgue, $360; messenger, $700; messenger, $500; major and superintendent, mounted, $240; captain, mounted, $240; 48 lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, at $240 each; 26 drivers, at $450 each; and 3 police matrons, at $600 each; in all, $640,800.

The Secretary read to line 13, on page 33, the last clause read being as follows:

Hereafter each of the members of the Metropolitan police shall be entitled to leave of absence each year with pay for such time, not exceeding twenty days, as the Commissioners shall determine.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not propose to offer an amendment to the paragraph just read, unless the Senator in charge of the bill agrees to it, but I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado why the police officers, who are exposed to great danger, and who are very hard worked men, should not have the usual leave of thirty days with other employees of the Government? Would it not be simple justice?

Mr. TELLER. I know of no reason why they should not, except that the House did not give it to them in this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will not the Senator allow the amendment to be received and let it go into conference?

Mr. TELLER. I will, and I will not object if the Senator moves to strike out the words "as the Commissioners shall determine." I do not think they should determine the duration of the leave of absence.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 12 I move to strike out the word "twenty" and insert "thirty" before the word "days," and in the same line I move to strike out the words "as the Commissioners shall determine."

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to understand that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator from Maryland desire a statement concerning it?

Mr. TELLER. I will state that if the clause was intended, as I think it was, that the Commissioners should determine when the members of the police force should take their leave it is all right, but as it stands it leaves the Commissioners with power to determine how many days of leave they shall have. That is wrong.

Mr. GORMAN. So that would be wrong, but the Commissioners must have power to determine when the leave shall be granted.

Mr. TELLER. That is what they should have, but not power to determine the number of days of leave.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that this will simply put the matter into conference, and then it can be properly framed so as to give them thirty days in lieu of twenty days.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator to amend by inserting "thirty" before "days," and then making it read "at such times as the Commissioners shall determine."

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that would be better. I will modify my amendment accordingly by moving to strike out "twenty" and inserting "thirty" before "days," and after "days" inserting "at such times."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "For the fire department," on page 34, line 11, before the word "foremen," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "eighteen;" in line 16, before the word "privates," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "twenty;" and in line 18, before the word "and," to strike out "fifty-nine thousand" and insert "sixty-five thousand six hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For chief engineer, $2,000; fire marshal, $1,000; clerk, $900; 2 assistant chief engineers, at $1,200 each; 18 foremen, at $1,000 each; 12 engineers, at $1,000 each; 13 firemen, at $840 each; 4 tillermen, at $840 each; 18 hostlers, at $840 each; 120 privates, at $800 each; 8 watchmen, at $600 each; in all, $165,660.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROACH. At the end of line 19, I move to insert:

Hereafter each of the members of the fire department shall be entitled to leave of absence each year, with pay, for such time not exceeding thirty days, at such times as the Commissioners shall determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 34, line 21, to increase the appropriation for repairs to engine houses from $3,000 to $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 23, to increase the appropriation for repairs to apparatus and new appliances from $3,000 to $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 1, to increase the appropriation for the purchase of horses from $6,000 to $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 6, to increase the appropriation for contingent expenses—horseshoeing, furniture, fixtures, etc.—from $9,000 to $10,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 7, to increase the total appropriation for miscellaneous expenses for the fire department from $39,000 to $44,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Increase fire department," on page 35, after line 9, to insert:

For exchange of old-style truck for aerial turntable truck, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, after line 13, to insert:

For house, lot, and furniture for one engine company, to be located in the section bounded by Seventh and Twelfth streets and C and F streets northwest, $35,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 20, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available;" and in line 21, before the word "hundred," to strike out "twenty-one thousand three" and insert "fifty-nine thousand eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For house, lot, and furniture for one engine company, to be located in Anacostia, $16,200, to be immediately available; in all, $39,800.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Telegraph and telephone service," on page 36, line 13, to increase the appropriation "for general supplies, repairs, new batteries, and battery supplies," etc., from $11,000 to $11,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 13, to insert:

Extension of fire-alarm telegraph: For extension of fire-alarm telegraph, including new boxes, purchase and erection of the necessary poles with cross arms, insulators, pins, and braces, wire for extension of lines, and extra labor for stringing the wire, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Health department," on page 37, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert "two inspectors of garbage, at $1,200 each;" and in line 19, before the word "hundred," to strike out "thirty thousand nine" and insert "thirty-three thousand three;" so as to make the clause read:

For health officer, $3,000; nine sanitary and food inspectors, who shall also be charged with enforcement of garbage regulations, at $1,200 each; sanitary and food inspector, who shall also inspect dairy products, and shall be a practical chemist, $1,500; sanitary and food inspector, who shall be a veterinary surgeon for all departments of the District government and act as inspector of live stock and dairy farms, $1,200; inspector of marine products, $1,200; two inspectors of garbage, $1,200 each; chief clerk and deputy health officer, $1,800; clerk, $1,400; four clerks, at $1,200 each, two of whom shall act as sanitary and food inspectors; clerk, $1,000; messenger and janitor, $900; pound master, $1,200; laborers, at not exceeding $40 per month, $1,920; ambulance driver, $480; in all, $33,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 38, to insert:

For incinerating all combustible waste collected in the District of Columbia and delivered at the furnaces, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 8, to strike out:

For the purchase of a site for a contagious-diseases hospital, $110,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

And insert:

For two isolating buildings, to be constructed, in the discretion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, on the grounds of two hospitals and to be operated as a part of such hospitals, $30,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in connection with this matter, I want to express my gratification that the Committee on Appropriations has reported this provision for two buildings in connection with the established hospitals of the city for the purpose, I take it, of treating contagious-disease patients. That is a matter of very great importance to the people of this District, and I want simply to make an allusion to the provision for a commission to investigate as to a suitable site for a hospital for contagious diseases. My conviction is that if these two isolated buildings are constructed they will practically answer all the requirements of the District so far as the treatment of contagious-disease patients is concerned.

There has been a great hue and cry in this District against establishing a contagious-disease hospital in the immediate vicinity of residences. In all the other cities of the country, so far as I know, hospitals for contagious diseases are in the heart of the city. It is so in Boston; it is so in New York; it is so in Detroit, and, I think, in every other city of the country. It is a well-established fact that there is no danger from contagious diseases if the buildings are properly constructed and the supervision is all in the direction of modern appliances.

I feel very confident, if these two buildings are constructed as provided for in the amendment reported by the committee on the grounds of established hospitals in the city, that they will answer all the requirements for many years to come. There are very few cases of contagious diseases that are not taken care of in the homes of the citizens; but now and then a case occurs where such patients are refused admission to the established hospitals, and, of course, the newspapers call attention to it and the people become alarmed.

I have no objection to this commission, but I am very fully persuaded, if the provision in lines 12 to 15, inclusive, for these two buildings is carried out, it will be found that we have adequately provided for all the necessities of this very importan case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 38, after line 15, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior, the Surgeon-General of the Army, and the Supervising Surgeon-General of the Marine-Hospital Service are hereby constituted a commission to examine suitable sites for a contagious diseases hospital in the District of Columbia, and the lowest prices at which the same can be obtained, and the probable cost of suitable buildings, and to report the result to Congress at the beginning of the next regular session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 14, to insert:

Jail grounds, District of Columbia: For the erection, under the direction of the Attorney-General, of a brick or stone wall to inclose the grounds upon which the jail in the District of Columbia now stands, including the purchase of material and the employment of such skilled and other labor as may be necessary for the purpose, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "For charities," on page 45, after line 5, to strike out:

For the relief and care of the poor and destitute, and for such charitable and reformatory work, and such care and medical and surgical treatment of poor and destitute patients in the District of Columbia as have been heretofore usually provided for by direct appropriations to private institutions, and as the District Commissioners may deem necessary, the sum of $94,700, to be expended under the direction of said Commissioners, either under contract with responsible and competent persons or institutions or by employing for the purpose the public institutions or agencies of said District, where practicable: Provided, That no such contract shall extend beyond the 30th day of June, 1898, and that no payment shall be made under any such contract except for service actually rendered, for which compensation shall be provided in said contract; and that said Commissioners shall report to Congress on or before the first Monday of December in each year a detailed statement of their expenditures theretofore made under this appropriation, and of all contracts made by them hereunder, giving the names of the persons and institutions contracted with, and stating what further expenditures will be required thereunder: Provided further, That the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended under the conditions and limitations imposed in the act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1897, page 411, volume 29, Statutes at Large of the United States.

And insert:

For relief of the poor, $13,000.
For Temporary Home for ex-Union Soldiers and Sailors, Grand Army of the Republic, $2,500.
For the Women's Christian Association, maintenance, $4,000.
For Central Dispensary and Emergency Hospital, maintenance, $15,000.
For the Children's Hospital, maintenance, $10,000.
For the National Homeopathic Hospital Association of Washington, D. C., for maintenance, $8,500.
For the Washington Hospital for Foundlings, maintenance, $6,000.
For the Church Orphanage Association of St. John's Parish, maintenance, $1,800.
For the German Orphan Asylum, maintenance, $1,800.
For the National Association for the Relief of Destitute Colored Women and Children, maintenance, including repairs, $9,900.
For St. Ann's Infant Asylum, maintenance, $5,400.
For Association for Works of Mercy, maintenance, $1,800.
For House of the Good Shepherd, maintenance, $2,700.
For the St. Rose Industrial School, maintenance, $4,500.
For St. Joseph's Asylum, maintenance, $1,800.
For Young Women's Christian Home, $1,000.
For Hope and Help Mission, maintenance, $1,000.
For Newsboys' and Children's Aid Society, maintenance, $1,000.
For Eastern Dispensary, maintenance, $1,000.
For Washington Home for Incurables, maintenance, $2,000.
For municipal lodging house and wood and stone yard, including rent, $4,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Before this matter of the charities is passed, I desire to make a single observation. It will be remembered that when some former bills were under consideration, I took exception to the appropriations for certain institutions that are named in this bill. They are always left out by the House, and they are always inserted by the Senate.

Mr. President, it is very late in the session, and I fully appreciate the value of every moment of time, and I am not going to discuss this matter at present; but I am going to say that I feel somewhat differently about the matter this year, for the reason that there is a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress, of which I think the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN] who is the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, is chairman, engaged at the present time in making an investigation of the subject of charities in the District of Columbia. I have no doubt as to the thoroughness and completeness with which the committee will do this work; and, pending their investigation, I should not feel that it was either my privilege or my duty to discuss at length or to take any special exception to the provisions which the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have thought it wise to put in this bill this year. I will content myself with expressing the hope that the special committee to which I have referred will speedily perfect its labors, and that by the time we have another appropriation bill of this kind before us, we may have from that committee a report which will give us complete and authentic information concerning this vexed question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 48, after line 4, in the appropriations for Columbia Hospital, to insert:

For repairs and furniture, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 8, in the appropriations for the Freedmen's Hospital and Asylum, to strike out:

For salaries and compensation of superintendent, who shall reside at the hospital, not to exceed $3,000; assistant superintendent, $900 (this position to be filled by a nonmedical graduate or student); five internes, at $120 each; superintendent of nurses, clerk, engineer, matron, nurses, laundresses, cooks, teamsters, watchmen, and laborers, $16,000.

And insert:

For salaries and compensation of the surgeon in chief, not to exceed $3,000; two assistant surgeons, clerk, engineer, matron, nurses, laundresses, cooks, teamsters, watchmen, and laborers, $16,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert "cook, $240;" and in line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven hundred and twenty-five" and insert "nine hundred and sixty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Reform School for Girls: Superintendent, $1,000; treasurer, $300; matron, $600; two teachers, at $480 each; overseer, $720; engineer, $480; night watchman, $365; laborer, $300; cook, $240; in all, $4,965.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 22, to increase the appropriation "for maintenance of the Industrial Home School, including repairs," from $9,900 to $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 14, to insert:

And it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government of the United States to make no appropriation of money or property for the purpose of founding, maintaining, or aiding by payment for services, expenses, or otherwise, any church or religious denomination, or any institution or society which is under sectarian or ecclesiastical control; and it is hereby enacted that, from and after the 30th day of June, 1898, no money appropriated for charitable purposes in the District of Columbia shall be paid to any church or religious denomination, or to any institution or society which is under sectarian or ecclesiastical control.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of the following clause:

That the joint select committee authorized by the act making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, to make inquiry and report concerning the charities and reformatory institutions of the District of Columbia, are hereby continued during the Fifty-fifth Congress, with all the powers and duties imposed upon them by said act. And any vacancies which may occur in the membership of said committee by expiration of service or otherwise of any Senator shall be filled by appointment by the presiding officer of the Senate, and any vacancies which may occur by reason of the expiration of service of any House members of said committee shall be filled by appointment to be made by the Speaker of the present House of Representatives from members-elect to the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fifth Congress; and any vacancies which may occur by reason of death or resignation of any House member shall be filled by appointment to be made by the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the time being; and said committee shall have authority to sit during the recess, and shall make report as soon as practicable after the beginning of the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I simply wish to enter my protest against the enactment of statutes regulating the appointment of members of committees of the two Houses of Congress. There is certainly no power in any statute to be approved by the President of the United States authorizing any body, not even the House of Representatives, to regulate the appointment of committees for the Senate, because the Constitution itself authorizes each House to regulate its own mode of procedure.

The habit we have gotten into of late of providing, in statutes to be approved by the President of the United States, for the exercise of power conferred upon each House of Congress, and upon it alone, to appoint its committees and regulate its mode of procedure, I think ought to be reproved and ought to cease.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Militia of the District of Columbia," on page 52, line 20, to increase the appropriation "for expenses of rifle practice and matches" from $3,000 to $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, as follows:

SEC. 3. That hereafter no electric-light company doing business in the District of Columbia shall charge or collect from the United States or any other consumer of electric arc or incandescent lights or electricity for power prices exceeding 75 per cent of prices charged for such lights and power on the 1st day of January, 1897, in the said District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. TELLER. On page 3, after the word "collector," in line 18, I move to insert the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "collector," in line 18, on page 3, it is proposed to insert "who shall, in the absence of inability from any cause of the collector, perform the duties without additional compensation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 10, line 15, I move to insert the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 15, on page 10, before the word "be," it is proposed to strike out "ninety-six" and insert "ninety-five;" and in line 18, after the words "day of," to strike out "January" and insert "July;" and at the end of the same line to strike out "ninety-eight" and insert "ninety-seven;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That all penalties on taxes due and payable on or before the 1st day of July, 1895, be, and the same are hereby, remitted, provided that the taxes due and payable on or prior to said date are paid with 6 per cent interest on or before the 1st day of January, 1897.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 12, in line 22, there is an error, to correct which I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, in line 22, after the word "March," it is proposed to strike out "third" and insert "second;" so as to read:

To pay for lands to be condemned under the highway act approved March 2, 1893, for the extension of Rhode Island avenue from Le Droit avenue to Harewood avenue NE., etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 14, after line 10, I move an amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 10, it is proposed to insert:

For paving Morris street, between Sixth and Seventh streets NE., $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. After the amendment just adopted, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted it is proposed to insert:

Removing cobblestones and repairing with asphalt blocks D street between Sixth and Seventh streets SE., $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I also propose an amendment to come in after the amendment just adopted, which I ask may be stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment just adopted it is proposed to insert:

For paving of North Capitol street between O and R streets, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 17, line 22, after the word "streets," I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, in line 22, after the word "streets" where it occurs the second time, it is proposed to insert "and Roanoke and Princeton streets from Seventh to Thirteenth streets;" so as to make the clause read:

For grading and regulating Clifton, Irving, Yale, Bismark, Harvard, Columbia, Steuben, Kenesaw, Wallach, and Thirteenth streets from Seventh to Fourteenth streets, and Roanoke and Princeton streets from Seventh to Thirteenth streets, completing improvement, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 19, after line 19, I move to insert:

For grading and regulating Providence, Lansing, Hartford, and Tenth streets, Brookland, $2,000.

For the purchase of land belonging to the Catholic University and lying between the west line of Eighth street east extended, according to the highway extension plan, the Metropolitan Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, Bunker Hill road, and the north line of said university grounds, containing about 2 acres, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

For grading and graveling Joliet street from Connecticut avenue extended to Zoological Park, and acquiring same by purchase or condemnation, $5,000.

For grading and regulating Lowell street from Seventeenth street to Klingle Ford road, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 20, line 2, in the appropriation for sweeping streets, I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifty;" so as to read "$150,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 29, after line 16, I move to insert:

For rent and care of Miner School buildings on Seventeenth street, $3,050

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 31, after line 4, I move to insert:

For eight-room building and site in the vicinity of North Capitol and R streets, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On the same page, in line 17, I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "eighty-three;" so as to read:

For completing Western High School, to be immediately available, $33,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. On page 38, after the word "dollars," in line 3, I move to insert:

Provided, That said Commissioners may on and after the passage of this act enter into contracts, after due advertisement as required by law, under such regulations and specifications as they may establish, for incinerating such combustible waste for a period not exceeding three years, to terminate June 30, 1900: Provided, further, That said Commissioners are hereby authorized to make necessary regulations for the collection, transportation, and delivery of such refuse in the District of Columbia, and to annex to said regulations such penalties as will enable them to secure the enforcement thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to offer an amendment on this page. On page 19, after the word "dollars" in line 19, I move to insert:

For grading and regulating Michigan avenue, $10,000.

The Senator himself knows the importance of it, and there is no need of discussing it, in my judgment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Now I ask the Senator to return to page 21.

Mr. FAULKNER. We had better disagree to the committee amendment there.

Mr. TELLER. Let the Senate disagree to the proposed amendment of the committee in line 9.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, page 21, the Committee on Appropriations report an amendment to insert "on the 1st day of January, 1897;" so as to read:

For electric arc lighting, including necessary inspection, in those streets now lighted with electric arc lights in the city of Washington on the 1st day of January, 1897.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Now, let the Senate agree to the amendment of the committee to strike out, in line 10, "and for necessary extensions of such service, fifty-five" and insert "forty."

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Appropriations report an amendment, in line 10, to strike out "and for necessary extensions of such service, fifty-five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty;" so as to read:

For electric arc lighting, including necessary inspection, in those streets now lighted with electric arc lights in the city of Washington, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Let the next committee amendment be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, page 21, it is proposed to strike out "now;" so as to read:

For electric arc lighting, including necessary inspection, in those streets lighted with electric arc lights in the city of Washington, etc..

Mr. HILL. That word should be reinserted.

Mr. TELLER. It should remain in.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Now we are ready for the amendments of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. TELLER. This is in lieu of the committee amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, after the word "Washington," in lieu of the committee amendment it is proposed to insert:

Until Congress shall provide for a conduit system, it shall be unlawful to lay conduits or erect overhead wires for electric-lighting purposes in any road, street, avenue, highway, park, or reservation, except as hereafter specifically authorized by law: Provided, however, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to issue permits for house connections with conduits and overhead wires now existing adjacent to the premises with which such connection is to be made, and also permits for public-lighting connections with conduits already in the portion of the street proposed to be lighted; and nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect in any way any pending litigation involving the validity or invalidity or legality of the construction of any conduits made since June 18, 1896, nor to prevent the United States Electric Lighting Company from extending conduits into Columbia Heights, Washington Heights, and Mount Pleasant, and within the fire limits, as specifically provided in the act of June 11, 1896, making appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia; and the existing overhead wires of the Potomac Electric Power Company west of Rock Creek and outside of the fire limits are hereby authorized to be maintained for a period of one year from the passage of this act and no longer.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan to explain the latter clause, wherein specific privileges are granted for certain extensions.

Mr. McMILLAN. I will state that the latter clause referred to here simply enables the existing law to be carried out so far as the United States Company is concerned. In the latest District appropriation act it is provided that the United States Electric Lighting Company may extend its underground conduits and wires east of Rock Creek and within the fire limits to Mount Pleasant and Washington and Columbia Heights, under such regulations as the Commissioners may prescribe. Also, the same act limits to eight months the life of overhead wires west of Rock Creek and outside the fire limits. The added clauses simply preserve the rights of the United States Company on the one hand, and on the other authorize the continuance of the Potomac Company's wires west of Rock Creek, out in the suburbs, for one year. That is all.

Mr. GALLINGER. The overhead wires?

Mr. McMILLAN. The overhead wires.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand the provision will be for only one year.

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes; for one year. That will give time for legislation on the subject.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will explain that. The extension for one year is only as to the overhead wires of the Potomac Company outside of the fire limits, west of Rock Creek. They were limited in the appropriation act to eight months. Under the terms of the law they would really be required to take those wires down which are outside of the fire limits west of Rock Creek. The amendment extends that overhead system a year longer.

Mr. McMILLAN. These overhead wires are to furnish suburban houses with light. They are to furnish with light Tennallytown and suburban houses like those of Mr. Gardiner Hubbard and Mr. Waggaman, and others; and unless this amendment is adopted the company can not furnish such lights after the eight months' period expires, which will be very soon. This extends the time.

Mr. GORMAN. What provision is proposed to be made to continue it? I do not see any, unless the Senator contemplates further legislation.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think we will have to have further legislation next year. We can not do anything more this year.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I ask unanimous consent that the clerks may correct the totals to correspond with the amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer an amendment. On page 19, after line 24, and after the amendment just adopted, I move to insert:

For the grading and improvement of G street from First street east to Fourth street northeast, $14,000.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if the amendment comes from the District of Columbia Committee?

Mr. McMILLAN. It does; and I would like to have a letter from the District of Columbia Commissioners, in approval of the amendment, printed in the RECORD. It shows the necessity for it.

The letter is as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, February 23, 1897.

SENATOR: Relative to your favor of the 22d instant requesting an early report on the amendment to the District bill for grading and improving G street from First street to Fourth street east, the Commissioners have the honor to say that in their judgment it would be of advantage to the northeast section to have the street paved. It is of easier grade than H street, and if paved throughout would relieve to a large extent the heavy travel on H street, which is also occupied by a rapid-transit street railway. The paving now proposed would be so much toward the paving of the street throughout; the street is already paved west of First street. H street crosses two sets of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad tracks, whereas G street only crosses one set. H street was graded and graveled several years ago, but on account of the inadequacy of appropriations for repairs to unpaved streets the roadway has not been kept in good repair and is now in poor condition. Five thousand dollars is not, however, a sufficient sum to pay for paving the street; $14,000 is a conservative estimate. Within the past few months permits for nine buildings on this part of G street have been taken out.

Very respectfully,

GEO. TRUESDELL,
Acting President Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

Hon. JAMES McMILLAN,
Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia, Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer another amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, after line 24, and after the amendment already adopted, it is proposed to insert:

For the straight extension of Connecticut avenue: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to extend and open Connecticut avenue, on the straight extension of the line thereof as now established in the city of Washington, from Connecticut avenue extended, as now laid out and opened on the west side of Rock Creek, to Kalorama avenue on the east side of Rock Creek, thence by a curved line or offset to join with the present adopted and recorded location of Connecticut avenue, south of Kalorama avenue, and to include in Connecticut avenue a circular reservation at or near Kalorama avenue in line with the straight extension of Connecticut avenue, with suitable passageway around such circle; and also to include in such avenue such portions of the corners of squares at the intersection of Connecticut avenue with Kalorama avenue as the Commissioners may find necessary for ample and convenient connections of streets; and they are authorized and directed to abandon the deflected line for Connecticut avenue heretofore adopted, north of Kalorama avenue, and to conform the plan of highway extension to the extension of Connecticut avenue as aforesaid.

That, conditioned upon the dedication by the owners of the property lying within the lines of said proposed extension between the water-side drive on the east side of Rock Creek and the present extension of Connecticut avenue on the west side of Rock Creek, the sum of $200,000 is hereby appropriated, wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia, to be immediately available, for the purchase or condemnation by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of the property lying within the extension of Connecticut avenue and extending from said water-side drive southerly to Florida avenue.

As to all lots or parts of lots and improvements not purchased or contracted to be purchased within thirty days from the passage of this act, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are instructed to commence suit for condemnation.

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to secure designs, by competition, for a bridge or viaduct across Rock Creek on the line of the extension of Connecticut avenue, and the sum of $2,000 is appropriated therefor.

Fifty thousand dollars is hereby appropriated for the immediate commencement of such bridge or viaduct after such designs shall have been secured.

Mr. GORMAN. I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Michigan, the chairman of the committee. I understand this provision makes an entirely new line, or practically a new line, for the extension of Connecticut avenue. It is practically a straight line which is proposed.

Mr. McMILLAN. It provides for the deflected line up to Kalorama avenue; that is, beyond the houses that would be destroyed by the straight extension. Then the avenue turns into a circle to be located on Kalorama avenue, and from the circle extends in a straight line across Rock Creek to join the existing extension of Connecticut avenue. It is practically the deflected line, so far as the additional expense is concerned.

Mr. GORMAN. I am not antagonizing that general proposition, but what I wish to learn from the Senator is this: Two lines are laid down for the extension of this avenue, one a straight line, which practically conforms to the proposition now offered by the Senator, as I understand.

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes; practically.

Mr. GORMAN. With slight variations. The greater portion of it, the lower part, is on the straight line. But that is not the point I am after. I am ready to take the judgment of the Senator and his committee, but we provided in the statute two years ago that there should be no permits for buildings on either one of the lines, the straight line or the deflected line, and it is a very great hardship on everybody who owns property on both streets. If we are to settle it, ought we not to remove that embargo and allow the parties on the line laid down by the Commissioners to have permits? Has the Senator provided for that?

Mr. McMILLAN. I understand that if the amendment is passed it will settle the whole question.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator whether it would not require a specific provision?

Mr. McMILLAN. No, I think not. Until this is done, of course, they can not get permits, but when it is done permits will be granted.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator is aware that in one or two of these cases, on Sixteenth street, great hardship resulted. All I desire is that when the line is adopted the property owners on the street shall have permits.

Mr. McMILLAN. This will relieve the situation.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know but that there should be some action to enable these people to have permits.

Mr. McMILLAN. I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that, if it should be found necessary, such an amendment can be inserted in conference. I am very sure, however, that it is not necessary.

Mr. TELLER. We can put it in in conference if it is necessary.

Mr. McMILLAN. It ought to be done, of course.

Mr. TELLER. It ought to be done here or in conference, but I do not know, without an opportunity to examine it, whether the amendment covers it or not.

Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator read the law?

Mr. TELLER. This is the provision:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, required to examine into the proposed extension of Connecticut avenue from Florida avenue to the District line, and report to Congress, on or before the first Monday of December next, the comparative advantages and disadvantages and comparative cost of opening said Connecticut avenue on a straight extension of the line thereof as now established in the city of Washington, instead of opening the same on the deflected line heretofore adopted and now on file—and that from and after the passage of this act no building permits shall be granted upon ground which would be covered by either extension of said Connecticut avenue until otherwise provided by law.

Here is the point—

Mr. FAULKNER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the amendment, which I think clearly settles the question.

Mr. GORMAN. Let us hear it.

Mr. FAULKNER. After describing the street as selected as a permanent line, a definite line, the amendment says:

And they are authorized and directed to abandon the deflected line for Connecticut avenue heretofore adopted, north of Kalorama avenue, and to conform the plan of highway extension to the extension of Connecticut avenue as aforesaid.

Mr. TELLER. I think that covers it.

Mr. FAULKNER. It covers it completely.

Mr. GORMAN. We had better make it specific. I suggest to the Senator to lay this matter aside for a second.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from Michigan has another amendment, and while the Senator from Maryland is looking the point up we may proceed with his amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest that we say that the restriction which has heretofore been provided is hereby repealed.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move an amendment to my amendment which I think will cover the point.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by inserting at the end thereof:

That the statute incorporated in the act of Congress approved June 11, 1896, making appropriation for the District of Columbia, reading as follows: "and that from and after the passage of this act no building permits shall be granted upon ground which would be covered by either extension of said Connecticut avenue until otherwise provided by law," is hereby repealed.

Mr. GORMAN. That is right.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That whenever there are telegraph or telephone poles or telephone conduits available for the use of said fire-alarm telegraph, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to make arrangement for the use of such poles or conduits without expense to the said District; and the authority granted to said Commissioners in the District of Columbia appropriation act approved August 7, 1894, to authorize the erection and use of telephone poles in the alleys of the city of Washington, shall be limited as follows: Hereafter no wires shall be strung on any pole or poles at a height of less than 50 feet from the ground at the point of attachment to said pole. Temporary permits may be granted by said Commissioners to string wires from cable poles or from existing overhead trunk lines to poles in or to be erected in alleys and from alley poles in one square to alley poles or house-top fixtures in another square, for the purpose of making necessary house connections from all cable poles and existing overhead trunk lines within the District of Columbia, such house connections to be made from the cable pole or overhead trunk line nearest the subscriber. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the erection of any additional pole or poles upon any street, avenue, or public reservation within the said city, and such privileges as may be granted hereunder to be revocable at the will of Congress without compensation.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire if this amendment comes from the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. McMILLAN. It does.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire to offer another amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 52, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the clerk designated by the committee may be paid for clerical services such compensation as may be fixed by the committee in addition to any salary he may be receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of section 2:

Provided, That so much of the money as is appropriated by this act for public works in the District of Columbia may, at the discretion of the Commissioners of said District, be made available from and after the 4th day of March, 1897.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit an amendment which has been favorably reported from the District of Columbia Committee and is recommended by the Medical Association of the District of Columbia. I think there will be no objection to it.

The SECRETARY. On page 49, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That any legally licensed physician may attend private patients when they occupy pay rooms, in any of the public hospitals in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer another amendment, which has been reported favorably from the Committee on the District of Columbia and was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SECRETARY. On page 43, after line 11, it is proposed to insert:

For the construction of a crematorium, which shall contain two alternating furnaces, a chapel, columbarium, and morgue for the reception, cremation, or keeping of bodies, to be erected on a site to be selected in the present cemetery for the burial of the indigent dead of the District of Columbia, and in accordance with plans and specifications to be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator in charge of the bill has appealed to me not to insist upon this amendment, but I do want to insist upon it, and in a very few words I will give my reasons for it. I trust it may go into conference and there have careful consideration.

A few months ago, I think it was in October last, in the Washington Star, a newspaper that is always very earnest and careful in looking after the interests of this great District, I found the following editorial:

The District Commissioners will have to ask many things of the next session of Congress. One of the institutions that ought to materialize very soon is the combined crematory and morgue, in behalf of which so much can be said. Mr. Stoutenburgh reports that the potter's field is overcrowded; that superficial burial is now the rule because the numerous bodies already interred render deep burial impracticable without disturbing the older remains. Every intelligent person must understand the unhealthfulness of such a condition as now prevails. Cremation is the most sensible of all methods of corpse disposition. We have as yet no public crematory, nor do we have a morgue worthy of the name. A comparatively small sum of money will provide us with those necessaries.

I hold in my hand a communication from Mr. Stoutenburgh, the superintendent of the Washington Asylum, which gives some statistics as to the matter of burial in the potter's field; and I want to say to the Senate that if I should state the actual condition of things that prevail right here almost under the shadow of this Capitol, it, I think, would not require any further argument on my part to persuade the Senate that something ought to be done, and done immediately, either that a crematorium be established or that an additional burying place be immediately purchased for this institution.

It is a fact that to-day in the Potter's field, as I have before said, almost under the shadow of this Capitol, they are burying five persons in one grave, one over the other. It is a condition so unsanitary that it ought to receive the condemnation of Congress without one moment's hesitation. I could relate instances that would horrify the Senate, if I should mention them, that have occurred recently in this Potter's field. I could relate an instance where a public servant died, a former clerk, I think then out of employment, and was buried there under conditions which his friends found, when they came there to claim his remains, that would hardly bear repetition in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. Stoutenburgh recommends that this crematorium shall be established. It is not proposed to incinerate the remains of all the pauper dead who are buried there. Those who have friends who request or who themselves have requested that they shall be buried in the ordinary way will have their wishes carried out. The Committee on the District of Columbia listened to this matter very attentively and gave it careful consideration, and came to the conclusion that it was something that demanded immediate attention and consideration.

I have here the specifications of the proposed crematorium, which I desire to have put in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

[Specifications of a proposed crematorium, to be erected on a site located at the almshouse, Washington, D. C.]

The plans as here presented are those of Samuel H. Brown, of Boston, Mass., and while they may seem at first quite too elaborate, it is thought that after a careful examination of the details of the specifications and plans that all persons interested in the proposed crematorium will be pleased with the character of the plans as shown in the accompanying drawings.

The plans look to the erection of two furnaces of that double alternating type built by the Brown Company, one of which is in successful operation at J. William Lee's undertaking establishment, Pennsylvania avenue, this city.

It is proposed to build these furnaces, one on each side of an ornamental brick stack, 90 feet in height. Surrounding this stack and furnaces it is proposed to build a substantial structure, the architecture of which it is designed to have of a character which will at once impress all with its appropriate structural beauty. The plans presented show a structure modern in form 56 by 67 feet, divided in the floor plan into the various halls and rooms required in the proper construction and the perfect operation of a crematorium. The first of these rooms is the chapel, 16 feet by 27 feet 10 inches; then the columbarium or vault room for the storage of the ashes of the dead, 16 feet by 16 feet 10 inches. These two rooms are at each side of the main entrance hall, this hall, 10 feet wide and 16 feet long, leading from the vestibule at the main entrance to the grand hall, in which are located the stack and two furnaces composing the crematorium. The grand hall itself is 56 feet long by 18 feet 4 inches at its extreme width, with a general width of 10 feet. There is an independent entrance or door at each end of the hall. Leading from the left-hand entrance is a door, which is the entrance to the morgue—a room 16 feet by 13 feet. Leading from the right-hand entrance of the hall is a door which opens into the so-called cooling room. The morgue, as required, is comparatively small. It is not designed as the city morgue for all dead, but is designed as a temporary repository for the dead to be cremated, while subject to removal by their friends for earth burial. It is proposed that all cremations shall be publicly advertised in the columns of the daily press for at least twenty-four hours before cremation takes place, except in cases of contagious diseases.

The cooling room above referred to is used for the storing of the funeral car and the cooling of the remains (which are in the form of ashes), and it is proposed to remove from the furnaces the ashes immediately after the cremation is completed. This is done by the removal of the interchangeable soapstone bed plate on which the cremation takes place. Leading from the cooling room is a door entering the fire room, which is 33 feet 6 inches by 18 feet 6 inches. The fire room is necessarily large, in order that fuel may be stored there, and that both furnaces, although some distance apart, may be operated at the same time by one fireman. The capacity of each furnace is so designed that it will cremate one subject every hour. It would seem perhaps that there would be only one furnace required, but it must be remembered that if cremation should be adopted, and the potter's field abandoned, that it would be absolutely necessary for safety that there should always be one furnace in reserve, thus enabling one to make repairs at any time without seriously obstructing the disposal by cremation of the dead.

THE COST OF CREMATION AS COMPARED WITH EARTH BURIAL.

In the ordinary cremation of two or three bodies a day the cost would not exceed $2 each. In case of an epidemic the cremation of 30 or 40 bodies every twelve hours might be accomplished at a cost not to exceed $1 each. It is estimated at present that for the next five years the burials at the potter's field will equal 1,000 each year. Based on this estimate the maintenance of a crematorium would not exceed annually over $2,000. The cost of burial is at present equal to this amount. If the District should adopt a crematorium, as here designed, it would solve the problem of a potter's field for at least twenty-five years to come, for the reason that the columbarium is designed sufficiently large to store in its vaults 25,000 or more cinerariums. The plan of cremation, as all know who are at all familiar with the subject, is the only sanitary way for the final disposal of the dead. The amount of appropriation required is no more than would probably be demanded for an available potter's field that would last the city only five years. The amount required to build a crematorium, as designed by these plans, is $25,000. This would include its maintenance for one year. A plan much cheaper in general construction might be presented; but inasmuch as this is the capital city of the nation, it is proposed to build this crematorium as a model for other cities to copy from. It is considered educational by the promoters, and the founding of such a public institution here will help to successfully solve a problem to which many of the largest cities in the country are now giving their careful attention.

It is hoped that the honorable Commissioners of the District of Columbia, their health officer, and the superintendent of the almshouse will each give their unqualified indorsement to the accompanying plans and the cause, and that Congress may look favorably on a proposition to immediately appropriate money for this purpose.

[Copy of letter of superintendent of Washington Asylum and potter's field.]

WASHINGTON ASYLUM,
Washington, D. C., October 23, 1896.

GENTLEMEN: I desire to call your attention to the rapidly increasing number of burials in potter's field cemetery:

For the year ending June 30—	Interments.
1890	558
1891	627
1892	655
1893	702
1894	785
1895	606
1896	785
Making a total of	4,778

The available ground suitable for this purpose is being rapidly exhausted and is valuable to the District for other purposes. But a short time will elapse before the District will be compelled to procure ground for this purpose at great expense. In view of these facts, I recommend that a crematorium be erected in connection with and on a site to be selected in the present cemetery, to be used in all cases where there is no objection made on part of relatives, or previously expressed wish made for ground burial by the deceased.

The ground as now available will last for a few years for the interment of all who might express a wish for ground burial, thus taking away any objection on the part of relatives of the deceased.

The proposed crematorium would have a chapel connected, where services would be held when desired, a receiving room with regulation low temperature, for the reception and keeping of bodies; a cooling room for the carriage, and a storage room for the final remains, such room to be fitted with porcelain or terra-cotta boxes or jars, numbered and labeled in such a manner that a correct record can be kept for identification, should the friends desire at a future time to reclaim the remains.

I estimate the cost of construction and operation for one year of such a plant at $25,000, and for the operation for each succeeding year at $1,500 per annum.

Very respectfully,

(Signed.) W. H. STOUTENBURGH,
Intendant Washington Asylum.

The honorable COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

In view of the pressing need, I urgently request that an appropriation be asked for the construction and operation of the same to be placed in the estimates being made for appropriations by Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. I also ask unanimous consent to insert the first ten pages of the publication which I hold in my hand. It is only about six pages of print, and will not occupy much space. It discusses the question of burial or cremation. It is an intensely interesting discussion of the question that I think ought to be brought to the attention of Congress; and then I will ask that the entire publication be sent to the committee of conference, if the amendment goes into the bill, so that the conferees may have an opportunity to inquire into and to some extent investigate this very important subject.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BURIAL OR CREMATION?

When death this tenement of flesh shall claim,
Entomb it not in darkness to decay;
But, purged of earth, on rushing wings of flame,
Let it mount upward into endless day!

America at the close of the century differs widely from America at the century's beginning. It was then an agricultural country, its population was widely scattered, and there were few cities of any considerable size. But a great change has been brought about during the past hundred years. We are now, to a large extent, a manufacturing and commercial people. We have many large and crowded centers of population; our cities have taken their place among the great cities of the world; and it is only a matter of a few years when we shall have in this country the greatest centers of population on the earth. It is evident, therefore, that the sanitary conditions which answered well enough a hundred years ago must now all be changed. So rapid has been our transformation from a rural to an urban nation that science has hardly kept pace with the needed reforms in sanitation.

There is one reform that has been too long delayed, but which, during the last decade, has been receiving wide attention from the best informed and most advanced people of the country; and that is a reform in our present method of disposing of our dead. The system of burial in the earth, which has obtained for so many centuries, and which would be tolerable in a thinly populated community, is not only most detrimental to a crowded community, but is absolutely incompatible with a proper regard for health and life. This subject has received much attention in the crowded communities of Europe, and it is now receiving more and more attention from thoughtful people in this country. When population was scattered, the country churchyard, remote from dwellings, and visited but infrequently, could do but little harm. But the crowded cemeteries near our large cities are to-day, in the common opinion of physicians, chemists, and other scientists, a great and constantly increasing source of danger to the living.

The popular supposition that the burial of a body several feet beneath the surface of the ground robs it, during its course of decomposition, of the power of contaminating the air above is a palpable mistake. The gases emitted by the putrefying body are exhaled through the ground, even when it is buried 10 feet beneath the surface. These gases are most noxious. In many cases where graves have been reopened, their effect upon those inhaling them, even though for a moment, has been fatal. In addition to these pestilential exhalations, the decomposed matter which mixes with the soil and is washed by the rain through the ground contaminates the water supply within an extended area. It is a well-known fact, proved over and over again, that the vicinity of a graveyard is most unhealthful; that diphtheria, typhoid fever, and kindred maladies of a fatal nature rage much more violently in such a neighborhood than elsewhere. This fact has been recognized to such an extent in Europe that enactments have been passed in various countries prohibiting human habitation within a certain radius of a graveyard. In Pomerania, after the raging of a terrible epidemic, this limit was placed at as large a figure as 5,000 feet.

There are other agencies working in a cemetery besides those of simple decomposition that are most disastrous to the health of surrounding residents. The researches of Dr. Pasteur, and of other almost equally renowned scientists, have disclosed the fact that earthworms, burrowing among the dead, bring to the surface the living germs of disease. These germs live for many years, and may be inhaled in the air. A commission of physicians from this country visited some years ago a yellow-fever district in Central America; and, in a graveyard where the victims of a scourge of yellow fever that had occurred eighty years before were buried, the living germs of the disease were still found in vast numbers on the surface of the ground. The digging up of a cemetery in South America, in which the victims of yellow fever had been buried three hundred years before, revived the pestilence, and it again raged in all its fury. It is the opinion of medical experts who have studied this question that one-third of the deaths occurring in the cities of this country arise from the inhalation of poisonous matter in the atmosphere; and of all sources of atmospheric pollution the cemetery is by far the worst.

It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that men who have at heart the interests of mankind should have given much thought to the subject of changing our present method of disposing of the dead. The other method which naturally suggests itself, in place of burial, is burning. Cremation is a practice that comes to us from the most ancient times. It was practiced by the Greeks, by the Romans, and by all the Indo-European tribes. All who have read Virgil's master poem will recall the beautiful but pathetic recital of the cremation of the devoted Dido. Remus, the founder of Rome, was also cremated, if we can believe the ancient records; and Julius Cæsar was burned upon a funeral pyre of the greatest magnificence. It is not, however, the desire of the modern advocates of cremation to follow in the footsteps of the ancients; for with them cremation took place in the open air, and in this way the poisonous gases, liberated by combustion, were permitted to escape, contaminating the surrounding atmosphere. In modern cremation not a particle of matter escapes until it has been absolutely decomposed into its constituent elements, and rendered as pure as sunlight itself.

Europe, being more crowded, was naturally the first to give thought to this matter; and some fifteen years ago crematories were erected in several

Italian towns; and later in other continental cities. Five years ago two crematories were built in Paris; and, within a few months, the French war department has made preparations for supplying the army with ambulatory crematories for disposing of the dead in battle.

The idea was first taken up in this country about twelve years ago. A cremation society was formed in New York, and later societies advocating this practice were organized in various cities of the country. In Boston there are two cremation societies, which number in their membership some of the most influential people in that vicinity, among them being such men as President Eliot and Prof. Francis J. Child, of Harvard College; Francis Parkman, the historian; Miss Alice Longfellow, the daughter of the poet; and many physicians of national reputation. The belief in cremation is spreading among all classes of thinking people, who plainly perceive that the continued well-being of humanity imperatively demands a change from the present custom of earth burial.

Objections are sometimes brought against this practice by certain people on what they very falsely allege to be religious grounds. They contend that cremation is of heathen origin. But as far as that argument goes, a very large number of the most useful arts and the most necessary customs of modern society have come down to us from the Greeks and Romans, who, if they are to be termed heathen, were certainly heathen of a high stage of intellectual development. If we should refuse to do whatever the pre-Christian nations did, we should return immediately to a barbarism worse than that of the dark ages. In reality, cremation is distinctly in keeping with the spirit of Christianity; for if Christianity inculcates anything, it inculcates that system of action that shall conduce most to the true welfare of man. And certainly Christianity can not be adduced by any devout and intelligent disciple of that belief as an opposing force against a great reform which will tend to sweep away much of the sickness and premature death which now do so much to rob life of its beauty, its happiness, and its value. Nowhere does the Bible forbid cremation; but everywhere it teaches that the essential part of man is the soul, that the body is only a temple for its indwelling, and that it is of worth only when the soul is within it. The most extraordinary argument advanced by some unthinking people, that cremation would make resurrection impossible shows a singularly crude and unchristian belief in the limitations of the Almighty. It is no more miraculous to raise the dead when all that remains is a handful of ashes, than it is to raise the body that has passed through the slow decay of years, and moldered into dust.

The chief objection against which advocates of cremation have to contend is sentiment, springing solely from custom. Men are accustomed to the thought of burying the dead beneath the ground, and consequently this seems less repugnant to them than the reduction of the body to ashes by fire.

But when one relegates the question of custom to the background and simply thinks of the two methods by themselves, comparing the one with the other, surely that of burial is inexpressibly more revolting. The two methods, of course, accomplish ultimately the same end—the resolution of the body into its chemical elements. In burial, however, the process is slow, requiring many years; and its method is most offensive and most injurious to all animal life in its vicinity, while in cremation it is quick, clean, and complete, and positively without any injury to the living. The only reason that burial seems to many people less repellent is because they refuse to think of the experience that awaits the body after it is consigned to the grave. They try to imagine the departed as keeping always the same form and condition as when laid at rest in the tomb. But this very refusal to accept the actual facts shows how revolting these facts are. The mind can not tolerate the true picture of the grave during the months and years that follow burial, when all that was once so beautiful has become hideous putrefaction, unspeakable in its corruption, polluting earth and air. The thought of it is overpoweringly abhorrent.

But, on the other hand, one may follow the process of cremation with neither loathing nor abhorrence. What more beautiful end of the body could there be than that, chastened and purified by fire, it should itself put on spirituality, and follow the spirit up into the great open vault of heaven! The gross and the corruptible, changed in a brief hour back into its elemental units, soars up into the sunshine, pure and free, and indestructible, until that day when the earth itself shall be destroyed. Which form of dissolution is the less revolting to an intelligent sentiment—the putrefaction of the tomb, or the purification of the flame?

In cremation, when the dead form has been reduced to its handful of ashes, these ashes can be deposited in an urn and placed in a proper repository—in the crematory itself, in the church, or in the home; or they may be buried beneath the sod and a monument erected, or, as was recently done by request, they may be buried beneath a rosebush, to bloom again into life in the beautiful flowers.

Mr. GALLINGER. I trust the amendment may be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have only one further amendment. It is to come in after line 23, page 38, and I will say, inasmuch as this matter was very thoroughly discussed one year ago, and a similar amendment inserted in the bill, I do not care to discuss it, but will simply submit it with the hope expressed that it may go into conference with this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, after line 23, it is proposed to insert:

For the purchase of Analostan Island, in the District of Columbia, $112,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the validity of the title to be determined by the Attorney-General of the United States, the said sum to be immediately available; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to acquire said property by purchase from the owners at and for a sum not exceeding $112,500, or, if the same can not be so acquired, then by condemnation proceedings in accordance with the terms of an act of Congress approved June 25, 1890, to provide for an eligible site for a city post-office in the city of Washington, D. C., with amendments thereto, approved August 30, 1890.

Mr. TELLER. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I send to the desk an offered amendment which has been passed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and it is very essential in reference to the sanitary condition of the street adjoining Center Market.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 14, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

For paving the north half of B street, between Ninth and Tenth streets NW., $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the bill. It is offered by direction of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill:

For paying the engineering and legal expenses necessary in acquiring hereunder all the water rights not now owned by the United States at the Great Falls on the Potomac River, together with such lands at the Great Falls as are necessary to vest the title to the water rights in the United States, and to enable the United States to use the water for all purposes, the sum of $5,000: Provided, That the property, water rights, and franchises of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company shall be exempt from the operation of this provision; and the Secretary of War shall, within three months after the approval of this act, cause a survey to be made of such lands as he, with the advice of the Attorney-General, shall deem necessary to be taken hereunder; and he shall, within said time, file a written statement, in triplicate, specifying by metes and bounds the lands, and by proper designation the water rights, taken hereunder, in the office of the recorder of deeds, in the District of Columbia, the county of Fairfax, Va., and the county of Montgomery, Md., which filing shall be a taking by the United States of the lands and water rights described and designated in said statement. Upon filing said statement and within thirty days thereafter, the Attorney-General shall cause proceedings to be commenced by petition in the name of the United States in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, making the known owners of the land and water rights taken parties defendant, and all persons interested therein but not known to the Attorney-General may be made parties defendant under the title "unknown owners;" and notice to the known owners shall be by personal service of a copy of the petition by any United States marshal in any judicial district where such owner or owners reside, and to the "unknown owners" by publication of a notice in a newspaper published in said District of Columbia and in said counties, specifying the nature of the proceeding and the time at or after which the matter will be heard, such notice to be published for thirty consecutive days in the District of Columbia, and once a week for four consecutive weeks in said counties; and said court may prescribe rules of procedure, conformable to the practice in like cases, to give the owners a fair hearing and secure speedy determination of the rights of the parties; and said court shall forthwith, after service and expiration of said notice, summon a jury to hear and determine, under its instructions, the compensation and damage, if any, to be paid to the owners for the said land and water rights. The Attorney-General may appoint special counsel for the United States familiar with the laws relating to riparian rights and hydraulics. Said jury shall consider only the present values of the land and water rights and not their values to the city of Washington for the special uses for which they are taken or to which they may be applied under the provisions of this act. Said court shall enter judgment against the United States for the amount or amounts ascertained as aforesaid; but, as said lands and water rights are taken for the use of the District of Columbia, said judgments shall be paid as judgments against the District of Columbia, 50 per cent thereof by the United States and 50 per cent by said District; and appeals may be taken from said judgments as in other cases. Where claims are now pending against the United States for compensation or damages for taking water, and the damaging of property by reason of such taking, at the Great Falls, such claims may be heard and determined in the proceeding hereunder.

Mr. TELLER. I make the point of order on the amendment that it is general legislation and of a most extensive character.

Mr. CHANDLER. The point of order is entirely clear against the Senator from Colorado. This is an appropriation, and the method of extending it is provided. Moreover, it is to carry out the provisions of a law passed at the present session of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. It must be rather a defective law if it has to be enlarged in this way to carry it out.

Mr. CHANDLER. Only a few days ago a bill passed the Senate providing for condemning all the water rights at the Great Falls of the Potomac except those of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company. This is the exact condensed substance of that bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Has that bill been signed by the President?

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill has passed the Senate, and the Senator knows very well there is a rule which allows amendments to be put on appropriation bills to carry out a decision or order of the Senate made at the same session.

Mr. ALLISON. Then all bills which have been passed by the Senate at the present session can be put on appropriation bills.

Mr. CHANDLER. All bills of this character, as the Senator knows very well; and he knows that this provision of law is as important as many provisions which have been admitted upon the bill. The chairman of the committee or the Senators in charge of appropriation bills sit here and see amendment after amendment made to these appropriation bills, and they admit them upon the bills because they believe the public interest requires legislation in this form. I admit that there is too much legislation upon appropriation bills, but that is no reason why there should be the discriminations made that I conceive are made here by Senators from the Committee on Appropriations in this bill in regard to amendments they object to and ought not to object to.

It is important that there should be no further delay in acquiring these water rights, just as it was important that there should be no delay in starting the census office. This amendment was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. The chairman of that committee believes it ought to be adopted at the present time, and every member of the committee, I think, believes so. I certainly hope the point of order will not be made, but that the Senators in charge of the bill will allow the amendment to be adopted.

Mr. TELLER. I must insist on the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GIBSON. On page 18, line 9, after the word "improvement," I move to amend by inserting "nine" before "thousand," instead of "five;" so as to read:

For grading and graveling Albemarle street and opening same to Grant road, continuing improvement, $9,000.

I will take occasion to say to the Senator in charge of the bill what perhaps he is not aware of as to the purpose of the amendment, that the money heretofore appropriated has been expended by the District Commissioners in contemplation——

Mr. TELLER. All right; let it go.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

A bill (S. 3680) to provide for the removal of the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City from Kansas City, Kans., to Kansas City, Mo.; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 100) granting a life-saving medal to Daniel E. Lynn, of Port Huron, Mich.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6730) granting a pension to Edward C. Spofford.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10208) to amend section 40 of "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, so as to authorize the sale of forfeited domestic smoking opium to the highest bidder, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PAYNE, Mr. EVANS, and Mr. MCMILLIN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CANNON, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, and Mr. SAYERS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LOUD, Mr. SMITH of Illinois, and Mr. KYLE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 1743) to establish an additional land office in the State of Montana;

A bill (S. 2232) to vacate Sugar Loaf reservoir site in Colorado and to restore the lands contained in the same to entry;

A bill (S. 3561) to grant a right of way through the Fort Spokane Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company;

A bill (H. R. 3731) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River;

A bill (H. R. 610) for the relief of John F. McRae;

A bill (H. R. 3623) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to define the jurisdiction of the police court of the District of Columbia;"

A bill (H. R. 5183) granting a pension to Wesley A. Fletcher;

A bill (H. R. 5597) for the relief of Charles Deal;

A bill (H. R. 7469) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 8582) to allow the bottling of distilled spirits in bond;

A bill (H. R. 9184) for the relief of Thomas W. Scott, late United States marshal; and

A bill (H. R. 10290) for the relief of Joseph P. Patton.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHANDLER. If I can have the attention of Senators, I will state that I gave notice I would move at this hour to take up the international monetary conference bill and move to concur in the House amendments. There are two or three Senators who desire to speak on that motion. Very little time is likely to be occupied in its consideration, and I am very desirous to proceed at this time. But the Senator from Maine has persuaded me not to insist upon the consideration of the international conference bill until after the naval appropriation bill has been disposed of.

I therefore ask the unanimous consent of the Senate at this time that the international conference bill may be taken up for consideration immediately after the naval appropriation bill is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GRAY. Will not the Senator in making his request for unanimous consent put a time limit upon the debate?

Mr. CHANDLER. I should be glad to do so if I thought there was a disposition to debate it at too great length. I do not think there is.

Mr. GRAY. I suggest half an hour.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask that half an hour may be allowed for the consideration of the bill, and that then the vote shall be taken.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think there is any occasion to make an arrangement of that kind. I do not think the discussion of it will be prolonged. I think we had better——

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest that one hour be allowed for discussion.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will say not exceeding one hour.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not think there is any necessity to fix a time.

Mr. CULLOM. I think the time ought to be fixed; otherwise nothing else will be done. I hope the time will not be extended beyond an hour. There are many other measures to be considered at the present session.

Mr. GORMAN. I object to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire at this time. We can fix a time when we reach that point.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator objects to any understanding, then, in regard to the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. I do not object that it shall come up at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is to be taken up, then, immediately after the naval appropriation bill is disposed of.

Mr. ALLISON. I must object to unanimous consent to take up any bill hereafter unless there is a term fixed for its consideration. Otherwise we may occupy more time than it is possible to have occupied without cutting out reports of conference committees, and so on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now I renew my request. I did not understand that anyone objected to taking up the international monetary conference bill immediately after the naval appropriation bill is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. ALLISON. I must add to the request that the debate upon the amendments proposed by the House shall not exceed one hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. GORMAN. There is.

Mr. ALDRICH. I object to any arrangement now. We can not tell how much discussion the bill will require. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire to couple with his request a condition that its consideration shall not interfere with conference reports on appropriation bills.

Mr. CULLOM. There are other bills that are to be considered by the Senate at the present session, and I shall object unless the time shall be limited.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is interposed to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to give notice that after the appropriation bills are disposed of, if there be any time, I shall press the bankruptcy bill, which has the right of way and is now the unfinished business, for which 500,000 poor men are waiting. I shall not interfere with the brief time required by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. It seems to me that unless I can have an understanding that the international monetary conference bill may be taken up I ought to move to take it up now, because I gave notice that I should do so at this time. I know it is a bill that can be briefly disposed of. I do not see why any Senator should object to its being taken up after the naval appropriation bill is disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire submit a motion?

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to proceed to the consideration of the international monetary conference bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope that will not be done. That would displace the naval appropriation bill, which has just been taken up.

Mr. CALL. I ask consent at this time to place before the Senate a House bill, without disturbing the regular order. It will require only five minutes. It is a short bill of five lines. I hope the Senator from Maine will permit it to be considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the Chair can have the attention of Senators, the Chair will submit the request of the Senator from Florida for unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill.

Mr. HALE. I can not consent to anything being interposed.

Mr. CALL. If the Senator will allow me, it is a bill of only five lines, and immediate action is very important.

Mr. HALE. There are twenty Senators in the same situation; and the Senator from Illinois has notified me that if I shall give way to anything whatever he will move to take up the antiscalping bill.

Mr. CALL. I will withdraw the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire moves to proceed to the consideration of the international monetary conference bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not do that.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; I think it is better for me to withdraw the motion. I do not see why the Senator from Rhode Island should have objected when no one else did.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not object at all to the consideration of the bill. I objected to fixing at present a time for debate upon it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Rhode Island objected unless there was a limitation, and the Senator from Maryland objected to a limitation, and the thing is gone. I give notice that at the earliest possible moment I shall move to take up that bill.

Mr. HILL. I simply rise for the purpose of giving notice that about 3 o'clock I shall move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

NATIONAL MILITARY PARKS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise to present a privileged report.

Mr. HALE. A conference report?

Mr. HAWLEY. A conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7320) to prevent trespassing upon and providing for the protection of national military parks, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree thereto with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out insert the following:

"SEC. 4. That any person to whom land lying within any national parks may have been leased, who refuses to give up possession of the same to the United States after the termination of said lease, and after possession has been demanded for the United States by any park commissioner or the park superintendent, or any person retaining possession of land lying within the boundary of said park which he or she may have sold to the United States for park purposes and have received payment therefor, after possession of the same has been demanded for the United States by any park commissioner or the park superintendent, shall be deemed guilty of trespass, and the United States may maintain an action for the recovery of the possession of the premises so withheld in the courts of the United States according to the statutes or code of practice of the State in which the park may be situated.

"SEC. 5. This act shall apply only to the military parks of the United States."

JOSEPH R. HAWLEY,
GEORGE L. SHOUP,
E. C. WALTHALL,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

J. A. T. HULL,
D. G. TYLER,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask that the report be adopted.

The report was concurred in.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Presiding Officer to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. PETTIGREW, and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I also ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. HALE, and Mr. GORMAN were appointed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the committee be acted upon as they are reached.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, line 6, after the word "fifty," to strike out "apprentices" and insert "boys;" so as to make the clause read:

For the pay of officers on sea duty; officers on shore and other duty; officers on waiting orders; officers on the retired list; clerks to commandants of yards and stations; clerks to paymasters at yards and stations; general storekeepers; receiving ships and other vessels; extra pay to men reenlisting under honorable discharge; interest on deposits by men; pay of 11,000 petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and boys, including men in the engineers' force and for the Coast Survey Service and Fish Commission, and of 750 boys under training at training stations and on board training ships, at the pay prescribed by law, $8,235,385.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Ordnance," on page 6, after line 12, to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and required to pay to the patentee the $25,000 appropriated in the "Act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1895, said act providing "for the exclusive rights to and for ordnance appliances now in use on naval vessels and protected and covered by patent No. 533171, said patent being embraced in a contract dated January 28, 1893, and signed by the Secretary of the Navy and the patentee."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 14, to increase the appropriation "for contingent expenses, Bureau of Equipment," from $12,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 14, to insert:

Flags of maritime nations: The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to contract at once with a lithographic or color printing establishment having ample facilities for the suitable and satisfactory execution thereof for the printing of a new edition, to consist of 5,000 copies, of the book of "Flags of Maritime Nations," of which number 1,000 copies shall be for use of the Navy Department and 300 copies for use of the Revenue-Cutter Service; and the remaining copies shall be delivered to the Superintendent of Public Documents for distribution to the Senate and House of Representatives, 1,200 copies to the Senate and 2,500 copies to the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 23, after the word "cents," to insert "machinery to be placed in machine shop just completed, $50,000;" and on page 21, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eleven" and insert "sixty-one;" so as to make the clause read:

Naval station, Port Royal, S. C.: For grading and drainage, $7,579.25; railway track scales, $500; storage cistern, $3,757.88; machinery to be placed in machine shop just completed, $50,000; in all, $61,837.13.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert "dredging a channel in Mare Island Strait to enable all classes of naval vessels to reach the navy-yard, $250,000;" and in line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-six," and insert "three hundred and sixteen;" so as to make the clause read:

Navy-yard, Mare Island, California: For extension of quay wall, $30,000; grading and paving about the stone dry dock, $10,000; dredging, $20,000; dredging a channel in Mare Island Strait to enable all classes of naval vessels to reach the navy-yard, $250,000; completing coppersmith's shop, steam engineering, $3,000; storage shed north of building No. 55, $3,785; in all, $316,785.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 22, to insert:

Naval hospital, Chelsea, Mass.: To enable the Secretary of the Navy to cause the removal of the brick wall in front of the United States naval hospital, on Broadway, in the city of Chelsea, Mass., and to substitute in place thereof an iron fence, $9,000, and $1,000 of this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used to repair the sea wall on the water front of said naval hospital.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 5, to insert:

Naval hospital, naval station, Port Royal, S. C.: For hospital at the naval station at Port Royal, S. C., $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 15, after the word "use," to strike out:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to cause the naval supply fund to be hereafter credited with the net proceeds from sales of condemned naval supplies and materials other than condemned ordnance material, clothing, and small stores.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. For the convenience of Senators at this hour, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate, at 6 o'clock this evening, take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator from Iowa to postpone that request until we ascertain what progress has been made upon the pending bill. That request may undoubtedly just as well be made two or three hours from this time as now.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly, and if it is the desire of the Senator that I shall postpone the request until that time, I shall do so; but it seems to me it is better to have the question settled now.

Mr. ALDRICH. In two or three hours from now we shall know what progress has been made with the pending appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. But we know now that we shall be obliged either to sit continuously until a late hour to-night or take a recess.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the pending bill passes, I see no reason why the Senate should be kept here continuously, as we have been kept for the last three or four days.

Mr. HALE. We have two other appropriation bills to pass after the one now pending shall have been passed.

Mr. ALDRICH. True, we have two other appropriation bills to pass, but we have two days in which to pass them, and we have just passed one in an hour and a half.

Mr. HALE. But it is necessary that we shall have conferences with the House of Representatives on the amendments.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senators on the conference committees will have time for the conferences. They certainly can not be in charge of bills in the Senate Chamber and attending conference committees at the same time.

Mr. HALE. No; but the reason we are anxious to pass the remaining appropriation bills at the earliest moment is in order that we may be enabled to go into conference.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senate can pass the appropriation bills with great rapidity, I should say, from what we have witnessed.

Mr. ALLISON. It is true that the bills are read with reasonable rapidity, but we never know how much debate may arise on a bill before it is concluded.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator that he postpone his request for a recess for two hours.

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest that if we make the arrangement for a recess now, we can adjourn later on if we find that we can properly do so.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have no objection, if it is understood that agreeing to take a recess now will not preclude the Senate from adjourning at any time.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly not. It is in the power of the Senate to adjourn at any time it wishes.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] waives his objection, and I ask unanimous consent that the request I have made be granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). The Senator from Iowa ask that unanimous consent be given that the Senate at 6 o'clock will take a recess until 8 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HALE. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the naval appropriation bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the Naval Academy, on page 36, line 22, after the word "English," to strike out "(after thirty years' service);" so as to read:

For 1 professor of mathematics, 1 of chemistry, 1 of physics, and 1 of English, at $2,500, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, on page 38, in line 7, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That the proper pay officer of the Navy be, and is hereby, authorized to pay the professors at the Naval Academy, whose compensation was affected by the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, approved March 2, 1895, at the rate of compensation fixed by that act from July 1, 1896.

The next amendment was, on page 40, line 16, after the word "Academy" to insert "to be expended in his discretion;" so as to read:

For contingencies for the Superintendent of the Academy, to be expended in his discretion, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 13, to insert:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract not more than three torpedo boats, to have a speed of not less than 30 knots, to cost in all not exceeding $300,000. And not more than two of said torpedo boats shall be built in one yard or by one contracting party, and in each case the contract shall be awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest best responsible bidder. And in the construction of said torpedo boats all the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to materials for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built except as to premiums, which are not to be offered, the notice of proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, and in all their parts shall be of domestic manufacture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 11, after the word "authorized," to insert "and authorized under this act;" and in line 12, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five million nine" and insert "six million four;" so as to read:

Construction and machinery: On account of the hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, and authorized under this act, $6,425,359.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 13, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Provided, That section 2 of the act entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," approved August 3, 1886, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That in the construction of all naval vessels the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture, and of the quality and characteristics best adapted to the various purposes for which it may be used, in accordance with specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish some one would tell us why the committee reports to strike out section 2 of the act of 1886. It seems to me a very sensible provision. I am told, however, that even if it be stricken out it will still be required under other permanent laws that all the steel shall be of domestic manufacture. I can not see why these lines should have the black lines drawn through them.

Mr. HALE. The question of domestic manufacture does not come up by the striking out of section 2, because that is a law at present, whether or not this be stricken out.

This provision as to section 2 was put in by the House, and it takes the place of the old provision which required that vessels should be constructed of steel of domestic manufacture having a tensile strength of not less than 60,000 pounds per square inch and an elongation in 8 inches of not less than 25 per cent. That is an ironclad provision, fixing certain limits of tensile strength and elongation.

The work that has been done in the Navy since this law was passed has convinced the head of the Department that the provision should be stricken out limiting it to 60,000 pounds per square inch and an elongation in 8 inches of 25 per cent. He has put in the words "and of the quality and characteristics best adapted to the various purposes for which it may be used, in accordance with specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy." So the object sought to be gained by amending section 2 is to leave the strength and elongation to the Secretary under his own tests and not limit him to a 25 per cent elongation in 8 inches and to 60,000 pounds tensile strength per square inch.

The Committee on Appropriations, or a majority of the committee, thought it was better not to interfere with that, and to strike out this, which leaves the old law. But it leaves the provision for domestic manufacture just the same as it is and always has been. That portion of it is not involved.

Mr. HAWLEY. Do I understand, then, that the Secretary prefers—I do not know whether or not the Navy Department asks for this—not to be limited to the tensile strength spoken of in the law?

Mr. HALE. The Secretary has written a letter to that effect.

Mr. HAWLEY. He would rather go below it?

Mr. HALE. Yes; in some cases below and in some above it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no objection to leaving it to the discretion of the Department, because they have had so much experience that they ought to know precisely what they want by this time. We could hardly suppose that the Secretary of the Navy would build an inferior ship. I see no objection to the House provision.

Mr. HALE. In the debate in the House it was stated that the Secretary of the Navy, in a letter which I hardly think it necessary for me to read, has recommended that in order to avoid those difficulties that section should be amended in this form:

That in the construction of all naval vessels the steel material shall be of domestic manufacture and of the quality and characteristics best adapted to the various purposes for which it may be used, in accordance with specifications approved by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Secretary of the Navy wants it to stand as the House put it, I will vote against the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. Has the Senator from Maine—I have not—seen any letter from the Secretary of the Navy requesting this, or is there only a statement made in the coordinate branch by the member in charge of the bill that such a letter is in existence? It has not come to my knowledge at all events, and I ask the Senator from Maine whether he has read such a letter?

Mr. HALE. No; I only read what was said by the chairman of the committee in the House. Of course, I can send for the letter, if it is desired. I have not myself seen the letter. I have no doubt that the Secretary stated in the letter just exactly what is given here.

Mr. GORMAN. That is very probable, but it is so radically changed, and it leaves such discretion with the officers of the Department, that it seems to me on first sight, and to some who are very much interested in this matter, that possibly there might grow up all sorts of conditions; that contracts would be changed after they were made.

I do not know whether or not there is anything in this suggestion. I do know, however, that in 1886 the Department itself, as well as the manufacturers of steel for the vessels, wanted to fix the minimum, not the maximum. It has been changed very radically from 1886 until now.

Mr. HALE. That is the reason which actuated the Senate committee, and I do not think any harm will come if the provision is stricken out and the law is left as it stands now.

Mr. GORMAN. That is what I desire to say to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], that it ought to be stricken out here at all events, so that the matter may go into conference; and if the gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol have information which has not been given officially to the Senate, it can be produced and considered. No such recommendation is contained in the report of the Navy Department, or that of the Chief of Ordnance. It is an entirely new provision, and it repeals a wholesome provision that was inserted in the law of 1886 so as to prevent any very great favoritism, if such was ever attempted.

Mr. HALE. It has been observed ever since.

Mr. GORMAN. It was a precaution, and, so far as I know, it has operated well. The only complaint stated is the one which the Senator from Maine read, although I could not hear all he read, that some plate were delivered at the Norfolk yard, or at the Newport News yard, which exceeded this strength, and when they came to bend them they were a little too brittle. That was the fault of the manufacturers, and very little of that has occurred.

Now, I think it is unwise that we should make any very radical change in the conditions under which the new Navy has been constructed since 1884. They have operated well. There is no complaint, so far as I know, and with full power already granted to the Secretary of the Navy we have built some magnificent ships, and the manufacturers say the conditions which are imposed upon them in the manufacture of armor plate to-day are very much greater than they were in 1886, when that law was passed. That only fixed the minimum. So I think it is unwise, in view of what is coming on, when we are to have a new Administration, that there should be any radical changes whatever in the conditions as we have applied them, and which have operated so well to build up the Navy. Let the new Secretary, as he comes in, have the same power that his predecessors have had, who have made such great reputations. Let him have the same power except as to the matter of the cost of armor, which is one that the Committee on Naval Affairs have been looking into. I trust for one that we shall not make these changes, particularly in the absence of a specific recommendation of the Department and a hearing upon the subject. It is too important.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to interrupt the Senator from Maryland to say that there is great force in what he has said, and I think the wisest thing is to strike it out until we get further information.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust it will be done.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would rather myself have an unnecessarily high test of tensile strength than to run the risk of getting inferior steel; but I do not make any further objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand, then, that the result of the debate which has taken place is that the amendment proposed by the committee to strike out the proviso beginning in line 13, on page 49, is to be agreed to.

If that is done, the result will be that when the bill goes into conference, if the House committee have any reasons for modifying the characteristics which the steel must have, they can present those reasons to the committee of conference.

Mr. HALE. It is all left open.

Mr. CHANDLER. I certainly should be unwilling to have the provision that the steel shall be of domestic manufacture changed, and it will require very strong evidence to convince me (I agree with the Senator from Maryland) that we ought to reduce the qualities of the steel to be used. Does the Senator from Maine know whether it is proposed to allow a worse steel than that which is now used, or to insist upon a better steel?

Mr. HALE. No; I do not think that is the purpose of the Secretary. I think the object is to get a more adaptable steel in the form of structures that are now used. I have no doubt that the object is a good one. But the old law has worked well; great ships have been constructed under it, and, as the Senator from Maryland says, great reputations have been made under it, and I think we had better proceed slowly. Therefore, I think it is better that we should strike out the clause and leave the law as it is.

Mr. CHANDLER. There may be reasons why the characteristics strictly described in the existing law should be changed. If so, the House committee will be able to satisfy the Senate committee on that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 50, line 5, after the word "ninety-four," to insert "and the torpedo boats authorized under this act;" and in line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available;" so as to read:

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for the vessels authorized by the act of August 3, 1886; of those authorized by the act of July 19, 1892; of the vessels authorized by the act of March 3, 1893; of the three torpedo boats, act of July 26, 1894, and the torpedo boats authorized under this act; of the vessels authorized under the act of March 2, 1895; of the vessels authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, $7,230,705, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 16, after the word "tests," to insert "and no contract for armor plate shall be made at a rate to exceed $400 per ton;" so as to read:

Provided, That the total cost of the armor, according to the plans and specifications already prepared, for the three battle ships authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, shall not exceed $3,210,000, exclusive of the cost of transportation, ballistic test plates, and tests, and no contract for armor plate shall be made at a rate to exceed $400 per ton.

Mr. CHANDLER. I suggest to the Senator from Maine to allow this amendment to be passed over until the whole clause with reference to the increase in the Navy is disposed of.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that course. The amendment can be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 50, line 20, before the word "That," to strike out "And provided further, That no portion of this armor shall be purchased until it has all been contracted for."

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that this amendment may be passed over also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed, as follows:

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to contract with either or all of the builders of the hulls and machinery of those vessels, or with any one or more bidders, for the furnishing of the entire amount of said armor, if he shall deem it for the best interest of the Government.

Mr. GORMAN. I will move to strike out what has just been read, but I understand the Senator from Maine wants to proceed with his other amendments, and I merely give the notice now.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 51, to insert:

In case the Secretary of the Navy shall find it impossible to make contracts for said armor within the limits as to price above fixed, he shall be, and hereby is, authorized to lease, purchase, or establish a Government armor factory of sufficient capacity to make such armor and to proceed to manufacture the armor necessary for said three battle ships. In executing this authority he shall prepare a description and plans and specifications of the land, buildings, and machinery suitable for the factory; and shall advertise for proposals to furnish such land, buildings, and machinery as a whole plant, or separately, for the land or buildings or the whole or any part of said machinery; and he shall make a contract or contracts for such land, buildings and machinery with the lowest and best responsible bidders. The Secretary shall also appoint an armor factory board, to consist of competent naval officers of suitable rank, to advise and assist him in executing the authority hereby conferred. For the establishment of said armor factory the sum of $1,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, and in addition the sum of $1,000,000 is appropriated, to be used in making the armor of said three battle ships at said factory.

Mr. GORMAN. Let this amendment be passed over also.

Mr. HALE. Let it go over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 52, line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which sum $30,000 to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

Equipment: Toward the completion of the equipment outfit of the new vessels heretofore authorized by Congress, $162,623, of which sum $30,000 to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 2, to insert:

Training vessel for Naval Academy: For one composite vessel, propelled by steam and sail, to be used for the training of cadets at the Naval Academy, including outfit, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 6, to strike out:

Total increase of the Navy, $13,308,783.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 9, to strike out:

Total for naval establishment, $22,165,294.19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. HALE. Now, we will go back, if the Senate please, to the controverted points, which are on page 50, and are found in the proviso beginning in line 11. If the Secretary will read that clause, it will bring before the Senate exactly what is the subject of controversy.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before that is done, I wish to ask the Senator whether the amendment on page 48 for three torpedo boats has been adopted.

Mr. HALE. It has been agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire now or later to move either to diminish the number or to increase the cost of those boats. I do not think that three boats such as we want to build can be built for $800,000.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps the Senator has not noticed the language there, which meets his idea exactly, for it says not more than three torpedo boats, so that the Department, if it chooses, can build two of the larger and swifter kind.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will examine it, and if I desire to move an amendment I will do so in the Senate.

Mr. HALE. That can be done. Let the Secretary state the amendment on page 50, line 16.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Appropriations reports an amendment, after the word "tests," in line 16, page 50, to insert:

And no contract for armor plate shall be made at a rate to exceed $400 per ton.

Mr. HALE. The action of the House is the result of a very thorough investigation into the whole subject of the purchase and price of armor plate for naval ships that was made by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. Without going into the details of that investigation, I may say that the general results were that the prices paid for armor were much too great; that the cost and the condition of the establishments producing the armor were so established that it was believed $400 was an ample price for armor to be purchased in the future, and so the Committee on Naval Affairs reported, after a thorough investigation by the committee and by the Secretary of the Navy. The researches and investigation made by the Secretary of the Navy were most complete and furnish as good a piece of work as any departmental officer has done in years, in my judgment.

The House committee and the House itself sanctioned this investigation and its results by figuring up how much armor plate would be wanted for the three vessels already authorized and fixing an aggregate amount at the rate of $400 per ton, but not in terms declaring that that should be the limit. The Senate committee voted to add the additional words, "and no contract for armor plate shall be made at a rate to exceed $400 per ton," so that the text of the bill when it becomes a law will carry with itself the limitation. I do not suppose that was actually needed as a guide to any Secretary who may administer the Department in the years to come, and who will make the contracts and buy armor, but it was thought better to put it in in terms. That is the reason, in short, why the proviso and the amendment to it are found in the bill. This is all I wish to say at present on the subject.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to strike out the words "two hundred and ten thousand dollars" in line 15; to strike out the word "a" before the word "rate," in line 17, and insert "an average," and to strike out the word "four" before "hundred," at the end of line 17, and insert "three;" so that the general provision will be that the cost of armor plate for the three battle ships shall not exceed $3,000,000, and the provision reported by the Senate committee shall read "and no contract for armor plate shall be made at an average rate to exceed $300 per ton."

The Senator from Maine has briefly alluded to the investigations upon this subject. The Committee on Naval Affairs began its investigation under a resolution agreed to December 31, 1895. The course pursued by the Senate committee is stated in the report of that committee at the present session (Report No. 1453), and first recounts what the committee had done up to the passage of the appropriation act of June 10, 1896.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator, before he begins his argument, allow me to interrupt him a moment, that I may ask him a question for information? I could not understand distinctly the amendment proposed by the Senator, but I thought he proposed to limit the cost of armor plate to $300 a ton.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator was correct.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee proposes, I believe, $400 a ton. Is that correct?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is right.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have not been able to examine this question as I should like to do, and I would be glad to have information upon one or two points. There has been a newspaper statement, if I read it correctly, to the effect that the Secretary of the Navy in his examination of the cost of armor plate placed it at $160 or $170 a ton, and that it had been furnished to some foreign government by the parties who have been supplying the Government of the United States at a rate of $250 a ton, or in that neighborhood, and also, that there is some proposition from an Illinois company to supply the Government with what armor plate it needs now at $250 a ton. I should be glad to have the Senator state to the Senate what the facts are. I am not familiar with them.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will not reply in one sentence to all the inquiries made by the Senator from Arkansas, but will state that the conclusion of the Secretary of the Navy as to the question of armor was that $400 per ton would be a fair price. The House committee and the Senate committee have adopted $400 as the price. The Senate committee have merely made the limitation as to price more specific than it was made by the gross amount of the cost of the armor of the three ships as fixed by the House committee.

I said that the report to which I alluded, submitted February 11, 1897, by the Committee on Naval Affairs, stated the course of the investigation made by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs prior to the passage of the act of June 10, 1896. It will be remembered by Senators that the result of the debate a year ago was that no authority was given to the Secretary of the Navy to make the contract for armor for the three battle ships in that bill, but he was directed to make a further investigation and report to this session of Congress what would be a fair price for armor. The Secretary's report has been submitted to Congress, in which he reaches the conclusion that $400 a ton would be a fair price for armor. That report was sent in on the 5th day of January, 1897. It is House Document No. 151, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session; part 2 of the same document, January 25, 1897.

Mr. GORMAN. Will not the Senator oblige us by coming a little nearer to the center of the aisle, so that he may be heard on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Conversation will be suspended in the Chamber.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should be glad to talk in the center of the aisle if this question only interested the Senator from Maryland and the few Senators in the Chamber who are giving attention to the subject, but I think it ought to engage the attention of all the Senators who remain in the Chamber.

Mr. GORMAN. I think so myself.

Mr. CHANDLER. Those Senators, at least, who understand the amendment which I am proposing should certainly listen to the arguments of the Senators who will oppose that amendment.

This report of Secretary Herbert is a very able document. The Secretary not only made inquiry here, but he made inquiry abroad; and I gladly join in the commendation of the zeal and diligence and ability and courage of the Secretary of the Navy which found embodiment in his report where he says that $400 will be a fair price for the contract for the armor for the three battle ships, which is a reduction of about $180 per ton below the price paid by the Secretary within a year for the armor for the Kentucky and the Kearsarge.

The whole case is before Senators in the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the report of Secretary Herbert. The committee simply say that a fair price for armor will be between $300 and $400 per ton, and they submit to the Senate and to the House of Representatives the responsibility of determining what price shall be paid. I will read the conclusion of the committee:

The committee therefore conclude to report that a fair average price of armor will be between $300 and $400 per ton, and, without fixing the exact amount, to leave the question to be further considered by the committees and to be determined as may appear to be just when the naval appropriation bill is under discussion in the two Houses of Congress.

On page 19 of the report of the committee to which I am alluding is stated the Secretary's method of arriving at the sum of $400, and I will read:

The Secretary takes as the cost of labor and material in double-forged, harveyized, nickel-steel armor the sum of	$196.00
He assumes that the plant costing $1,500,000 would need $150,000 per year for maintaining it, or $50 per ton upon 3,000 tons of armor, and adds to the price	50.00
Making	246.00
Or in round numbers	250.00
He then adds for profit 50 per cent, or	125.00
Making	375.00
And then adds for nickel to be furnished hereafter by the contractors	20.00
Making	395.00
Or in round numbers	400.00

Upon page 20 of the report is an estimate making the price of armor $300, and that price was reached in a table which was prepared by me and for which I am alone responsible, except that the committee state that it was under discussion in the committee room while the report was being prepared. That statement was made up by considering the points stated in the report, which I will now read, beginning at the bottom of page 19:

Certainly an allowance of $150,000 per year for maintaining an armor-making plant seems excessive; and in addition to the total cost of manufacture, which includes the materials in the ingot, the materials consumed in manufacture, the labor, the keeping of the plant ready for use, the shop expenses, the office expenses and contingencies, and the expenses of administration, superintendence, and engineering (see Secretary Herbert's report, page 25), to give an allowance of 50 per cent profit is too liberal.

After the Secretary's report was received, the committee engaged in considering the question whether it would not be a sufficiently liberal allowance to take the careful estimate of the Secretary's experts as to the cost of labor and material; to allow for maintenance of the plant only three-fifths of the sum per ton named by the Secretary, and to add only 33⅓ per cent for profits on work where the plant has been in fact paid for and is maintained by the Government. A statement thus revised would be as follows:

Here is the table prepared by me, of which I have spoken, and which is printed in the report:

Cost of labor and material per ton	$168.00
Add for reforging	12.00
	180.00
Add for maintenance of plant	30.00
	210.00
Thirty-three and one-third per cent profit	70.00
	280.00
Add for nickel	20.00
Making the price for armor	300.00

Now, Mr. President, intending not to delay the Senate long in the discussion of this question, I declare my belief that the sum of $300 per ton is nearer a fair price—a just price as between the contractors and the Government for making armor—than $400 would be, assuming that the Government is prepared to contract for a sufficient number of tons of armor to make it an object for the contractors to keep their works in motion.

Mr. FRYE. The Committee on Appropriations fixes the price at $400?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Appropriations Committee, in the bill as they report it, take the Secretary's sum of $400. The Naval Committee, in its report, said a fair price would be somewhere between $300 and $400, leaving it to the Senate and the House to determine whether a limitation should be fixed by legislation.

Mr. GORMAN. But—I will ask the Senator for information—is it not a fact that the Naval Committee, as well as the Secretary, recommended $400 as the limit? It was my understanding that the Naval Committee, after final action, agreed to $400 a ton.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order. I think there should be quiet in the Senate so that Senators may know what is going on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will refrain from conversation in the Chamber.

Mr. QUAY. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] as to what the Committee on Appropriations fixed as the price of armor, the facts attending the appropriation are that the Naval Committee having recommended or suggested $400 as a proper price for armor, the Naval Committee of the House, without inserting any provision fixing the price of armor in the bill, based the gross appropriation upon that valuation, and the bill was sent here in that shape. The Committee on Naval Affairs sent to the Committee on Appropriations an amendment which substantially provides that $400 shall be the limit of the price of armor.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will allow me, either Senator, I was not in when the pending bill was read, and I wish to inquire whether there is any provision, in case a limit is fixed, by which the armor can be procured, providing contracts can not be made?

Mr. CHANDLER. On page 51 there is an amendment authorizing the establishment of a Government armor factory in case the Secretary of the Navy shall find it impossible to make contracts.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] are mistaken, or I am mistaken, as to the action of the Naval Committee. The Naval Committee made its report, in which they said that a fair price would be between three and four hundred dollars. There it is, written in the report. The Naval Committee did not send to the Committee on Appropriations, to my knowledge, the provision that a contract might be made for armor at not exceeding $400 a ton.

Mr. QUAY. My understanding was that it was recommended by the Senator from New Hampshire from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do a great many things without knowing it, and I am not making any issue with the Senator from Pennsylvania as to the proposition which he and the Senator from Maryland have made that the Naval Committee sent this four-hundred-dollar amendment to the Committee on Appropriations. I will only ask him to produce evidence of that.

Mr. QUAY. That was my understanding.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the Senator is mistaken, but I am cautious about matters as to which one's memory can not be certain. I do not have any recollection of any agreement of $400. I am quite certain that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] now in the chair, a member of the committee, who has given this subject close attention, never has agreed absolutely to the sum of $400, but did agree to the conclusion that a fair price would be between three and four hundred dollars, and that the question of price should be determined by the Senate and the House of Representatives during the passage of the naval bill. So I understand that the $400 proposition is before the Senate solely as the conclusion of the Appropriations Committee, of which the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Pennsylvania are distinguished and active members.

Mr. QUAY. It seems to me, unless I am in error, that this amendment was drafted by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is getting confused.

Mr. QUAY. Well, I may be.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from New Hampshire was requested to draw the provision upon page 51 for an armor-plate factory to be established by the Government in case the sum fixed as the maximum price of armor should not be accepted by the armor contractors; but the Senator from New Hampshire—and here he is upon positive grounds—did not draft the provision of this contract which reads:

And no contract for armor plate shall be made at a rate to exceed $400 per ton.

If he had drafted an amendment of that kind, he certainly would have inserted $300 per ton if the amendment had been drawn to meet his own views.

Mr. President, the sum and substance of this whole business is that, in my judgment, if you will give a contract large enough to these armor manufacturers, $300 a ton is enough. About that question the whole controversy, as it seems, should go forward. I admit that $300 a ton would be a small price, although a fair price, for the armor of these three ships. The sum of $400 per ton might be a fair price if a much less quantity of armor than that required for the three battle ships were to be contracted for.

The question of how much armor the Government will want during the next half dozen years is entirely for the determination of Congress, and not at all for the determination of the contractors. I think that those contractors could make a fair and reasonable profit on the armor for those three ships at $300 a ton. The reasons for it are stated in this estimate. The Secretary took the cost of labor and material as $196. That was the average of a half dozen estimates. I put the cost of labor and material at $168, that being the sum fixed by the Secretary's experts, three naval officers, capable, intelligent, upright men, who inquired into every fact necessary to enable them to make a reasonable estimate, and came to the conclusion that $168 was a fair price. So I take that, and I add for reforging what they say will be a fair price, $12, and make the sum of $180. The Secretary adds for the cost of labor and material $50 a ton, which, if there were 3,000 tons a year made at either of the works, would make $150,000 for the maintenance of a plant, which the Secretary has demonstrated in his report has already been paid for by the profits which have been given to those contractors for existing contracts up to this date. I came to the conclusion that $90,000 would be a large annual sum to give to these contractors for the maintenance of a plant which had already been paid for by the United States, and especially when in the estimate made for cost of labor and material there is included the cost of keeping the plant ready for use. The Secretary's experts included that in the sum of $168.

Mr. President, there is only one other difference between myself and the Secretary of the Navy in making this estimate. The Secretary, after he has ascertained the cost of labor and material at $196 a ton, has added $50 a ton for the maintenance of the plant already paid for by the United States by the profits paid to the contractors, thus getting $246, which he calls, in round numbers, $250, and adds 50 per cent profit to that amount. I submit to the Senate that under those conditions 33⅓ per cent profit is sufficient.

It will be noticed that the cost of production, to which the Secretary of the Navy proceeds to add 50 per cent profit, is about the sum—$10 more, in fact—for which the Bethlehem Company made a contract to furnish armor to the Russian Government, and I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas, who asked me this question, to this fact. Secretary Herbert takes $250 as the cost of the production of armor, including maintenance of plant, and allows 50 per cent profit at $250 per ton, or $10 more than the Bethlehem Company's contract with the Russian Government. The Bethlehem Company furnished about $600,000 worth of armor to the Russian Government at about $240 per ton. To be sure, they contend, and I think correctly, that they made no profit on that contract with the Russian Government. It is not likely, however, that they made a loss upon that contract. And here we have the conclusion reached by the Secretary that the cost of producing this armor is $250 a ton, a little more than the amount of the contract made by the Bethlehem Company with the Russian Government.

Mr. President, I submit, in all fairness, that 33⅓ per cent, to be added to this price of $250 per ton, is a more reasonable and just addition for profit than that which the Secretary of the Navy has adopted in his very liberal estimate of $400 a ton.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I have sent for the report of the Secretary of the Navy since asking a question of the Senator, and was just looking it over at the time he was speaking. On page 39 of the report I find this statement by the Secretary of the Navy:

> It has been determined that the cost of the labor and material in a ton of double-forged nickel-steel harveyed armor, including allowances for losses in manufacture, is $197.75. This comprises every element of cost in its manufacture save and except only the maintenance of plant.

Did I understand the Senator to say that the Secretary of the Navy found that $250 was the cost?

Mr. CHANDLER. Two hundred and fifty dollars was the cost. The Secretary of the Navy makes $196 the cost of labor and material, including the keeping of the plant in order; then he adds $50 a ton for the maintenance of the plant, making $246; which he increases, to make round numbers, to $250, then adds 50 per cent more for profit to that, making $375; and then he adds $20 for nickel, making $395, and he again increases this amount, to get round numbers, to $400.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. But the Secretary states, as I see on page 42 of his report, that $400 a ton would allow a profit of 50 per cent.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is what he is estimating, as the Senator will see by the table submitted by the Secretary of the Navy toward the close of the report and which is embodied in the report of the Senate committee.

Mr. President, this is the evidence up to the time of the offer of the Illinois Steel Company. I am not familiar with that offer. I do not know what are the terms of that offer, or whether or not it has been submitted to the Senate. When the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is momentarily absent from the Chamber, comes in I shall ask him what he knows about the proposition from the Illinois Steel Company. It is my impression, however, that they have written to the Secretary of the Navy that if a sufficiently large contract can be given to them they will undertake to make this armor for $200 a ton. What they would consider a sufficiently large contract I do not know, and whether, if their offer were accepted, they would not find the difficulties in the way of the cost of establishing the plant and the perplexities and obstructions in the way of making armor coming up to the requirements of the Government so great that they would retreat from their offer, I can not say.

But, Mr. President, I do know this, that the expense of manufacturing iron and steel products in the United States is less at this moment than it has ever been in any past time. Now that competition has arisen between the great iron and steel producers of the country, the price of steel rails has gone down to seventeen or eighteen dollars a ton; and the Illinois Steel Company, which is making steel rails at a presumed profit at that rate, comes forward and says to the Secretary of the Navy that it is willing to make a large quantity of armor for the United States at the sum of about $200 a ton.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow me a moment?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. This report of Secretary Herbert has been very highly spoken of by the Senator in charge of this bill, as well as by the Senator from New Hampshire, and there are some very striking things in it, which I notice going along; for instance, on page 34 of the report, I see this statement, which I shall read and ask the Senator if he concurs in the suggestion which the Secretary makes. He says:

> These two calculations both show net results. Whatever may have been the cost of the armor plant and the gun plant, whatever may have been paid for the secrets of manufacture or for patents, whatever may have been the interest on working capital, all those and other charges were paid from the gross earnings of the company; only net earnings have been considered, and the results show that the company's investments in plant to make armor and gun steel for the Government have been returned with 22 per cent thereon.

I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he regards that as a reasonable estimate, that the enormous plant which has been erected by these two companies has been absolutely all paid for, and 22 per cent in addition, on the Government contracts which they have already had?

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the carefully prepared estimate of Secretary Herbert, which I am glad to see the Senator is studying. That report has been before the Naval Committee of the Senate and the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives and it has been before the country since the 5th day of January, and there has been no serious impairment of that report made by the representatives of these two companies; but, on the other hand, we have the offer of the Illinois Steel Company to furnish armor in large quantities to the United States at between $200 and $250 a ton.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] desired to interrupt me. I yield to him with pleasure, and will ask him if he knows what is the offer of the Illinois Steel Company?

Mr. QUAY. I was about to say, Mr. President, in response to the Senator from New Hampshire, that I think there is no real offer from the Illinois Steel Company to deliver armor at any price at any time. There has been talk of it, and there have been some suggestions in relation to a competing bid by an officer of the Illinois Steel Company who has been haunting the Capitol, but there is nothing substantial in it nor behind it. The Illinois Steel Company are not equipped to manufacture armor, and they can not produce steel rails at $17 a ton and make a profit.

The fact is that there has been a pool in existence for some time between the manufacturers of steel rails, but it has very recently been dissolved, and the price of rails knocked down to a very low figure, so low that I think all the steel-rail companies of the country now contracting to deliver steel are contracting to do it at a loss. The offer of the Illinois Steel Company is simply an attempt by that corporation to annoy another concern engaged in the steel-rail business which is also making armor, and which antagonized the Illinois Company in the dissolution of the steel-rail pool. That is all there is of it. There is nothing serious in the proposition.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania to conclude that the Illinois Steel Company's offer is not made bona fide, but with the object of annoying or embarrassing the Carnegie Company and the Bethlehem Company in their armor contracts.

Mr. QUAY. That is an exact description of their proposition, so far as it is a proposition.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not know but what that is so; I do not know that it is so; but I do know that the Illinois Steel Company have written the Secretary of the Navy, stating that they desire to bid for the armor for these three battle ships, and they will undoubtedly bid for that armor, provided there is sufficient time to be given by the Department to enable them to establish a plant.

This idea, Mr. President, brings me to the last suggestion I wish to make to the Senate, after having stated my belief that $300 a ton is a fair price to pay for the armor for these three battle ships.

The question as to whether there shall be any competition, when the contracts for the armor for these three ships are awarded, outside of the Bethlehem and the Carnegie companies, which are in combination, and will not be in competition, depends upon the time that will be given for the furnishing of the armor.

I am informed as to the time which would be required for the establishment of a new armor plant, that nine months would be amply sufficient to prepare in connection with any existing steel works the hydraulic press and the machinery necessary for the fabrication of armor. The press would have to be brought from abroad, possibly some portions of the machinery, but the report of Secretary Herbert shows that between five hundred thousand and seven hundred thousand dollars will be the cost of an armor-producing plant. The Secretary adds to the cost of the press and the machinery the cost of building, of the harveyizing furnaces, and various other items, as the result of which addition he reaches the conclusion that $1,500,000 will be the cost of a new armor plant.

I am not informed how much time can be given to new bidders for this armor. I am satisfied that $1,500,000—less than $1,500,000; that $1,000,000 will enable the Illinois Steel Company or the Cambria Steel Works or any one of three or four other large manufacturers of iron and steel in this country to prepare for making armor, and if time enough can be given there will be competition before the Secretary of the Navy for the privilege of furnishing this armor, and that competition, I am entirely certain, will result in an offer, if there is sufficient time to furnish the 8,000 tons of armor which are needed, to make the armor at for not exceeding $300 a ton. Therefore I think the Senate will be justified in adopting the amendment which I propose.

Mr. QUAY. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to yield to me to enable me to secure the passage of a bill upon the Calendar at the present time for the construction of a bridge over the Monongahela River. It will not occupy more than five minutes.

Mr. HALE. I can not yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania, while I should be very glad to do so, because I have at least a dozen such requests. If we will continue the consideration of the pending bill, we will very soon be through with it, and there will be opportunity after the passage of the appropriation bills for all these bridge bills and others of that kind. But under the circumstances, I am constrained to decline.

Mr. QUAY. It is useless to suppose, then, that the Senator from Maine would permit me to call up the labor-commission bill at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. HALE. Considering that that measure would occupy the rest of the time of the session, it would be useless.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I dislike very much to take up a single moment of the time of the Senate in the discussion of any matter at this late hour in the session, almost at its close, but I feel that the propositions pending in this bill are so radical, are so far-reaching in their effect, that the Senate of the United States ought not to make the changes proposed, either in the bill as it came from the other House or by accepting some of the amendments proposed by the Senate Committee on Appropriations in regard to the increase of the Navy.

After the warm discussions, involving politics as they did, in regard to the Navy prior to 1884, we entered in that year upon the system for the construction of a new navy that has met with the approval of the American people. It was simply that the designs of the ships should be made by the Navy Department; that the material from the keel to the gun should be manufactured by private parties in this country; that the Government of the United States should not attempt the almost impossible task for it of delving in the mines and bringing out ore and fashioning it into the great blocks of steel that are necessary in the construction of these ships; that if we did there would not only be failure, but the cost in all probability would be five times as great as that which we have paid private enterprises for the same work; that in the construction of the ship itself we should have competition between the navy-yards and private builders; that not only in the interest of the Navy, but in the interest of commerce, for the purpose of creating a great marine fleet to be engaged in commercial affairs, we should have a number of shipyards capable of putting on the ocean vessels equal to any constructed on the Clyde.

From 1884 up to this hour the system has worked in perfect harmony and with the greatest success the world has ever seen. As to the cost, no man until within the past two years has questioned that it was as economical as good administration could make it. It was greater per ship or per ton than the English and the French and the German Governments were paying for the construction of their vessels, but the conditions in this country were such that that was absolutely necessary. The cost of our labor was greater and our skill was not equal to that of the other nations which I have mentioned. But we have reached a point now, because of this encouragement, where we have been able not only to construct our own vessels, as the Secretary of the Navy now admits, practically within the cost of English ships of the same class, but we have been able to put upon the ocean vessels which compare with any that float.

Mr. President, to disturb unnecessarily a plan of action which has produced results as great as those I have named is a serious matter for Congress. I agree that it is the duty of Congress and the Secretary of the Navy to seek to obtain the material which enters into the construction of vessels at the lowest possible cost, and, while I give the Secretary of the Navy great credit for all he has said and done and for his thorough investigation into the question, the results of which are contained in the report now before the Senate, it is at the same time due to the Senate to say that that executive officer, nor none under him, suggested this procedure. It originated with the Committee on Naval Affairs of this body, so far as I know, and it was their inquiry that compelled the Department to make this investigation and to report the result. That Secretary, in my judgment, has wisely suggested that, if a limitation is to be applied by Congress to the cost of armor, it ought not to be a greater reduction than a limitation to $400 for a ton of 2,240 pounds, and I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the fact that we have failed in the amendment to insert a provision for a ton of 2,240 pounds.

But, Mr. President, coupled with this recommendation is another, as to which I can never agree with the Secretary of the Navy. It is said that if we make this reduction we ought to repeal the provision of law which requires the material to be of American manufacture. To that suggestion I never can give my consent. It is true he believes it would result in economy in the purchase of this material, notwithstanding the fact that we pay but little more for our armor than is paid by the governments of Europe. It has been said that all the manufacturers in the world of this class of material are in combine. It may be, although I do not know that that is the fact; but I do know that there has been but slight reduction in the cost to the English and French and German Governments for this class of armor, and our officers go so far as to say that there is no such armor made for any other government on the face of the earth; that ours is more expensive, not only in the material which is used in making it, but in the shapes of the pieces required in the construction of our ships.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Was not the armor which was furnished to the Russian Government identical with the armor furnished to this Government, and was not that furnished at less than $250 a ton, when this Government was paying $563 for the same kind of armor?

Mr. GORMAN. As I understand it, the Russian Government gave a contract to the Bethlehem Company for armor at $250 a ton, but it was not the same armor. It would not have stood the test. It was not the armor that our Navy requires for our vessels.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland where he finds that fact recorded anywhere—that the armor furnished to the Russian Government for $240 a ton was in any manner inferior to the armor furnished to the United States?

Mr. GORMAN. I do not find it recorded in any of these reports that are before me, but that, as I recall it, was the statement of the manufacturers of the armor plate at the time, a year or two ago.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that the reason the manufacturers gave for going abroad was that they desired to demonstrate the superiority of American armor to foreign armor.

Mr. GORMAN. That is true.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then did they send inferior armor over there?

Mr. GORMAN. No, sir; they did not, as I understand, send inferior armor to that being used on the other side. It was armor superior to that which had theretofore been furnished to the Russian Government by the English manufacturers, and it met the highest tests of the Russian Government, and yet it was not equal to the armor placed on our vessels. The nickel was not in it. The process by which we have hardened armor, which has amazed the world, was not employed in the manufacture of the armor sent abroad. But the manufacturers had another object in view, I understand, and I will be perfectly frank about it. In order to keep their hands employed they wished to send out of this country that armor which constituted a surplus above that required by the Government of the United States. Then it has been said, and I have no doubt it is true, that it was sent abroad, in addition to that, to show the manufacturers on the other side of the water that we could compete with them, and it probably forced a combine of the armor manufacturers of the world. Now, I have no doubt that as a business matter this entered into it, although I have no positive proof of it; but the result of fixing the price in all nations would seem to warrant that conclusion.

Mr. President, coming to the proposition before us, I am heartily in favor of reducing the cost of these vessels just so far as we can do it without interfering with their fair construction; but I am not prepared to take a step here which will commit the Government to entering into the scheme of buying a great factory, or one or more factories, for the purpose of manufacturing armor. I am not prepared to commit this Government to the plan of going into the mines, or going into the regions where iron ore is located and buying the iron ore, or to going into combination with railroads for its transportation, and to the assembling of the material that is necessary to create steel.

The Secretary of the Navy says that to get this complete we must do one of two things—to do that un-American thing of buying our armor abroad, and not only armor, but all the material that enters into the ships, to go outside of the United States and get foreign workmen to create for us that which we have created because we have spent millions of dollars liberally, or else enter into the scheme of buying a factory.

Mr. ELKINS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a question?

Mr. GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. ELKINS. Do I understand the Senator from Maryland to oppose the next amendment, providing for the purchase of an armor-plate factory by the Government?

Mr. GORMAN. Of course I oppose the proposition that the Government shall enter into these great schemes to enlarge its scope.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Does the Senator think the statement made by the Secretary of the Navy, which has been so highly commended on this floor, is correct when he says:

> Only net earnings have been considered, and the results show that the company's investments—

Speaking of the Bethlehem Company, I believe—> in plant to make armor and gun steel for the Government have been returned with 22 per cent thereon.

It has been only a few years since this enterprise began. Yet the plant has been built, and from the few contracts which the company have had with the Government this statement is that they have absolutely been paid back the whole of the millions of dollars which were paid for the plant and have 22 per cent profit besides. That has been the result of one or two contracts with the Government. Does the Senator believe that statement is true, and if so, does not the Senator believe that the prices paid are entirely too high, and that there ought to be a reduction in the price of armor or that some other change should be made?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Arkansas is mixing up quite a number of questions in one. I have no doubt that profit, and great profit, has been made by the Bethlehem Company, who have manufactured the armor. Whether the Secretary of the Navy has had sufficient data to enable him to come to a conclusion fairly, I do not know. The manufacturers deny his statement, and insist that it is incorrect. I do believe that the manufacturers can reduce the price, and properly reduce the prices, and that we ought to reduce the price for the armor; but I say to the Senator from Arkansas that if he and the Senate desire to enter upon a scheme of creating and owning for ourselves, to be run by naval officers of this Government, a great plant to manufacture the armor, it will cost us four times as much as we have paid the Bethlehem people.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Maryland permit me?

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I am in no sense in favor of that sort of a scheme so far as I understand it, but it does seem to me that the statement made here by the Secretary of the Navy, which has been highly commended by Senators upon the floor, shows that the Government has been paying a monstrous price for the armor, and that it ought to be stopped. In reply to the statement made by the Senator just now, let me call his attention to the language of the Secretary. He says:

> If in any respect I have been misled by these figures, the error into which I may have fallen could have been prevented by the Bethlehem Company. It was informed that I was considering them, and when asked for certain additional figures it furnished them, but in response to my invitation to make further explanations it declined. It preferred to stand upon the inferences naturally to be drawn from these figures rather than to make further disclosures.

When the Secretary was making this investigation and was trying to get the company to explain if these deductions of his were not correct, they shut up like a clam and had nothing to say.

Mr. GORMAN. I have never had much faith in deathbed repentances. For four years has this distinguished officer—and I do not desire to say an unkind word of him—been in control of the Department, with a corps of efficient men around him who were educated by the Government, who are trained to look into all the details of the cost of material and to make plans for fashioning it into vessels, and until the Senate of the United States called the attention of the Department to the cost of this work, no suggestion of a reduction was ever made. No Secretary, from Mr. Whitney down to the day of this investigation, begun through the efforts of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], ever suggested that it was an excessive price which we have paid.

On the contrary, Mr. Whitney and Mr. Tracy, and Mr. Herbert himself have all held that when the Bethlehem people were induced to put three or four million dollars into an enterprise as to which no man could tell whether it would be a success or a failure, they undertook for this Government, at a time when we could not do it ourselves, a risk which entitled them to a fair compensation. When they entered into that contract, it was with the understanding, so far as it could be made—and this is within my knowledge, coming to me as a member of the Committee on Appropriations from the then Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Whitney—that the contract to that one company for their risk should be at prices which would exceed the amount then appropriated by law. Afterwards, during Mr. Tracy's administration, when they failed to furnish the armor as rapidly as the Government required it, another contract was made with Mr. Carnegie. After the process had become perfect, after the skill had been acquired for manufacturing, then they came in at the same price at which the Bethlehem Company undertook this great risk in 1886.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator excuse me for one more interruption? I do not like to interfere with him, but I am very much interested in this matter. After the Government of the United States has made a contract with the Bethlehem Company by which they have built a steel plant costing, as they say, more than $4,000,000 (which can be built, according to the estimates of foreign governments, for a million and a half dollars now), and after the whole $4,000,000 has been paid back to them, and 22 per cent in addition has been paid to them, I ask the Senator if, in his opinion, it is fair that we shall make other contracts with that company by which, according to the Secretary's estimate, we will pay more than 50 per cent profit on what they are to do, and by reasonable deduction from what he states in this report we will pay more than 100 per cent? I ask him if, after we have paid them for the plant, and have paid them for all the risk, and have paid them 22 per cent on the investment, there is any justification now to pay 50 per cent or 100 per cent on the work they are to do for the Government?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Arkansas and I do not understand each other evidently. I am in favor of fixing a fair price for armor, and I am in favor of a reduction; but I am unalterably opposed, while we attempt such reforms and such economies, that, under the guise of saving money to the Government, the country and I shall be committed to a scheme that will cost the Government not only 22 per cent, but 200 per cent more before we get through with it. It is the habit of reformers to bring forth a striking proposition, and under that cover to inject a scheme which is monstrous in itself.

Mr. CHANDLER. May I ask the Senator, then, what he would do if, after a fair price was fixed for the armor, these two combined manufacturers refused to make the armor for that price?

Mr. GORMAN. I would do precisely what I tried to get the Senate to do one year ago and two years ago. I said then that I thought it was wise, in view of all interests, to limit the number of ships that we were to build, and to hold the Secretary of the Navy responsible for securing armor and ships at a fair cost; and if he failed to get it, that he should report the facts to Congress and show that there was a combination in the land strong enough to defy the Government. I would suspend the building of the Navy rather than to have such extortions practiced.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I understand the Senator to say that if the Secretary could not get the armor for battle ships at a reasonable price, he would stop the building of the Navy rather than establish a Government plant?

Mr. GORMAN. I do. It would not last one year if we dealt with those people fairly. We had the question presented at the last session of Congress from another Department of the Government—the War Department, where we are about to enter upon the expenditure of $100,000,000 for fortifications. They came, as the Navy Department had been coming, and said, "Do not place any limitation whatever upon the cost of the great tubes for the 8, 10, and 12 inch guns," for which they were paying 27½ cents a pound. The Committee on Appropriations not being able to get any data from the War Department, as they have never been able until this recent report from the Navy Department, said, "That is too great a price; we will limit it to a more reasonable price;" and we made it, I think, 24 cents a pound—saving eighty or ninety dollars a ton. There was not a manufacturer in the United States who manufactured that class of material who did not agree that it was a fair price, and every contract was taken, notwithstanding the Ordnance Bureau and the War Department from its head down said that we were destroying that great work.

So I would do in this case. I would limit the price within a reasonable figure—to $400 a ton of 2,240 pounds. That is a great reduction; but I do not want to couple with it a scheme which will compel us later on to enter into the establishment of a great work for the manufacture of armor.

If my friend from Arkansas had had as much experience as I have had with navy and army officers, he would know that there is an immense amount of human nature in these gentlemen. They have struggled for the last fifteen years to control every branch of this industry. They have insisted from the beginning that private enterprise and private skill, the skill of the American workmen and the capital of the men who have invested their millions in this manufactory, shall be eliminated and that the Treasury of the United States shall be used to build up not only this class of factories, but all that are required for fashioning the material.

Mr. BACON. I was called from the Chamber momentarily, and I am not sure that I understand the Senator's position. Do I understand the Senator to object to the limitation that is expressed in the pending bill as to the price, or simply to the further provision which looks to the establishment of a plant if that price can not be secured? To which does he object; or is it to both?

Mr. GORMAN. I am not antagonizing the proposition to limit the cost to $400 for a ton of 2,240 pounds, as recommended, and I believe the Committee on Naval Affairs, of which the Senator is a member, recommended that that particular provision should be made; at least we so understood it in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland in regard to what was said in answer to the Senator from New Hampshire just now, as to what the Government should do if this firm or these two firms should be defiant and unreasonable and refuse to enter into any contract with the Government at all at the price fixed. I should like to ask why it would not be an occasion to the United States to take off the prohibition that now prevents competition from being thrown open to the world, and why should we not be able in that way to control an unreasonable home production by home combination?

Mr. CHANDLER. Let me say to the Senator from Delaware that the Secretary reports that, in his belief, the foreign armor manufacturers and the American manufacturers are all in the combination, and therefore we can not possibly have competition. Now, I ask the Senator from Delaware what would he do in that case?

Mr. GRAY. That would break the combination pretty soon.

Mr. CHANDLER. What would you do in the meantime? Would you go without battle ships?

Mr. GRAY. It is an impossible case that the Senator is speaking of.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the Senator from Maryland goes on, I think one point ought to be stated, if the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] will give me his attention. While he was absent from the Senate Chamber, it was stated by two Senators that they understood this proposition as to $400 a ton now upon the bill to have been moved and proposed by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs. I ask the Senator to state how that is.

Mr. HALE. The House fixed the limit of the money upon a four-hundred-dollar basis. The direct statement, in terms, of a four-hundred-dollar limit was moved in the Committee on Appropriations; not by the Naval Committee. Although the conclusion of a majority of the Naval Committee reached that result, the amendment was put on in the Committee on Appropriations. The amendment in terms as to $400 a ton was not by the Naval Committee, but by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GORMAN. I am glad to have the statement of the Senator from Maine. I supposed that the Naval Committee had agreed that $400 a ton of 2,240 pounds, having been recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, was the amount that ought to be inserted in the bill.

Mr. BACON. No.

Mr. GORMAN. But the Senator from Georgia says no.

Mr. BACON. Perhaps I misunderstood the Senator from Maryland. In the confusion it is possible I did not hear him distinctly and correctly when I said no. I understood the Senator to speak of the amount of $400 a ton as having been agreed upon by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs as a proper amount. Was I correct?

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; that is the statement I made.

Mr. BACON. The negative which I interposed was simply to that statement. The report of the Senate committee was that it ought to be between $300 and $400; in other words, $300 was the minimum and $400 was the maximum. Four hundred dollars a ton was never presented by the Senate committee to the Senate as the proper figure. The Senator from New Hampshire earnestly contended for $300. There were other members of the committee who thought it should be higher. The report of the Secretary of the Navy was about $400; and therefore, in order that the Appropriations Committee might have the full benefit of all the information we had, we gave them that as the latitude.

Mr. GORMAN. The bill as it came from the House attempted to make provision for the purchase of armor, fixing the total amount. Of course the number of tons that were authorized to be purchased would simply make it $400 a ton. The Secretary of the Navy recommended $400 a ton. As I now understand it, the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate have fixed it between $300 and $400 a ton, not coming to any definite conclusion as to what the exact amount should be. That is, I understand now, the attitude of the committee.

Mr. BACON. The exact situation of the committee was simply this, that rather than make a divided report, there being a difference of opinion among the members of the Senate committee, there was a general report made, fixing the two limits, rather than have each particular figure, representing the opinion of each of the different members, presented separately to the Senate.

Mr. GORMAN. The Committee on Naval Affairs, however, did agree with the Secretary of the Navy that to make effective this reduction in the price of armor, whether it be to $300 a ton, or $400 a ton, as recommended by the Secretary of the Navy, we must make provision to construct a great foundry for the purpose of taking the raw material as it comes from the mine and fashioning it into these plates.

I submit to the Senators who have so reported and who advocate that proposition that no government on the face of the earth has ever undertaken any such enterprise. The English Government has a splendid system of managing business affairs, and yet with its immense navy it has never entertained the idea of doing that. Take the Czar of Russia, or the Emperor of Germany, or the President of the French Republic, not one of those great magnates has ever thought it was wise for his Government to enter upon such an enterprise. There is not a scheme carried on by the Government of the United States in the manufacture of anything that does not cost twice as much as it would have cost if the manufacture were in the hands of private parties.

Mr. ELKINS. I wish to ask the Senator a question, if he will allow me.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly.

Mr. ELKINS. I can not hear him very well.

Mr. GORMAN. I am very sorry. I am talking as loud as I can.

Mr. ELKINS. I want to know if the Senator favors $400 or whether he favors less or more?

Mr. GORMAN. I favor $400 a ton.

Mr. ELKINS. That is agreeing with the committee, as I understand?

Mr. GORMAN. I do, as a maximum, as a matter of course.

Mr. ELKINS. The Senator favors what is in the bill?

Mr. GORMAN. I do, so far as the price per ton of 2,240 pounds is concerned.

Mr. BACON. If I do not interrupt the Senator, I would be glad to ask him a question. I understand the Senator favors that possibly after having looked into it and after having come to the conclusion that that is a proper maximum limit.

Mr. GORMAN. No, I can not say that.

Mr. BACON. What does the Senator think is the proper limit?

Mr. GORMAN. No one Senator and no one committee can look into everything here, and I am content under the conditions of the report, taken in connection with the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, who have examined it thoroughly or very largely, and the report of the Secretary of the Navy, to accept their conclusions and to fix $400 per ton as the maximum.

Mr. BACON. The question I wish to ask the Senator succeeding that is whether he apprehends that these two companies will refuse to make the armor at that figure? I will state the pertinency of my question. If there is no probability that they will refuse a contract at that figure, then this provision in the bill will never go into effect, because if they make it at that figure there will be no effort on the part of the Government to build a plant. It is only intended as a safeguard. We say this is the maximum; the Senator from Maryland is prepared to accept it as a maximum. Now, if in the face of the fact that Congress fixes that as a maximum and the two armor plants refuse to go on with the contract, I should like to know, from the very superior experience of the Senator from Maryland to that of mine, what would be the proper course for the Government to pursue in such a contingency?

Mr. GORMAN. I would do precisely as we have done in the past. I would wait until Congress could take up the question and act upon it. One year ago I stood in the Senate here begging the Senate, in the interest of the Treasury, not to make enormous appropriations for the Navy; not to order four battle ships, as the provision came from the House, but to cut it down to two, and, indeed, I should like to have had it one. But the Congress of the United States saw proper to order four great battle ships, with no armor for them, with no provisions for them, and you have them now on the stocks. I predicted that result would come. Three of those great battle ships, with the hull and keel ready and all the work completed that can be done except the armor, and there is no armor to be put on them because a provision was placed in the bill, at the suggestion of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that no contract should be made beyond a certain amount, and no contract was made. So you have three ships prepared almost for their armor, waiting for it. I should fix this amount and then wait, and if this combine is strong enough to defy the Government and not give it armor at a proper figure, and will not come to Congress and show the proper amount to be paid, we can afford to wait. There is no urgent necessity for it. You have enough ships now on the ocean to meet all present emergencies. But, Mr. President, there will be no waiting.

What I object to is the balance of the scheme, by which you commit yourself to it now by an appropriation and put it in the hands of the Department to establish this plant. The scheme will grow and it will come. I know after the Senator from Georgia has come in contact with these Departments long enough he will believe as I do.

Mr. BACON. I desire to state to the Senator from Maryland that the particular part of the bill which he is now antagonizing does not come from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GORMAN. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to say that it did.

Mr. BACON. No, sir, it does not, as I understand it. It is true it was drawn by the Senator from New Hampshire, but it was drawn at the request of the Appropriations Committee or some member of it, and it is a recommendation of the Appropriations Committee, and not a recommendation of the Naval Committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Georgia is mistaken partly. The Committee on Naval Affairs came to the conclusion stated in their report, that if the contracts for armor could not be made within such limit as should be fixed by Congress, there should be a Government armor-plate factory.

Mr. BACON. That is true; but that is not a part of the report of the committee submitting that particular amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. The amendment in that form is not, but it was drawn by me at the request of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], as embodying, as well as could be done, the idea of the Committee on Naval Affairs in case these two concerns should refuse to make the contract. I think if the Senator from Maryland, who seems to understand this subject so well and to think that there is no danger that these concerns will not furnish the armor for these three battle ships, would assure us that he knows they will furnish it for $400, we might get along without this proposition that excites his anger so much.

Mr. GORMAN. I do not know what the Senator from New Hampshire means by his last remark about my anger.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am very prompt to withdraw the word. I meant the Senator's intense opposition to a Government armor-plate factory, which is only proposed as an alternative in case these two companies will not make armor for $400 a ton. Now, the committee say that authority ought to be put in the act to go on and make the armor, because, as we know that the armor makers abroad and the armor makers at home are in a combination, then our three ships, the hulls of which are contracted for, must stand till the end of time without being completed unless the Government establishes a plant of its own, and nothing is further from the wish of the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Appropriations than to have a Government armor-plate factory. But I ask the Senator in all sincerity and with perfect respect, What in the world are we to do if these combined manufacturers will not take the fair price that we fix?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. With the permission of the Senator from Maryland, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire a question. Does the Senator from New Hampshire believe that the armor manufactured by the Bethlehem Company for the Russian Government at $240 a ton was manufactured at a profit?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not think it was manufactured at a profit. I do think that they got their money back.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That they lost no money?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think they lost no money.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Then it would seem that if the Government of the United States would persistently refuse to pay anything more than a fair price, the companies will manufacture rather than allow their plants stand idle and rust, and I see no necessity for resorting to this method of having a Government plant to compel them to proceed with what would be a profitable business to them.

Mr. GORMAN. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Maryland, but the difficulty is, the Senator from Arkansas will see, that we have already authorized three great battle ships. The contracts were made six months ago for the hulls of the Wisconsin, the Alabama, and the Illinois. Now, we must get that armor in some way, and if we can not get it from these manufacturers at a fair price, we must establish our own armor-plate factory. The Senator from Maryland will excuse me.

Mr. GORMAN. It is all right. I am very glad we have reached a point where nobody will father this amendment. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I repudiate the idea that it ever originated with the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will remember that it was inserted by a vote of the Committee on Appropriations. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. GORMAN. Yes; but I ask the Senator if the understanding was not that this provision for an armor factory came to the committee after consideration by the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. GORMAN. Undoubtedly it did.

Mr. HALE. The report was read, or portions of it, in which, as has been stated by the Senator from New Hampshire, the conclusion of the committee was that the only way to prevent these companies from combining and refusing to furnish armor at a reasonable price was to authorize the construction of a Government plant; not that anybody expected it would be done, but if it was not done we would be at the mercy of these contractors; and on that statement, and on extracts of the report being read, the Appropriations Committee voted in this amendment for the purpose of enforcing the limitation.

Mr. GORMAN. But I ask the Senator from Maine whether he, as a member of the committee, would have entertained that proposition if it had not been understood that it had been considered by another committee and came to us after investigation?

Mr. HALE. Has anybody denied that?

Mr. GORMAN. I understand the Senator from Georgia denies it.

Mr. BACON. No; the Senator from Maryland misunderstands me, Mr. President.

Mr. GORMAN. I did not intend to misrepresent the Senator, of course.

Mr. BACON. I was not sufficiently explicit in my first statement. The Senator from New Hampshire corrected me, and I assented to the correctness of it as stated by him. While the committee had given its general assent to the proposition, this particular amendment had not been framed in the Committee on Naval Affairs, but was framed by a member of the committee subsequently thereto, at the request of a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly, to carry out the idea; but that did not involve the principle in the least. It was the principle on the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GORMAN. That is all I have contended for. The Appropriations Committee have been charged with enough sins without the charge of originating this provision.

Mr. HALE. It was voted in by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. GORMAN. As a matter of course, having emanated from another honorable committee of this body who had investigated the question. But Senators say it can go in this bill and will do no harm. I appeal to all Senators in this body who have had experience here and have watched the course of events, to know whether there is a single case where you have provided for the expenditure of a large amount of money that would increase the power of one of the Departments that it has not been availed of and the increase made. I appeal to every Senator who has been upon the Committees on Naval Affairs and Appropriations whether there has not been a constant struggle both by the Army and the Navy, by the Ordnance Bureaus of both of those Departments, to keep within themselves and to the exclusion of all private enterprises all the work in the making of the armament for this country, both that afloat and that on land.

But, Mr. President, more than that, I object to the whole scheme as it comes here from the House of Representatives, and as amended, except as to the limitation of the amount to be paid for this work. We have, as I said in the beginning, fixed a rule which has worked well. No fraud has been charged to amount to anything. The results have been almost perfection. That rule was to bring private enterprise and the Government officers into competition, to divide the work, to contract specifically with the men who furnish the material for the ships and the men who construct the ships. But what is the case in this bill? I ask Senators to look at it. I call the attention of my friend from Georgia to page 50 of the bill, the last proviso on that page, beginning after line 20:

> That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to contract with either or all of the builders of the hulls and machinery of those vessels, or with any one or more bidders, for the furnishing of the entire amount of said armor, if he shall deem it for the best interest of the Government.

There is a provision which has crept into the bill, where a limitation is sought to be made, which would give greater discretion than Congress ever contemplated giving before in permitting a contract to be made for the whole work, for the armor as well as for the construction of machinery, and without limitation as to cost.

So it seems to me the wise thing in the expiring hours of Congress to do is to adhere to the system which we inaugurated, as I said, in 1884 or 1885, for which I want to give to the Senator from New Hampshire—who has been very much abused by my political associates for his work in the Navy Department—great credit for aiding at that time in putting the Navy Department in such a position as that we could support it on both sides of the Chamber, and from which such grand results have come to the country.

I beg the Senate, now that the control of the Government is about passing from one political party to another, not to change the conditions; not to open a door for abuses; not to open a door which will give greater power to officers who may favor this or that contractor. Let us keep it, so far as the law can keep it, precisely as we have had it under three different administrations against whom no charge of corruption or great mismanagement has been made.

We have had wonderful efficiency in the management of that Department nearly all the time, and I am sorry that in the closing hours of the administration of Mr. Herbert he should have permitted himself to go beyond the one recommendation of limiting the cost of the material for armor. I regret that he has encouraged and made it possible for others who have different views and possibly different motives to open the door and bring the Navy Department back to where it was prior to 1886.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator regret that Secretary Herbert has made an investigation which shows that the Government can get this armor plate, the very best of it, for nearly $200 a ton less than has been paid for it heretofore? Is that a subject of regret to the Senator?

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator certainly has not been listening to me, if he makes that statement.

Mr. HALE. What is it the Senator regrets? That is the sum and substance of the investigation made by the Secretary and in the report of the Naval Committee and the result of the bill in the House and in the Committee on Appropriations here. The outcome of it all is that the Government is going to get this armor for nearly $200 a ton cheaper than ever before. Is that a thing to be regretted? It is undoubtedly a change——

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I know the Senator has charge of many matters, and possibly he has been out of the Chamber a part of the time I have been speaking, or else I have not made myself understood.

Mr. HALE. I have listened to the Senator very attentively.

Mr. GORMAN. I have not regretted that the Secretary has made the recommendation for a decreased cost of armor. I only regret that, with his experience as the head of the Navy Department, he did not inaugurate a movement of that sort long ago, which probably he would have done had his attention been called to it. If he had done so without waiting until the suggestion was made by the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Government would have been very much better off; but when the Secretary goes further than that and makes a recommendation which opens the door to the establishment of a great Government factory for the purpose of manufacturing materials, I think he has gone beyond the limit. I think, at all events, this was unwise, and that Congress ought to antagonize that proposition.

Mr. HALE. That is a question for Congress to decide.

Mr. GORMAN. Very good. That is what we are trying to do.

Mr. HALE. That was one of the processes. The Secretary, having been dealing with these companies and being at their mercy, having no competition, there being a complete combination of the two companies, who could dictate prices, the Secretary, in his final conclusion, arrived at the result that the only way to enforce this reduction and compel these companies to make a reasonable contract at reduced rates was, if they said, "No; we will do nothing," to authorize him to establish a plant. I do not conceive in the realm of conjecture or proper calculation anything else that could be held over these companies which would compel them to a fair price. I do not expect it will be done. I have no doubt they will bow to the decision of Congress, but they will bow a hundred times more willingly and more immediately if the Secretary of the Navy is enabled to say to them, "Gentlemen, if you do not offer the armor for a fair price, Congress has put in my hands the power to establish a Government armor-plate factory, and rather than submit to your exactions the Government will establish an armor-plate factory." I can conceive of nothing else which will compel a fair price and a reasonable rate for armor.

Mr. GORMAN. I differ so widely with the distinguished Senator from Maine that he and I can not argue that question. I do not believe that it is necessary for this great Government of the United States to go with a club in its hand to these manufacturers and say, "If you do not do so and so, we will destroy you." The Congress of the United States ought, as a matter of fairness and justice, to fix the limit to which it will go; and if there is not enough business capacity or patriotism amongst all the manufacturers of the United States to furnish this armor at that fair price, then let the Government use its power and deal with the matter. I, in my personal transactions, would not go to an individual and deal with him in the way proposed here if I had the power to do so, and I would not have my Government do it.

There is no necessity, Mr. President, for such an extraordinary method. We have, as I stated a moment ago, as to another Department of the Government, the War Department, taken the same position. When every officer of that Department said to his chief, and said to us, "You can not reduce the price on the tubes for guns for our fortifications from $100 to $80 a ton," the Committee on Appropriations said, "That is a fair reduction;" and we made it. The result was that every pound of steel authorized to be made at the reduced price was made, because it was a fair reduction, and we propose at this session to make a still greater reduction, but there is no threat accompanying it.

Mr. HALE. I agree in many respects with the Senator, and I know I am not interrupting him. The Senator and I have had a great many experiences of this colloquial debate, and neither declines to yield to the other.

Mr. GORMAN. Certainly not.

Mr. HALE. It is the best kind of debate.

Mr. GORMAN. It is always for information, so far as I am concerned, and I always yield to the Senator with great pleasure.

Mr. HALE. I am aware of that.

I agree with the Senator in what is his fundamental view, that all of this work can be better supplied by contractors than it can be done by the Government. It can be done cheaper; it can be done more expeditiously; it can be done better. While that is true, human nature is always human nature, and human greed is always human greed; and if you get contractors who can do this work better than the Government establishments, more cheaply and more expeditiously, and who have a monopoly and fix their own prices, they will take advantage of the Government, and will prey upon it. The only way to keep them in limitations is to give the Department the authority, if needs be, to make its own product.

In naval ships, which are much better built in private yards, which are better ships and sooner launched, there never has been a statute authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to make private contracts for the building of battle ships that has not always had put into it a provision that if reasonable contracts could not be made by the Secretary with private parties he should build those ships in Government yards. That has always stood in terrorem, if I may use the phrase, over the contractors, and if two or three of them combined and said to the Secretary of the Navy, "We will not build this battle ship for $3,000,000, but will demand $5,000,000," the Secretary would say at once, "We will build it in a navy-yard," and that has always kept any combination from being effected on the building of battle ships.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Assuming that the Senator's conjectures are true—of course they are based on the hypothesis that these people have a combination, and that they are so utterly heartless as to want to make all the money they can out of the Government—let me ask if there would not be this danger in taking the course suggested by the committee? In running over the Secretary's report it seems to me that both of these companies would be willing to dispose of their plants to the Government at cost if they could find the opportunity to do so. The report shows that they have been paid in full for the whole cost of the plant and 22 per cent more. If, by combination, they should refuse the Government contracts, and could thus unload this plant on the Government at an enlarged cost, would not that be the shortest way for the absolute robbery of the Government that could present itself?

Mr. HALE. Oh, no.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Would we not open the way for them to do so by doing that very thing?

Mr. HALE. No; because a Secretary can establish a thoroughly completed and well-equipped plant for the making of armor to-day for one-half of what it cost these companies, and which we have paid them for, and therefore no Secretary—we may give him the authority if we choose—unless they offer these plants at what a new one would now cost, no Secretary would take them. I do not expect that it will ever come about that we shall build a plant. I do not want it. I do not believe in Government work; it is, as I have said, more costly; but you may be put into a position where you may have to invoke this protection for the Government in order to hold contractors to liberal terms, just as we have done with regard to the construction of ships.

Mr. ELKINS. Then you are giving these two armor-plate factories to understand that this does not mean anything?

Mr. HALE. I do not say that.

Mr. ELKINS. That is simply a threat.

Mr. HALE. We are giving them notice, and that means a great deal. It means that unless they make a fair contract the Secretary is given power to take it away from them. That is just what it means.

Mr. ELKINS. Let me ask the Senator this question: Suppose one of these factories wants to unload its plant on the Government, are we not so legislating as to give the individuals or corporations running them an opportunity of unloading their plants on the Government at $1,500,000, and making it obligatory upon the Secretary of the Navy to buy those plants?

Mr. HALE. Not by any means.

Mr. ELKINS. If all the companies engaged in the manufacture of this armor stick together, then, as I understand it, the Secretary of the Navy is obliged to buy the plants.

Mr. HALE. Not by any means. It is placed in the discretion of the Secretary, and if he can get one of these complete plants by buying it, he may do so; but I may say that on the modern basis we can build to-day a good plant for 50 per cent of what these plants cost these companies.

Mr. ELKINS. Let me ask the Senator a question?

Mr. GORMAN. I thought I had the floor and yielded to the Senator from Maine to ask me a question.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has been very good-natured, I am sure.

Mr. ELKINS. I submit that the Senator from Maryland ought to farm out the floor for a little time to somebody who is not a member of the Committee on Appropriations. The members of that committee get up and consume all of the time of the Senate in apparently fighting each other, and yet at the same time it is all understood between them. One gets the floor, and then another takes it and yields it back, but nobody else who wants to say a word is given an opportunity if he is not in the charmed circle. [Laughter.] Now, I want to submit a few remarks on the business features of this proposition, but if this thing goes on I do not know how long I shall have to wait. I have waited for two hours now.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Appropriations is large enough to differ.

Mr. ELKINS. But I have waited two hours while the floor has been occupied by Senators on that committee.

Mr. GORMAN. I believe I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. HILL. As the Senator is so good natured in yielding the floor to other Senators, I will make an appeal to him to allow me to submit a motion.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from New York is going to make a motion, I ask to submit a conference report.

Mr. HILL. I yield for that purpose.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. VEST submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and agree to the same; and the Senate agree to the same.

G. G. VEST,
S. B. ELKINS,
JOHN P. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
E. J. MURPHY,
JOSIAH PATTERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CULLOM. Do I understand that the report retains the three-quarters of a mile limit?

Mr. VEST. Yes; it is just as the bill was passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUBOIS in the chair). The question is on concurring in the report of the conference committee.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 2689) granting a pension to Charlotte Weirer;

A bill (H. R. 4903) for the relief of Hattie A. Beach, child of Erastus D. Beach, late a private in Company H, One hundred and forty-third New York Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 7205) granting a pension to Alphonzo O. Drake; and

A bill (H. R. 7422) granting a pension to Lydia W. Holliday.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7320) to prevent trespassing upon and providing for the protection of national military parks.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 205) to enable the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the United States Army to accept a position under the Government of the Greater Republic of Central America.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3538) to authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to issue writs of certiorari to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in the same cases and manner that it may do in respect of the circuit court of appeals, with an amendment in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 10,000 copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint for 1896, and also to print 3,000 copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the Production of Precious Metals for the year 1895; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. 4310) for the relief of Mathias Pedersen;

A bill (H. R. 8443) to amend section 4878 of the Revised Statutes, relating to burials in national cemeteries;

A bill (H. R. 9976) to punish the impersonation of inspectors of the health and other departments of the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 10122) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia," passed August 3, 1894.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in pursuance with previous notice, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BROWN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD]. I do not see that Senator in his seat, and for the present I shall withhold my vote.

Mr. HILL. I will state to the Senator from Louisiana that the Senator from North Carolina is expected back soon, and he told me to have him paired in favor of an executive session. So the Senator is at liberty to vote.

Mr. BLANCHARD. On that statement I will vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MORRILL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PERKINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH].

Mr. THURSTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], but I am advised that we are agreed on the present proposition, and I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], but with the consent of his colleague [Mr. MCBRIDE], we have transferred that pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]; so that the junior Senator from Oregon and I can vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCBRIDE. Under that arrangement, I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GIBSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER], but in his absence I voted inadvertently. I am advised that he would vote "nay" if present; and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCMILLAN (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], and as he is not present, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—36.

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 459) for the relief of Thomas Rosbrugh;

A bill (H. R. 4550) granting an increase of pension to John X. Griffith; and

A bill (H. R. 4979) to amend sections 141 and 145 and repealing sections 143 and 144 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to Presidential elections.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; to which the signature of the Vice-President was subsequently announced:

A bill (S. 3680) to provide for the removal of the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City from Kansas City, Kans., to Kansas City, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 2689) granting a pension to Charlotte Weirer;

A bill (H. R. 4903) for the relief of Hattie A. Beach, dependent and helpless child of Erastus D. Beach, late a private in Company H, One hundred and forty-third New York Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 6730) granting a pension to Edward C. Spofford;

A bill (H. R. 7205) granting a pension to Alphonzo O. Drake;

A bill (H. R. 9101) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Montgomery Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River," approved March 1, 1893; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 100) granting a life-saving medal to Daniel E. Lynn, of Port Huron, Mich.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HALE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 4178) providing for the use by the United States of devices covered by letters patent. It is a bill the passage of which was recommended by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). Pending the request, the Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

IMPRISONMENT OF AMERICAN CITIZENS IN CUBA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of the 24th ultimo, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State covering copies of the correspondence and reports of the consul-general of the United States at Habana relating to all American citizens now in prison in the Island of Cuba not previously reported on.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 1, 1897.

Mr. HALE. Let the message and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORGAN. There is one paper accompanying the message that I desire to have read.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator feel certain that it ought not to be in confidence?

Mr. HALE. If there is any question about it——

Mr. CHANDLER. It is not sent in in confidence, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. TELLER. It is sent here as a public document.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is sent openly and publicly.

Mr. MORGAN. There is no secrecy about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama requests that an accompanying document be read. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. Lee to Mr. Rockhill.

[Telegram.]

HABANA, February 9, 1897.

Charles Scott, American citizen, arrested Regla this morning; charges not yet known.

Mr. Lee to Mr. Rockhill.

[Telegram.]

HABANA, February 20, 1897.

Charles Scott, a citizen of the United States, arrested Regla; no charge given. Been without communication jail Habana two hundred and sixty-four hours. Can not stand another Ruiz murder and have demanded his release. How many war vessels Key West or within reach, and will they be ordered here at once if necessary to sustain demand? LEE.

Mr. Lee to Mr. Olney.

[Telegram.]

HABANA, February 23, 1897.

Situation simple. Experience at Guanabacoa made it my duty to demand, before too late, that another American who had been incomunicado two hundred and sixty-four hours be released from said incomunicado, and did so in courteous terms. If you support it, and Scott is so released, the trouble will terminate. If you do not, I must depart. All others arrested with Scott have been put in communication. Why should only American in lot not be? He has been incomunicado now three hundred and thirty-eight hours.

LEE.

Mr. Lee to Mr. Olney.

[Telegram.]

HABANA, February 23, 1897.

Demand complied with. Scott is released from incomunicado.

LEE.

Mr. Lee to Mr. Olney.

[Telegram.]

HABANA, February 23, 1897.

Scott released from incomunicado to-day on demand after fourteen days' solitary confinement in cell 5 feet by 11; damp; water on bottom cell. Not allowed anything sleep on or chair; discharges of the body removed once five days. Was charged with having Cuban postage stamps in the house. Scott says went always twelve hours without water; once two days; he was employee American Gas Company.

LEE.

Mr. HALE. Now, Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

Mr. FRYE. Let the message and accompanying papers be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, in the absence of objection.

REPORT OF DIRECTOR OF MINT, ETC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That there be printed and bound in cloth 10,000 copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint for 1896; 5,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint, 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the Senate.

There shall also be printed and bound 3,000 copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the Production of Precious Metals for the year 1896, for the use of the Director of the Mint.

There shall also be printed and bound 5,000 copies of the Coinage Laws of the United States; 2,000 for the Director of the Mint, 2,000 for the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the Senate.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senate to concur in the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

FOREST RESERVATIONS.

Mr. CARTER. I present a resolution of the legislature of the State of Montana, relative to the recently created timber reservations in that State. I ask that it be read for the information of the Senate, and referred to the conference committee having the sundry civil appropriation bill in charge.

The resolution was read and referred, as follows:

[TELEGRAM.]

HELENA, MONT., March 1, 1897.

We, the legislative assembly of the State of Montana, do earnestly protest against the recent order of the President setting aside large timber reservations in this State, knowing that its enforcement would seriously cripple and retard its development. For these and other reasons, we respectfully request that this order be at once revoked.

A. E. SPRIGGS,
President of the Senate.
ALBERT I. LOEB,
Speaker pro tempore of the House.
ROBERT B. SMITH,
Governor.
By T. S. HOGAN,
Secretary of State.

Hon. THOS. H. CARTER or Hon. LEE MANTLE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I can not consent to yield to a request for the passage of bills, and I ask for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine calls for the regular order, which is the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do I understand that the Senator from Maine declines to yield to let me have this little bill passed which has been recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. HALE. I have called for the regular order, which unfortunately excludes the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a bill reported from the Senator's own committee, and a bill to which he gave his own consent.

Mr. HALE. At the proper time I will give my consent to its passage.

Mr. CHANDLER. And it is recommended by the very report on which we are now acting.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10336) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAWLEY. Have all the committee amendments been acted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the amendments of the committee have been acted on except those relating to armor, the Chair is informed.

The pending question is an amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, line 15, after the word "million," it is proposed to strike out the words "two hundred and ten thousand;" in line 17 to amend the committee amendment by striking out the word "a" before "rate" and inserting the words "an average;" and in the same line to strike out the word "four" and insert the word "three;" so as to read "$300 per ton."

Mr. HAWLEY. Those amendments ought to be reserved for a fuller Senate.

Mr. HALE. We had better let the debate go on.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, if anyone wishes to debate. I have nothing to say, but they ought to be voted on when there are more here.

Mr. HALE. There will not be a vote until there is a quorum, of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HILL in the chair). Shall the amendments be reserved?

Mr. HALE. They have been reserved to let the discussion go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland, the Chair understands, is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GORMAN. I had the floor when the Senate postponed the consideration of the bill, but I had about concluded all I desired to say in a general way upon the amendment. I will reserve whatever else I have to say for an amendment that I shall offer later on. I do not care to discuss the general subject further at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. HALE. What is the particular amendment now pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 50, after the word "million," in line 15, it is proposed to strike out the words "two hundred and ten thousand;" and, in line 17, to amend the committee amendment by striking out the word "a," before "rate," and inserting "an average," and striking out the last word, "four," and inserting "three;" so as to read:

That the total cost of the armor, according to the plans and specifications already prepared, for the three battle ships authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, shall not exceed $3,000,000, exclusive of the cost of transportation, ballistic-test plates, and tests, and no contract for armor plate shall be made at an average rate to exceed $300 per ton.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will add to the amendment "of 2,240 pounds," so as to read "$300 per ton of 2,240 pounds."

Mr. QUAY. There is no objection to the latter amendment.

Mr. FRYE. Is that a committee amendment or the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. PLATT. Do I understand that the words "two hundred and ten thousand," in line 15, are to be stricken out as a part of this same amendment? I should suppose that the question would be first on amending the committee's amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Connecticut is right about that. So I will reserve the first amendment, which is intended to reduce the gross amount to be paid to correspond with the reduction of price per ton. I will withdraw that and let the question be on adding the words "an average" and substituting "$300 per ton" for "$400 per ton," and adding after "ton" the words "of twenty-two hundred and forty pounds."

Mr. HALE. I suppose the salient point of the Senator's amendment is the reduction from $400 to $300, and that the reductions in amount are computations which follow from that, so that the test question will be on the reduction of the amount of $400 reported in the bill by the committee to $300, as moved by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. FRYE. Those are, I understand, maximum amounts—$400 and $300?

Mr. HALE. Yes; they are the maximum amounts.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to know exactly what the Senator from New Hampshire intends by inserting the word "average" in the clause "and no contract for armor plate shall be made at an average rate to exceed $300 per ton."

Mr. CHANDLER. That is very simple. All the armor plates are special plates. Every single plate in a ship is of a special shape. Nearly all are different from all others. There are some duplicates. Of course, being of different sizes and different weights and different shapes, one kind of plate costs more than another kind of plate. The turret plate costs more than the side armor of a ship. The calculations that have always been made as to cost of armor have been the average price per ton for all the armor of the ship. The intention is that in this case the average cost of the armor for the whole ship shall not exceed, if my amendment prevails, $300 a ton; and if the committee's amendment prevails, $400 a ton. The average cost of the armor for the Kearsarge and Kentucky, the pending contracts, is $553, I think. I will give the exact figures:

Under contracts made by Secretary Herbert for the armor for the Kearsarge and the Kentucky the Bethlehem Company is to supply 2,631 tons at a gross cost of $1,462,191.80, the prices varying from $515.40 up to $628.40 a ton, the average being about $551.15.

Carnegie & Co. are to furnish 3,007 tons at a total cost of $1,660,518.20, the prices varying from $515.40 to $575.80 a ton, the average being about $552.22.

So the committee's amendment, which accepts the price of armor recommended by Secretary Herbert—$400—saves $150 nominally on a ton. In fact it saves more, because the Secretary recommends that the contractors hereafter shall furnish the nickel, which would be about $30 a ton. So the committee's amendment saves about $180 a ton. My amendment would save about $280 a ton over the contracts for the Kentucky and the Kearsarge. The total saving on the Secretary's figures will be over $500,000 on each battle ship. If the Bethlehem Company got their money back when they made a contract with Russia at $240 a ton, at $300 a ton, the figures proposed by me, they would make a profit of $60 a ton.

Mr. PLATT. The Kearsarge was the last battle ship constructed?

Mr. CHANDLER. The Kearsarge and Kentucky are now under construction. The three new battle ships for which we are to provide the armor are the Wisconsin, the Illinois, and the Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Three or four different amendments are pending. Which will the Senate have put first?

Mr. HALE. I suppose technically what is the significant amendment is the proposed reduction from $400 to $300 per ton.

Mr. QUAY. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that a part of the amendment, to wit, that which fixes the weight per ton at 2,240 pounds, may go in by unanimous consent.

Mr. HALE. That has been adopted already, I understand.

Mr. QUAY. I think not.

Mr. HALE. I understood that it had been agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand there is no objection to having the word "a" stricken out and the words "an average" put in; so as to read "at an average rate of," and adding after "ton" the words "of twenty-two hundred and forty pounds."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment of the committee? The Chair hears none, and it will be regarded as adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY. Upon that point I want to know if that is the usual basis?

Mr. HALE. All the computations have been made on that basis.

Mr. HAWLEY. The previous contracts were at that rate?

Mr. HALE. All the computations are based on it.

Mr. HAWLEY. The previous contracts were made at 2,240 pounds to the ton?

Mr. CHANDLER. They have been. That is no change. If those amendments to the amendment can be adopted, then the only question will be whether $300 a ton shall be substituted for $400 a ton.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, those amendments will be made. Now, the question is whether "$300" shall be substituted for "$400" as the price per ton of 2,240 pounds.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to know what the Senator proposes in the event that they will not furnish the armor at $300 per ton?

Mr. CHANDLER. Was not the Senator present this afternoon during the discussion?

Mr. FRYE. I was not present when the Senator from New Hampshire discussed the question.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator will kindly look at the bill, on page 51——

Mr. FRYE. A Government plant?

Mr. CHANDLER. He will see there a provision that—

In case the Secretary of the Navy shall find it impossible to make contracts for said armor within the limits as to price above fixed, he shall be, and hereby is, authorized to lease, purchase, or establish a Government armor factory.

Mr. FRYE. Would the Senator vote for that?

Mr. CHANDLER. Unquestionably. The Senator from Maine will bear in mind that we have the hulls of the three ships contracted for. We must have this armor. We must have it in this country. Suppose, at the price we fix, the two companies that are in combination—the only two companies that have a plant to make the armor—refuse to accept the price, what should we do if we do not establish a Government armor plant?

Mr. FRYE. I do not think I would vote for a Government plant under any circumstances.

Mr. HAWLEY. Nor I.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator what he would do to get armor for those three ships? Would he let these people take the Government by the throat and either say, "You shall not have armor or you shall pay our price for it"?

Mr. FRYE. I would allow the Secretary of the Navy to make a contract at a reasonable price, and I would be sure when I named the price that it was entirely reasonable under all the circumstances.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is a sensible answer, if the Senator will allow me to say it. The sum of $400 the Secretary thinks is reasonable; the sum of $400 the Committee on Appropriations think is reasonable; and the sum of $300 several members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, possibly a majority of the Committee on Naval Affairs, think is reasonable; and we have before us the Carnegie contract with the Russian Government for similar armor at $240 a ton.

Mr. FRYE. I do not think that is any guide at all.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not the slightest.

Mr. FRYE. There are a great many reasons for making a contract with Russia which would not apply at all when making a contract in the United States. I can understand very well why they might be willing to sell to Russia for a great deal less than cost, with no profit at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not think any question should be put to the Senate at present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What suggestion does the Senator from Connecticut make?

Mr. HAWLEY. If anyone wishes to make a speech, I will interpose no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A speech from anyone is now in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a bill on my desk, and I judge that forty different Senators have to-day received telegrams concerning it. It concerns about 2,000,000 men, members of fraternal beneficiary societies in this country. It has passed the House and has been reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia favorably. I appeal to the Senator from Maine, while we are waiting for Senators to come in, to permit me to call up the bill and have it passed.

Mr. HAWLEY. What is the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a bill regulating beneficiary fraternal associations in the District of Columbia. It has passed the House, and has been favorably reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAWLEY. I never heard of it before.

Mr. GALLINGER. Two million men are interested in it and urge its passage.

Mr. HAWLEY. How about the other 68,000,000?

Mr. HALE. I do not think enough Senators are present to pass bills, and I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I raise the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Allen,	Clark,	Jones, Ark.	Platt,
Allison,	Cullom,	Kenney,	Quay,
Baker,	Daniel,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Bate,	Davis,	Mills,	Sewell,
Berry,	Dubois,	Mitchell, Wis.	Squire,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Burrows,	Frye,	Murphy,	Teller,
Butler,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Thurston,
Cannon,	Gorman,	Palmer,	Tillman.
Carter,	Hale,	Peffer,	Vest.
Chandler,	Hawley,	Perkins,
Chilton,	Hill,	Pettigrew,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators are present. A quorum is present. The question arises upon the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to strike out "$400" and insert "$300" in the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, this is not a new matter by any means. The matter of making armor and building steel ships, building guns, the proper division of that labor between private persons and the Government, was a subject of discussion some fifteen years ago, when the country seemed about to start upon a process of regeneration as to ships, guns, and armor. A policy was agreed upon then which has been pursued almost absolutely ever since that time. It is now proposed to reverse it; to change it very materially. It is proposed to fix a price for armor at which I venture no firm in the world will agree to make it.

If it is the intention of the gentleman who proposes it to compel the construction of a Government establishment, a great manufacturing plant to be kicked about by outrageous fortune and give rise to great scandals, then he is right in insisting upon fixing the price at $300 per ton. Governments generally abandoned that idea long ago. Great Britain made her experiments. At one time she made a partnership with a great concern for building ships and armor, etc. After a time she was so weary of it that she gave $320,000 to the firm to get out of her obligations to it.

In 1884 a select committee of the Senate was appointed. I shall have to give something of personal history, but I claim no credit in that matter, because after a thorough investigation we simply collected, boiled down, and gave the syllabus of the opinions of the great manufacturers of both Great Britain and America and of the wisest men of the Army and of the Navy. We deserve the credit of collecting the evidence and giving the syllabus.

July 3, 1884, the Senate appointed a select committee under the following resolution. I will summarize it. I will not read it all.

A select committee to inquire as to the capacity of steel-producing works in the United States to make steel of suitable quality and sufficient in quantity to furnish metal for guns of higher power, and the metal plates and other material for the construction of vessels of war, and for the armor or sheathing for such vessels. The committee shall also inquire as to the character and sufficiency of machinery and machine tools in the navy-yards, and also in private foundries and machine shops in the United States, for the construction of engines suitable for vessels of war, and for manufacturing guns for the proper armament of such vessels and of the seacoast defenses, and for the purpose of constructing iron and steel ships of war. Said committee shall also inquire into the best locations in the United States for manufacturing guns, engines, and armor for vessels, and for building iron and steel ships of war, and the best method of manufacturing and building the same, whether by the Government or by contract with private parties; said committee shall have power to sit, and so forth. The expenses, and so forth.

Under that resolution, with myself as chairman, Senator Miller, of California—whose place Mr. SEWELL soon took—Senators Miller, SEWELL, ALDRICH, MORGAN, and M. C. Butler were appointed. Their investigation was conducted the next winter and for a year, for their time being taken up by other engagements, it required nearly a year to make all the visits that they desired to make. That committee, in most cases by a full committee, in others by a subcommittee, visited the following companies, works, and yards:

The Morgan Iron Works, New York City; the Continental Iron Works, Greenpoint (Brooklyn), N. Y.; the West Point Foundry Association, Cold Spring, N. Y.; the Midvale Steel Company and the shipyards of Cramp & Sons, Philadelphia; the Cambria Iron Company, Johnstown, Pa.; the Bethlehem Iron Company, Bethlehem, Pa.; the Pennsylvania Steel Company, Steelton, Pa.; the shipyard of John Roach & Son, Chester, Pa. At Pittsburg: The Edgar Thomson Steel Works, the Pittsburg Bessemer Steel Works, the Homestead Steel Works; Park, Bro. & Co., Limited; the Pittsburg Steel Casting Company; Jones & Laughlin; Miller, Metcalf & Parkin, and the Keystone Bridge Company. The South Boston Iron Works, Boston, Mass.; the Tredegar Iron Works, Richmond, Va.; the navy-yards at Norfolk, Washington, and New York; the army ordnance proving grounds at Sandy Hook, N. J.; the naval ordnance proving grounds at Annapolis, and the torpedo station at Newport, R. I.; also witnessing there the maneuvers of the North Atlantic Squadron in August, 1884.

Two members of the committee, in England during the summer, took opportunity to visit the Woolwich Arsenal, the Chatham Dockyard, the proving grounds at Shoeburyness, and the works of Sir William G. Armstrong & Co. and R. & W. Hawthorn, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, Charles Cammell & Co. and Sir John Brown & Co., at Sheffield, and Sir Joseph Whitworth & Co., at Manchester.

Through Mr. Phelps, the minister of the United States, official permission was kindly and promptly granted to visit the Government works at Woolwich, Chatham, and Shoeburyness, and the private establishments were opened most frankly and cordially.

Mr. MORGAN of the committee visited the Pacific Coast and inspected the Mare Island Navy-Yard, the Union Iron Works, and the Pacific Rolling Mill Company's shops, and so forth. And an accomplished officer of the Navy accompanied the committee as a secretary, you might say, nominally, during this time.

Mr. HALE. What year was that?

Mr. HAWLEY. In 1884 and 1885. After calling a very large number of witnesses from these different firms and after asking their advice, the committee collected from them this volume of information. We came to this conclusion, to which I wish particularly that those Senators who may not have listened to me heretofore will listen. We inquired as to the facilities for doing all this work. Many men said we could not do it, that we had not facilities for it, and so forth. Our conclusions were as follows:

1. The United States is metallurgically independent for all purposes of warfare.

2. The manufacture of iron and steel for peaceful purposes has kept pace with the foremost science and skill of the world. For steel making the casting capacity is ample, but the heavy forging and finishing of guns and armor will require new and costly plants.

3. The machinery and machine tools of the navy-yards are sufficient for the building of engines, but much of it is obsolete and no longer economical; the means of building iron or steel ships are lacking. One yard has a good plant of limited capacity for finishing steel guns—and has done some good work.

That is the Washington Navy-Yard—

4. As a partial check upon private builders and as a resource in case of necessity, some ships should be built in navy-yards, the parts to be furnished by private foundries. Ships in general should be built by private contract, and private yards are capable of doing the work. * * *

5. Armor plate and engines should be obtained wholly from private manufacturers.

6. The costly experiments of twenty five years have reached a stage which justifies certain conclusions. Guns should be made of open-hearth steel, forged, breech-loading, chambered, of calibers ranging from 5 to 16 inches, of lengths ranging from 30 to 35 calibers. Armor and projectiles should be made of forged steel. The hydraulic forging press produces better results than the steam hammer, costs much less, and should be used for Government work. Ships should be constructed of steel, but certain minor classes may be composite of steel and wood.

Then provided for repairs at any yard or all yards.

7. The manufacture of guns suitable for ships and coast defense should be divided between private foundries and Government shops, the former providing the forged and tempered parts and the latter finishing those parts and assembling them.

That is done.

8. The Government should establish two factories for machine-finishing and assembling guns.

That has been done at the places suggested, the Washington Navy-Yard and the Watervliet Arsenal.

When the determination to contract for heavy guns shall have been reached, the localities for finishing them can easily be determined.

9.—

The committee said—

All needed private capital is ready for cheerful cooperation with the Government in whatever it may require.

We summed up the capital that wished to help in this work of regeneration, and it was $40,000,000, capital that was willing to enter into contracts to build ships, armor, and guns and assist in any part of the work. Then the tenth was the important conclusion:

10. Proposals for armor and guns should require such quantities and extend over such a series of years as to justify private persons in securing the best plant. Payments should be made only for completed work and only the guaranteed bids of persons having capital and experience should be considered.

I say that was the policy from that time until the present, not because any committee discovered it, but because it was the summing up of the opinions of the men in the United States and in Europe who were best qualified. The Governments of France, and Russia, and England made all the experiments that the ingenuity of the Senator from New Hampshire could devise if we gave him the summer to do it in, and fell back substantially upon these identical features, and have been working on them.

As to the putting up of a Government plant, it is wholly and absolutely unnecessary. Nor do I believe in the wisdom of fixing a limit precisely for the manufacture of heavy armor. I do not think it is worth while to do it. I believe in giving your Secretary of the Navy the power that we used to give him under which he made great successes, not exactly an unlimited power, but a reasonably full power, and holding him to the responsibility. We did well under that. We got armor as cheap as it could be made in this country, and as cheap as it could be made in any other country when the difference in wages is taken into account and the difference, of course, in the cost of raw material and of the subsequent manufacturing and finishing processes. The experiment, I say, of gun making by a government altogether for itself is not, to my knowledge, going on anywhere in the world, and I think not as to armor, but I am not quite positive as to that. I know the most of it has been done as we have been doing it.

I think it would be a great deal better to take this provision as it came from the House and reject the proposition which says no contracts for armor plate shall be made at a rate to exceed $400 per ton. I would not only reject the proposition to limit it to $300, but the proposition to limit it to $400 per ton, satisfied that we should do better justice to ourselves and to the subject by that course of proceeding.

When we came to talk with the large manufacturers of steel as to what they would do in this matter, there were several things they insisted upon—contracts running over a period of years and large contracts—otherwise they would not promise to invest from two to four million dollars in the magnificent, the enormous plant that would be needed. There was another thing they could not insist upon, but it was something that I think was said by nearly every Government contractor with whom I have talked, and we have had Government contractors for guns of various styles in my own town for a great many years manufacturing the Colts rifles, the Sharps carbines, and the Enfield rifles that have been made for England or for Russia. The Hotchkiss guns have been made there, and guns have been made for the Government in New Haven.

We have had a great variety of gun factories covering this whole field. A great company is building up in Bridgeport now which proposes to take a heavy share in the manufacture of ordnance, from the 1-pounder Hotchkiss up. There is one expression of opinion that I heard from all those people. It is summed up in this, that the Government is the worst customer in the world; and why? They will tell you in many of those shops that they send inspectors there—in many cases young men of 25 to 30 years of age—who have learned a good deal from the books at Annapolis and West Point, but in practical knowledge of what is a good piece of steel or iron work, and what is sufficiently fitting, they do not begin, any half dozen of them, to equal one of the old mossy heads who have been forty years in the best shops of New England making iron and steel, whose eye is instinctive for everything in the nature of real effect, who will tell you weights by looking, who will tell how a journal works, tell how the nuts and screws work, and all sorts of things, and will give you a good idea of what your gun will be worth before it is built.

Those men do not like to have a youth come there and look on the underside of a gun carriage and find a little scar as big as a dime that no private contractor would think of objecting to, and say on account of it the piece is imperfect, and therefore it ought to be rejected. But they get along, and with all that perhaps they are willing to take the contract for all that. But then, some gentlemen, without any reflection, think that any one of these large shops can begin immediately to make any piece, large or small, from a watch up to the magnificent marine engine without preparation; that they have fair steel-working machinery already. They forget that great machine tools, some of them of great size and enormous cost, must be built in order to carry on the work.

For instance, the Bethlehem Iron Works put up a steel hammer weighing 100 tons, a magnificent mass of steel, which, on dropping on a piece of metal from an inch in thickness to a 20-ton piece of armor, heated to a white heat, would beat it into shape. That machine cost something to manufacture and costs something to work it, and then they changed, or some of them did, to forging by hydraulic pressure, working 20 tons of steel as a housewife works the dough—very similarly to that—putting upon it a great piece of cold steel, which will push it and press it backward and forward into all sorts of shapes. All of those things cost money and take time. They put up—and a magnificent thing it is and was when a committee of fourteen of us, including the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ALLISON], visited there some years ago—one of the finest works to be seen anywhere in the world, and an exhibition of the power of man in everyday matters.

When they went to all that expense, they did not wish to be met by a contract for one or two or three or four years, or have only a limited quantity of work to do; they did not wish to be bound absolutely to any limit of cost for the future; they did not wish to be told that Congress could come in three years hence and say to them, "You are making too much money at $100 a ton;" they wanted some leeway; they wanted a chance to talk with a wise Secretary of the Navy, and tell him what, in all reason, the work could be done for, and how it would compare with the work done on the great ships of Great Britain or the work done by such wonderful works as the Creusot establishment in France, or with what is being done by Russia, and tell him how much the corresponding work could be done for in this country.

One would suppose from the tone of the speechmaking here that the men who have established these magnificent works were not only entirely destitute of honor, but of patriotism as well. Does not any man who is familiar with the great work of mechanics know that they are proud of every piece of their work and that the most of them would not be willing for anything in the world to turn out an inferior product? They do not like to be employed upon cheap work. They like to do those splendid things which challenge comparison with the Creusot Works, and with Armstrong, and all those gentlemen. They are ambitious, they like their work; but if they are to be spoken of constantly as if they were jewing—to use a disagreeable phrase—as if they were screwing and twisting about and endeavoring to cheat the Government, I am sure many of them would say, "We will endeavor to find heavy steel work in making the shafting for steamers, etc., in private life, and the Government can go and take care of itself."

I think that any gentleman who has been familiar with Government contracts and such work for the last thirty or forty years past, to say nothing of what he may have read of other countries or heard of in his own country, will tell you that it is one of the unwise things to put up a complete Government plant of this sort.

Go to your Washington Navy-Yard, and you will see one of the finest shops in the world, it is true and one admirably conducted no doubt, but it costs a great deal more to do our work there than private people would do the same work for. They take the rough forging, only partly finished, great bands and cylinders for the biggest cannon, and refine them and polish them down to a thousandth of an inch; and you will see them there take great bands of steel 3 or 4 feet in thickness in external diameter and slip them down over a tube as easily as you put your glove on. That work is better divided. There is no necessity for the Government undertaking to manufacture anything that can be well done by private enterprise; it is far better for the country that it should be so done, that the Government may not be cumbered with great Government shops which, as people think sometimes, are likely to be governed by political influences, and the real expenses of the Government are swollen.

It is a far better way also to build ships in the private yards, and they mostly have been so built. Do you suppose that Cramp is not proud when one of his ships makes 19, 20, 21, 22, or 23 miles an hour? He would rather die than cheat the Government in a matter of that sort. He is prouder of the trial trip of one of those steamers than any man in any country is of any decoration his sovereign may have given him. It is in private establishments that things ought to be built.

In accordance with the conclusions of the committee as to ships, we reserve to ourselves the power to provide for ourselves the capacity to build war ships as a sort of protection, as a reserve resort if there should arise any great national necessity.

Our present system is correct. The amendment on page 51, in my judgment, is not put there with the idea of putting up any enormous establishment with a $4,000,000 plant, but as a sort of brutum fulmen against the private manufacturers, which they understand just as well as we do.

I say they will make the best work in the world for reasonable prices if we treat them like gentlemen, and give the Secretary of the Navy some leeway in making bargains with them. You can not restrict this by rule. They are changing all the while the character of that material; they have been improving by their harveyizing, and by the use of nickel alloy, and they are changing the form of the old-fashioned turret, which was simply a cheese box on a raft, as the old Monitor was called. Their idea goes to the changing of the turret so as to round it up toward the top and elongate it in the front, with the idea that when they are fighting head on, a shot can hardly hurt that turret, for when it strikes on the side it will strike it on a curve line, and go off over the top. It is a very different thing to build a vessel like that from what it was to build the ordinary cheese-box turret. That is a simple problem upon definite lines, an exact curve all the way round; it is on vertical and perpendicular lines. The other has to have many different systems of forging, and very different tools for cutting the plate down to a proper thickness. You can not make a contract for that work for $400 a ton. The cost will run much above that, but there are minor parts of the steel that might be made for $50 a ton.

The best way, in my judgment, by all means, for the safety of the country and for the sake of the excellence of the work, is to avoid all political combinations, to avoid all unnecessary manufacturing by the Government itself, and to leave this matter substantially where it has been.

Mr. SQUIRE. Without any previous intention of saying a word, the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] have caused me to rise for the purpose of stating in a very few sentences my emphatic concurrence in what he has said to the Senate.

For some years I happened to be engaged in the business of manufacturing small arms not only for the Government of the United States, but for several States of the Union and for foreign countries. I know something of the business of manufacturing arms for the Government, and I know something of the business of great concerns engaged in supplying material of war for the nations of the world. I know something of the relative cost of manufacture by private concerns and companies as compared with the cost of arms manufactured by the United States Government and by other governments of the world, and I venture to say in brief that I believe it to be for the advantage of this Government that it should encourage the manufacture of war material by companies and by private concerns rather than to engage in the manufacture as a Government, or rather than to extend the Government plants already existing for that purpose to any considerable extent.

My reasons for that are somewhat in the line of the suggestions advanced by the honorable Senator from Connecticut. I believe, in the first place, that the Government will get better work by such means. In the second place, I believe that the Government will get the work done at less cost; and, in the third place, I believe it to be unwise for the Government to extend its establishments so as to involve any political question in this business of manufacturing by the Government any further than may be necessary.

It has been shown in the past that in the manufacture of small arms the great companies, such as have been alluded to by the Senator from Connecticut, the Colt Company, of Hartford; the Remington Company, of Ilion, N. Y.; the Sharp Company, and other companies, manufacture small arms at less cost than they have been manufactured by the Government. I believe the lowest cost for the Springfield muzzle-loading rifle during the late war and just after that war was about $13 per arm. Private companies have been enabled to manufacture the same arms at a less cost, and to sell those arms to the Government of the United States at the price of $12.50 per arm. The price of breech-loading rifles sold to the Government, which formerly ranged from $37.50 to $42.50 per arm, has been reduced by private competition so that those private factories are enabled to supply those arms to the Government at a cost not to exceed $15 or $16 per arm.

If those things are true—and I know them to be true in the manufacture of small arms, in which the same system of superintendence, the same system of inspection or relatively the same system of inspection, should be employed as in the inspecting of the great guns manufactured for the Government and by the Government—then I believe it worthy of the attention of the Senate to consider very seriously as to the propriety of the Government of the United States engaging in the manufacture of the great guns or of armor steel. I believe it to be an unwise proceeding, and nothing short of absolute necessity should induce us as a Government to engage in the manufacture of armor plate.

It may be true that these manufacturers have made some profits. I believe they are entitled to all the profits they have made. I am not one of those Senators who would be in favor of jewing down those manufacturers and screwing them down to the last point, so that they would need to dock their pay rolls and dock their employees and reduce their wages. I believe in encouraging those large concerns. I believe in encouraging that class of talent and that class of labor. I believe that we should rather put a premium upon such work; that we should build up such private concerns and such large companies as are willing to engage in this business.

I have had some conference with men connected with some of those large establishments of the present day, men connected with large establishments like the Bethlehem Company, which the Committee on Naval Affairs visited, and which I visited in connection with the business of that committee, and they have said to me that they really did not particularly care for the business of the Government at the rate at which they were receiving under the system of inspection that they were required to adopt. I think it unwholesome for us to persist in an effort to reduce the price of armor plate below what those large concerns can produce it for at a reasonable profit; and, from such investigation as I have been able to pursue personally, I do not believe that the price of $400 per ton is any too much for them to receive.

It may be that in the discovery and in the inventions of the present day, of which we have heard so much of late, that the price of the ore from which steel is produced can be largely reduced. It may be that the cost of those processes may be reduced, it may be that innovations may occur from time to time, but those inventions will only come about through the stimulus that is acquired by reason of the necessities of the case, the competition that will come up, and by reason of the talent that is employed and the experience that is developed. From all this the Government of the United States will reap a large advantage, and I do not think it wise for us to be penny wise and pound foolish in this matter. I believe it would be pound foolish for the Government of the United States to undertake to provide a large establishment for the manufacture of armor plate.

What would be the result? Of course there would be the usual preliminary attention to matters that would take a large amount of time, that would take an amount of talent, an amount of inspection and surveying of the whole question. Time would be required to develop in that direction. Then there would be required the outlay, and it would be necessary to get the proper corps of men, the proper superintendence, the proper inspection; and all those things require some years in order to develop it to the proper degree of perfection. Then, when you have all this, the Government has to establish and maintain a vast establishment, a great company of men, officers, and inspectors, who have to be maintained. I do not think it wise for the Government to enter upon a project of this kind. I do not think it is economical. I believe it to be detrimental to the best interests of the Government.

If I might add a few more words, I believe this policy to be unfair to these companies and to the men engaged in this business. I believe they ought to have encouragement in the future. It was regarded as important during the war in the defensive policy of this Government that there shou'd be large private factories. When we came to consider our sources of public defense, we always counted upon the large private establishments which could engage in the manufacture of arms and in the manufacture of war material. It is an element of strength to the Government.

It so happens that under the policy which has been pursued in the past we have a large establishment on the Pacific Coast for the building of ships—the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco. We also have a small establishment now engaged in the building of a steam torpedo boat and other steam vessels for the Government on Puget Sound, at Seattle, my own town.

I believe in the encouragement of private factories. I believe it is to the interest of the Government to encourage them rather than to concentrate such work into one or two great public establishments on the Atlantic Coast. Therefore I hope this amendment may be disapproved of by the Senate.

I have listened with great interest to the remarks of the honorable Senator from Connecticut, who is thoroughly well informed upon this subject, and to whom we should all look up as an experienced Senator, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and a member of the Coast Defense Committee, a man who has given great attention to this subject during all the past years, and I venture to say that no man in the Senate is better advised on this subject than the Senator from Connecticut; and for one I feel like heartily seconding his statement in every particular. I do not think he made a misstatement in his speech; and it was for the purpose of emphasizing what he said that I rose to my feet.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, this amendment carries with it an appropriation of $3,200,000. So far as I can learn from the discussion on this subject, it occurs to me that there is a wide difference of opinion as to what would be the proper cost of this armor plate per ton. One Senator says $300; one committee—the Committee on Naval Affairs—recommend, if I understand it, $300; and the Appropriations Committee say $400. When I read the report of the committee, I find it concludes that this armor plate is worth between three and four hundred dollars a ton.

Now, we are dealing with very large figures here. I know that no committee has ever come before the Senate asking for an appropriation without knowing something more definite than either the Committee on Appropriations or the Naval Committee seem to know about what they are asking here. When the committee comes here and talks about the cost being between three and four hundred dollars a ton, if you will stop to count the difference it is nearly a million dollars. If there is a difference of $100 a ton on each ship, that would be $270,000, and on three ships it would be $810,000. It seems to me that we had much better suspend the construction of these three battle ships than to go on with all the doubt and uncertainty which prevails as to what will be the proper cost of armor plate.

Mr. President, we have a great many battle ships. We have more battle ships than we have seamen to man them—I mean American seamen. If our Navy were called into action we could not man the vessels with American seamen. We have 76,000 seamen, two-thirds of whom are foreigners and one-third Americans. Your building up of the Navy now is something like building a head without a body. You can not sustain a navy without a merchant marine back of it; and we have no merchant marine.

We have more ships to-day than we can man, and why now, in the condition of the Treasury, depleted as it is, should we give this $3,000,000 to go on constructing these three battle ships, especially when there are no two Senators who agree as to what is the real cost per ton of armor plate? I do not think as Senators, trustees of the Government, and as business men called upon to dispose of the public funds and to vote appropriations, that we should do it recklessly. Let somebody ascertain; let the executive department of the Government ascertain what the real cost is, and not tell the Senate that it is between $300 and $400. I never knew so reckless a recommendation to be made when you come to deal with figures of this magnitude. Until the Senator from New Hampshire, leading the Naval Committee, or until the Appropriations Committee, which is assumed to know, or somebody else will find out definitely whether this armor plate is worth $100 or $200 or $300, or $600 a ton, as some say, I do not think we should go forward blindly making appropriations. We are called on here as Senators to vote without any very definite knowledge or information, without any accurate information. The Appropriations Committee has not time to look into the question, and the members of the Naval Committee do not agree even among themselves, and here is a difference of $810,000 in an appropriation of $3,000,000.

Now, suppose the president of a railroad company should make a recommendation to set aside a certain sum to do a piece of work and his vice-president should come in and say, "I recommend $800,000 less," what would be the duty of the board of directors? Simply to wait until they had definite information. We are proceeding without definite information, and if the Naval Committee and the Appropriations Committee can not give to the Senate definite information, in my judgment we had better suspend the construction of these battle ships until we can act intelligently in a matter of such magnitude.

But, Mr. President, my objection to this amendment is to that part of it which seeks to inaugurate the policy of this Government entering upon private business, if you please. The Naval Committee recommend by amendment that in the event that these armor-plate factories—and there are only two of them in the United States—do not take the price per ton Congress names, then the United States is to buy one of their factories and go into the business of making armor plate. One would suppose from the talk here that there were about forty or fifty armor-plate establishments ready to sell to the Government. If some things I have heard be true, some of these armor-plate factories will be very glad to sell to this Government at a million and a half dollars, and with this bill a law, all that the two armor-plate factories have to do is to come together and say, "We insist upon $500 a ton for armor plate." Then the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to buy one of them out and have it loaded onto the Government.

Who knows but what the owners of these factories would like to sell them for $1,500,000?

But suppose, Mr. President, we can not buy one of these plants. Is the Senate prepared now to vote that the Government of the United States shall go into the business of manufacturing armor plate? The Government buys shoes for the Army, buys clothing, buys blankets, and buys supplies of all kinds. What would be thought of a proposition to authorize the Government to establish factories and go into the business of making this article?

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to ask the Senator, for information, whether the three battle ships upon which the armor plates are to be used are not now under construction?

Mr. ELKINS. I do not know; I suppose they are. You will have to go to the Naval Committee to find out. I do not know; but the Appropriations Committee ought to know.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no possibility, I know——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, we can not hear the question propounded by the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was asking the Senator from West Virginia whether the three battle ships are not already under contract.

Mr. ELKINS. Suppose they are?

Mr. ALDRICH. Then the armor plate must be obtained somewhere, or else the ships will be absolutely useless.

Mr. ELKINS. Why can you not suspend the contract? The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] says that the work has been already suspended for a year.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no.

Mr. ELKINS. What would the ships be worth without the armor, the Senator asks. They would not be worth anything.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is exactly the question I am suggesting to the Senator, who says that we should go out of the armor-plate business, and not buy of these gentlemen or anybody else.

Mr. ELKINS. I beg your pardon. I did not say that.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator will allow me, the construction of ships, their frames, and so forth, is one thing, and the contract for armor is a subsequent matter, as it is not needed at the time when the construction of the ship itself is going on, but it is reserved, so as to find out from the Secretary of the Navy as to the proper price to be paid for armor in the future.

Mr. ALDRICH. What I am trying to find out from the Senator is whether it will not be necessary to obtain armor plate at some time from somebody before the ships will be of use?

Mr. ELKINS. It is not necessary for the Government of the United States to appropriate money and not know definitely the price or cost of the thing it buys, or how much it ought to pay. Somebody ought to tell the Senate what this armor plate is worth. There is not a Senator here who says he has definite information on the subject. The committee comes before the Senate and says the price should be from $300 to $400 a ton. When you come to talk about the three ships, it amounts to $270,000 each, and then Senators say a difference of $100 is nothing. But it does mean something; it makes a difference of $810,000 on the three ships. I do not want to vote upon a proposition, as a Senator and as a business man, without knowing whether I am paying too much or too little for what I am buying.

Mr. HALE. How does the Senator then——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Senator that he can not be heard at the desk.

Mr. HALE. I was trying to get the Senator from West Virginia to hear me.

Mr. ELKINS. I can hear the Senator very well.

Mr. HALE. So far as I can judge from what the Senator says, he does not want anything done; he does not think we need any more ships.

Mr. ELKINS. I can tell the Senator I do not like to go forever on in midnight darkness.

Mr. HALE. He wants everything made absolutely clear before he will consent to have any more ships. Now, this year, in what was rather an unprecedented fashion for us, we have put no provision whatever for new ships in this bill; but we have got three ships on our hands which were authorized last year, which have been contracted for, which are being built, and which are absolutely good for nothing and are dead matter unless we supply armor; and we have come to the point where investigation has shown that the prices heretofore paid for armor are too much, and the committee reports a limit of $400 per ton. Now, the Senator wants accuracy, and he can not get anything better than that. One man believes that $400 is too much; another believes that it is too little; but the committee reports $400, and the Senate is going to be put to the test of saying whether $400 shall be the limit. I have no doubt that when we fix that limit——

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. I may be in error as to the facts, but my recollection is, at the last session of Congress the question of the equitable price to be paid for armor plate was submitted to the Secretary of the Navy, with instructions to examine and to report to Congress by the 1st day of January, and that his testimony before the Committee on Naval Affairs and his report to Congress gave evidence that $395 to $400 was, in his judgment, an equitable price for the armor. Am I mistaken about that?

Mr. HALE. That is a general statement of what took place.

Mr. QUAY. It is very particular as to the amount.

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. QUAY. He gave to the Naval Committee and to Congress the figures fixed by the Committee on Appropriations in this bill.

Mr. HALE. He did, and the price we have fixed is based upon that report. It was a singularly bright and exhaustive examination, and, as I said to-day, it was as good a piece of work as any Secretary has done in years, and it brought light out of darkness to a much greater extent than I supposed it could be done. The report is based upon it and the bill is based upon it, and the limitation is fixed, and if the Senate passes it and it goes through, the contractors will accept it and be glad to accept it.

Mr. ELKINS. How does the Senator know it?

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt whatever as to that.

Mr. ELKINS. Why does the Senator say he has no doubt?

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt whatever for the reason that it is shown very clearly, and the contractors are bright men, that they can furnish the armor and make a profit at that price, and they will not venture to decline to furnish it.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not know how much time I should yield to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. The gentleman can stop it at any time. I do not know of any committee except the Foreign Relations Committee which refuses to have questions asked. I do not know of any other committee that reports things that are not true and then refuses to answer questions.

Mr. ELKINS. I have seen the time of Senators taken away from them by the gentlemen on the Appropriations Committee, one replying to the other, and the Senator from Maine is declaring all the while that this colloquial debate is the best way to get at the facts.

Mr. BATE. We can not hear one word that is being said on the other side. It seems to be a private colloquy carried on there among a half dozen gentlemen on the floor.

Mr. HALE. It is very interesting to the parties engaged in it.

Mr. BATE. I desire to hear what is going on.

Mr. HALE. Now, if the Senator does not want me to go any further——

Mr. ELKINS. No; I want to ask a question.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator to ask me a question.

Mr. ELKINS. If I give way to the Appropriations Committee, I will not get another chance to-night.

Mr. HALE. I yield for a question.

Mr. ELKINS. What does Great Britain pay for like armor?

Mr. HALE. Sometimes one price and sometimes another.

Mr. ELKINS. Please state, if the Appropriations Committee know, what price is paid.

Mr. HALE. Yes; we do know.

Mr. ELKINS. State it.

Mr. HALE. Different prices.

Mr. ELKINS. State some of the prices.

Mr. HALE. They pay in pounds what amounts in dollars——

Mr. ELKINS. State it in dollars.

Mr. HALE. As I say, they pay in pounds what amounts in dollars in some cases to $270, in some cases to $350, and in some cases to $400, and so it goes on at different prices.

Mr. QUAY. It seems to me, unless I err, that the average price is about $540.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. ELKINS. Another member of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to answer my friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HALE. I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from California.

Mr. ELKINS. I want this to be the last member of the Appropriations Committee I yield to to this discussion.

Mr. PERKINS. My friend asks what Great Britain is paying for armor plate. I desire to inform him that another foreign government in Europe, as appeared by the testimony before the Naval Committee, not the Committee on Appropriations, paid these same two companies—the same one company, for they have pooled their issues on prices—only $250 a ton for 2,400 tons of this armor plate, amounting to $600,000, and while the evidence was not direct, it appeared that it was delivered to them in Europe for that price.

Mr. ELKINS. Here is a member of the Appropriations Committee——

Mr. PERKINS. Of the Naval Committee, if you please.

Mr. ELKINS. You are on the Appropriations Committee, too.

Now listen. Here is a member of the Naval Committee and a member of the Appropriations Committee who says that armor-plate contractors in the United States delivered armor plate in Europe—delivered, Mr. President; I put stress upon that word, because it costs at least $10 a ton to get it to Russia—in Russia for $250, but now he, a member of both of these committees, is sustaining the amendment which recommends $400 a ton. The Senator from Maine says he is definite—$400 a ton. I know he is definite, but another Senator, sitting in front of me, who has been Secretary of the Navy, says three hundred and fifty or three hundred dollars. He is groping in the dark, too, and does not know where he is on the question. I want to make myself plain. If nobody charged with finding out these facts knows anything about them, we had better suspend; we had better not have these three battle ships completed. They can stand where they are. The work is going on now, and we can wait for the armor plate until we know what it will cost.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ELKINS. What Senator would pay for anything until he knows what it is worth? Would these gentlemen go out into the market and buy clothes, or coal, or wood, or build a house, without knowing what it would cost? Not one of them.

Mr. HALE. The Senator has not located ignorance in the right place.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not know where it belongs. Whatever was done on this subject, nobody can find out anything about it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is it not true that a large proportion of the uncertainty in the mind of the Senator from West Virginia, and incidentally in the minds of the committees, is due to the fact that the contractors declined to give any definite information as to the cost of armor plate?

Mr. ELKINS. I know nothing about the contractors. The contractors attend to their side of the business, and they do not need a guardian. I think, sir, somebody else needs a guardian in this transaction, not the contractors.

I have no complaint to make of them. If a contractor can get $400 a ton out of the Appropriations Committee or the Naval Committee, who do not know anything about the subject, he will get it, or if he can get $600, he will get it. The contractor is not to blame for that. It is Congress, provided it pays too much.

This is a serious proposition. Here is a difference of $810,000, and the Senator from Maine says he can be definite and he can be positive. Here are the findings of the committee, and let me read one of the findings of the committee or the conclusion of the committee. It recommends to the Senate:

VI.

That a fair average price to be paid for armor for the three new battle ships authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, will be between $300 and $400 per ton of 2,240 pounds.

What is such a report as that worth?

Mr. HALE. Is that in the bill?

Mr. ELKINS. No, sir; it is your committee's finding.

Mr. HALE. It is not in the bill.

Mr. ELKINS. You say you want $400, when the committee tells us it is between three and four hundred dollars. Why do you not adopt what is advised by somebody who under the circumstances is presumed to know? I would never fix the highest price. If somebody advised me that the price of a product was between three and four hundred dollars I would never give him $400; never on earth.

But this is not all. The committee comes here with an amendment. Shall I call it vicious—the worst legislation I ever saw proposed in Congress—and say to armor-plate contractors, "If you do not take our offer we will buy you out?" That is, maybe, just what the contractor wants. "We will give you a million and a half for your plant, if you do not take the contract at this price." What a state of affairs! Here is a factory manufacturing shoes for the soldiers, or blankets. Suppose we should say in a bill, "We are going to give so much for shoes or blankets, and if you do not take that, we are going to give you more than your factory is worth, and run the business ourselves."

Mr. President, there is a principle involved in this matter. This Government should not be committed to the policy of going into private business and enter into the manufacture of armor plate any more than manufacturing army shoes or army blankets. Everybody knows this sort of paternalism is objectionable and unwise. There are some in the Senate who may vote for it, but I doubt whether even the Populists will follow the gentlemen into this kind of legislation.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Is the Senator in favor of fixing any limitation?

Mr. ELKINS. I am in favor of finding out——

Mr. HALE. No, no.

Mr. ELKINS. In some intelligent way what this armor plate is worth, and then saying that that price shall be given.

Mr. HALE. We are confronted with the bill which we are considering to-night. We have to pass it to-night. I ask the Senator whether to-night he is prepared to fix any limit on the contractors, or does he take the position that he is not ready to fix any limit whatever?

Mr. ELKINS. How on earth am I to know? The Senator is asking me what with all the means at his command he ought to know, and he says, "Will you not fix some price?"

Mr. HALE. No; I do not ask the Senator that. I ask him if he is ready to fix any limit.

Mr. ELKINS. You do not know anything about it. How do I know? You are ready, however, to fix the highest limit, and you may be entirely right. I do not say this is enough, too much, or too little. I simply say we should have more information before voting.

Mr. HALE. I am asking the Senator whether he is ready to fix any limit?

Mr. ELKINS. I am not, because I am not advised.

Mr. HALE. That is what it amounts to. The Senator does not want these contractors to be limited at all.

Mr. ELKINS. I want them simply to get a fair price and make a fair profit. They are entitled to this and should have it, no matter what it is. The Government can afford to be just and fair and not oppress manufacturers.

Mr. HALE. No; the Senator does not want them limited at all.

Mr. ELKINS. It is very easy to ask a question and then put an interpretation on the answer. Let me state to the Senator what I do mean and without asking him to interpret it. Here stands the Senator from Maine with the amendment.

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. Would the Senator from West Virginia be willing to leave the fixing of the price of the armor to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, who has been directed to examine and report, and who made an investigation and reported upon it?

Mr. ELKINS. I do seriously think before voting we should know something more about this question; I do not believe in giving a Cabinet officer unlimited power about anything.

We often get in the Cabinet a very able business man, but sometimes we make a mistake and get one who does not know much more about business than some of us, and I am unwilling to surrender to the discretion of a Cabinet officer the throwing away or the saving of $800,000.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from West Virginia seriously think we ought to delay the consideration of this bill until he makes up his mind?

Mr. ELKINS. I seriously think, and I want to emphasize it, that until we know something more definitely about what we are doing we ought to stop. That is safe.

Mr. HALE. Whom does the Senator mean by "we?"

Mr. ELKINS. The Senate of the United States, and not the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ELKINS. I want to know when these interruptions will end?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is unable to inform the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not interrupted the Senator before.

Mr. ELKINS. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is very amusing. I want to call his attention to three facts, and then to ask him a question.

Mr. ELKINS. It will be the first fact that has been brought out to-night.

Mr. CHANDLER. There is the report on this subject by the Secretary of the Navy; made at some length and after great care, and it is very precise and definitely stated. There is the separate report, and there is the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs on this question. Now, I ask the Senator if, until to-night when I showed them to him, he had ever seen or heard of any one of the documents before?

Mr. ELKINS. I have seen enough of them, with this kind of a conclusion, and I have to read it again before the Senators can understand it:

> That a fair average price to be paid for armor for the three new battle ships authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, will be between $300 and $400 per ton of 2,240 pounds.

Any report that is so vague and so uncertain, and which, as I try to insist upon and to bring to the attention of Senators, makes a difference of $810,000, is not worth considering. The Senator from New Hampshire, with all his astuteness, would not go down town and buy an article and make any such bargain as he proposes to make as Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let me say a word. The Senator does not wish to be unjust. He is entertaining, but he does not wish to be unjust. The Senator only read three lines of the conclusion.

Mr. ELKINS. That is all I want to read.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is all the Senator wanted to read, but here is a long page.

Mr. ELKINS. Worse than ever.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator should wait. Here is a long page stating the Secretary's conclusions, giving $400 as the price, and showing exactly how he arrived at it; showing the calculation of $300 a ton, and then comes this clause, which the Senator will allow me to read:

> While this question was under consideration by the committee, the Bethlehem Company and the Carnegie Company requested to be heard—

Neither company had given the committee any information whatever on the subject, nor had they given the Secretary of the Navy anything—> and on the 2d day of February Mr. R. P. Linderman appeared for the former company and Mr. C. M. Schwab for the latter company, and for the first time since the investigation was ordered on December 31, 1895, the companies seemed willing to discuss some details concerning the actual cost of making armor, while still declining to permit an examination of their books on that point. They made criticisms of some of the details of Secretary Herbert's report, and the Secretary being present, he made reply thereto, and afterwards submitted a letter dated February 3, 1897. A report of this last hearing, including the Secretary's letter, will be found with the testimony accompanying this report.

> The companies are entitled—

The committee say—

> even at this late day, to receive fair consideration of any facts and arguments which they choose to submit to Congress, and the committee therefore conclude to report that a fair average price of armor will be between $300 and $400 per ton, and, without fixing the exact amount, to leave the question to be further considered by the committees and to be determined as may appear to be just when the naval appropriation bill is under discussion in the two Houses of Congress.

Following that report the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Naval Affairs have gone on to consider the subject. The two companies gave them no information whatever. The committees were confronted with the fact that nearly a year ago the contracts were made for the hulls of these ships, and they found it necessary to provide the armor for those ships, or else to suspend their construction, and the Committee on Appropriations have concluded, under the circumstances, to fix as a limit, beyond which the price shall not go, $400 a ton. They bring in that conclusion, subject to the approval or disapproval of the Senate and House of Representatives, and now they are subjected to the criticism of the Senator from West Virginia, who has no information whatever on the subject and never even had taken it up for consideration until after he began his speech to-night.

Mr. ELKINS. I do not know what the Senator from New Hampshire has against me or why he wishes to impugn my conduct or my motives here. What good does it avail these distinguished Senators to read what the contractors say? You would think that the Senators were in the hands of the contractors. They say the contractors will not tell us. Why should a contractor tell a Senator anything if he does not want to? It is his business; and it is the business of the Senate to find out. It is the business of the contractor to get as much money as he can for a given piece of work. What is strange to me is that the committee is all the time striking the highest price. I do not find any of you wanting $300.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is getting a little wild.

Mr. ELKINS. Not at all.

Mr. CHANDLER. What does the Senator mean when he says he does not find anyone wanting $300, when he is now speaking on my motion to reduce the sum to $300?

Mr. ELKINS. I thought it was $350.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is wholly the invention of the Senator.

Mr. ELKINS. Now I understand this excitement. The Senator said it was amusing a while ago. It is not so amusing now. There is no business man in the world, there is not a man keeping a stand on Pennsylvania avenue, who would go into business this way. I can not torture language. I did not make this report, and I have not read all of it, but I have read enough of it to convince me that there is a very wide divergence of opinion as to the cost of armor plate; and the Senators may argue and debate the question as long as they wish, but they can not get away from the fact that there is a difference of $100 on every ton. Now, that is the question, and as a business man will we submit to this sort of legislation not founded on facts? No Senator on either the Naval or Appropriations Committee will say that he has an accurate knowledge as to the cost of armor plate.

I am asked would I seriously do this and seriously do that. I want to say to Senators that I would suspend work on these battle ships now and here, because there is no danger of war. The Senate is going to adjourn very soon, and the arbitration treaty is going to be considered, and the Cuban question is out of the way. Julio Sanguily is out of jail, he is pardoned, and there is no prospect of trouble in that direction. There is no use for haste. All sorts of rumors are afloat, that the plate can be made for $100 and $200 and $250, and because the contractors will not tell the Senator from New Hampshire what it is worth he says, "We will go on groping in the dark."

The Naval Committee and the Appropriations Committee are on the best terms. One represents $300; the other represents $400. How are we Senators, who have no means of getting information, to decide this question? We are to be advised by the committee, and what the contractors may say or what the contractors may do is of no avail to us. What the contractors say has nothing to do here. It is not the fault of the Senate if the Appropriations Committee has not brought its attention to what armor plate will cost, and I want to repeat with some emphasis that there is not a Senator advocating the appropriation of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000, with a Treasury bankrupt and empty, who would go out into the business world and do business upon any such basis as proposed in this bill. I want to say further that what is good as between individuals from a business standpoint is good for this Government. We should be just as careful with the Government's money as with our own, and if Senators were building ships, providing armor plate out of their means, they would find out in some way, no matter if the contractors sealed their mouths and locked them, whether they would pay for an article when they did not know what it was worth.

This is a serious question. There is no use to try to divert the attention of the Senate from the real issue, and I want simply to say to Senators that for their sakes, and for the sake of the United States Senate, we had better stop the construction of these ships.

Why make this mad haste? What for? There are some wild reports about war. We are not going to have any war. I believe in building a navy, but build it according to our means. I want it further understood that I am making no expression of opinion as to what the armor plate is worth. I can get no light from the distinguished Senator who has this measure in charge nor from the members of the Naval Committee. There is a difference of $100. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], I believe, wants more. I do not know. He seems to understand the question. I see him in his seat now, and I tried to ask him whether he was for $300 or $400 or $600.

Mr. HAWLEY. He reported $400.

Mr. ELKINS. Do I misrepresent the Senator when I say he is for $400.

Mr. GORMAN. No.

Mr. ELKINS. You stand for $400. You want to pay these contractors $400.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not more than $400.

Mr. ELKINS. Not more than $400. That Senator is an able Senator; he is a business man. I know too well if a man went to him and said something was worth between three and four hundred dollars he would never get $400.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me?

Mr. ELKINS. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. Does not the Senator know that it is because the contractors will not tell?

Mr. ELKINS. That is what the Senator from New Hampshire read, and he says therefore we must give $300, and this Senator says we must therefore give $400, and the Senator from Maryland says, "Amen, I will give $400," and we who have to vote must follow blindly this indefinite and vague proposition—this light that goes out in darkness and looms up again.

I want to bring some business principles to bear in this discussion. This is a proposition to take the people's money out of the Treasury of the United States. We are the trustees charged with the payment of this money, and the Senators on the Appropriations Committee are especially trustees of the Government. The great Appropriations Committee come in here and say, "Oh, we must hurry through." The Senator from Maine is impatient. When a Senator who has had two years of probation, who has been waiting and listening and hearing others talk, with no opportunity to express himself until now, speaks, he becomes impatient and does not want to hear him.

I am not here to make any war on the contractors. I do not blame or oppose them. I am not here to say whether armor plate is worth $300 or $500, and I do not find any other Senator who knows any more about it than I do—not a bit more. Therefore I think I am right in insisting, when there is so much doubt about a proposition, when there is such want of information involving a difference between the two estimates—one $300 and the other $400, amounting in the aggregate to $900,000—that work on these battle ships shall be stopped for a year. How can that prejudice the public interests? We hope with the incoming Administration to fill the Treasury with money. Then we can pay it out; but I will insist then on knowing for what we are paying it. I do not want to lay too heavy a burden on a bankrupt Treasury.

In another year perhaps the Government will have more money. We have promised to put money in the Treasury under a proper system of taxation, and let us wait until we get it. It is the people's money, taken from them by taxation. I fear sometimes that we forget where the money comes from which we are called on to appropriate. It comes from the people's hard earnings; and then a Senator, with a wave of his hand, says, "Oh, three or four hundred dollars, that is not much difference on 1 ton of steel." Three or four hundred dollars! Why, nine-tenths of the people of the United States only have an average income of $400, and live on this amount.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. ELKINS. Yes; he is not on the Appropriations Committee. I hope he will know something about the question.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator was making such a patriotic statement that it was bound to bring a Populist to his feet, because we can approve such sentiments. I was very glad indeed to hear him say that he wants to have more money, and to express a deep regret at taxes being wrung from the people when money is scarce. I want to congratulate the Senator from West Virginia upon that position, that he is opposed to taking more taxes out of the people until the amount of money is increased.

Mr. ELKINS. No; I beg pardon. Do not put that in my mouth. I did not say more money. The Senator is as bad as the members of the Appropriations Committee. He can not get up here and state a proposition fairly. I said nothing about more money. I said more money in the Treasury.

Mr. BUTLER. You are not in favor of the people having more money?

Mr. ELKINS. There is plenty of money in this country to do its business. The gentleman must excuse me. I do not want to take up too much time of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BUTLER. He is not quite so good a patriot as I thought he was.

Mr. ELKINS. I know the impatience of the Senate, and I want to address myself a little further to this amendment. I do not know who is the father of it. I think the Appropriations Committee is not willing to accept its paternity, and I am told it is the amendment of the Naval Affairs Committee.

Now I wish that Senators would listen to the reading of this:

In case the Secretary of the Navy shall find it impossible to make contracts for said armor within the limits as to price above fixed—

Four hundred dollars per ton. That is what it means.

Mr. HALE. We have not reached that amendment.

Mr. ELKINS. They have to be argued together. One depends on the other.

In case the Secretary of the Navy shall find it impossible to make contracts for said armor within the limits as to price above fixed, he shall be, and hereby is, authorized to lease, purchase, or establish a Government armor factory of sufficient capacity to make such armor and to proceed to manufacture the armor necessary for said three battle ships.

Now, I venture to say that the parallel of that sort of legislation is not in the history of the Government. It is a direct menace to business men—"Now, if you do not do what I want you to do, then I will go into the business myself; I will establish a factory, or I will buy one of your plants out, or I will purchase buildings." I want to call the attention of Senators to what it costs—$1,500,000. I would not put that in the power of any Cabinet officer. In the first place, I want the Senate to condemn in an emphatic way this first attempt to enter upon the principle of the Government entering into private business.

In executing this authority he shall prepare a description and plans and specifications of the land, buildings, and machinery suitable for the factory; and shall advertise for proposals to furnish such land, buildings, and machinery as a whole plant, or separately—

But it says he may lease or purchase. And he shall appoint an armor board, and so forth.

Now, Mr. President, in the first place, to take $3,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States is a serious proposition, but not knowing what we should pay for an article is worse. But, beyond this, it is absolutely wrong to encourage, or foster, or vote for any principle that authorizes the Government to enter into private business. The Government is not ready to enter into private business. As I said, she might as well enter upon making shoes and blankets and clothing for the Army, for this is all connected with war. If I had my way, if I could persuade members of the Appropriations Committee, I would simply strike all this out and say "For the present we will suspend work upon battle ships until we know what this armor plate costs." The only excuse for the Appropriations Committee is that the armor-plate people will not tell them what it costs. Then we should wait until we know definitely what it costs and allow the contractor a fair profit, no matter if the price be three, four, or five hundred dollars per ton.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, from my brief experience in this body I sympathize very much with the feeling of helplessness and ignorance which the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] has confessed; and, even though I am a member of the Naval Committee and have devoted as much time as I could spare from my other duties here to the business of familiarizing myself with the subject-matter intrusted to our care, I do not feel able to give him all the light that he asks for on this question of armor. But I do feel able to give him enough light, and to give the Senate enough light, to show that there is nothing connected with the recent history of this Government—no expenditure—so reeking with fraud and so disgraceful to those who are responsible for it.

If we go back and trace the history of this armor-plate manufacture we find that during Mr. Cleveland's first term, when Secretary Whitney began what is known as the construction of the new Navy, the manufacture of armor according to the most approved methods was an unknown thing in this country, and that there was no plant capable of performing that work. The largest steel plant in the country at that time, I believe, was at Bethlehem, and Congress wisely, perhaps (I shall not pretend to say it was not wise), entered not into a contract, but it authorized the Secretary of the Navy to enter into a contract with the Bethlehem Iron Works by which they were to construct a sufficient addition to their already large steel works to make this armor. The price fixed was away up yonder, some $600 or $700, I am not familiar with the exact amount, but it was $600 or $700 per ton, and it was generally understood in the debates and in the newspapers that the enormous price was given by reason of the fact that an enormous expenditure of three, four, or five million dollars was necessary, and the Government proposed by this large price to reimburse the Bethlehem Manufacturing Company in the contract which would then be let for its outlay. The proof is overwhelming in these reports, in the testimony taken before the Naval Committee in the investigation last winter, that the plant at Bethlehem, which was constructed in addition to what they already had, has been paid for twice over by this Government absolutely, and that they have made a present of it to the Bethlehem Company.

In a year or two after the contract was entered into at Bethlehem the new Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Tracy, finding that the delivery of armor from Bethlehem did not keep pace with the needs of the Navy, or for some other reason—that was the ostensible excuse—without authority from Congress, entered into a contract of his own with the Carnegie Works at Pittsburg, by which they were to receive the same price for the armor that Bethlehem was receiving, and he thereby hoped, as he explained, to bring about competition in the price of armor, and have two plants instead of one, and thus enable the Government to obtain all the armor it might want in the construction of the new Navy at reduced prices after a while.

The construction of the new Navy has gone on. It is getting to be rather respectable. It has cost us an enormous sum. Last winter, when the Venezuela war scare was on, the proposition came from the House to increase the Navy by four battle ships. There was a struggle here to reduce it to two, but we compromised on three, as I foretold would be the case, because there are only three navy-yards in this country that can construct such ships. Each one of them got a ship, and they, in collusion, agreed as to the price they would bid on those ships, and no doubt we are to-day paying a million dollars bonus or a million and a half dollars clear profit over and above a reasonable sum for their construction.

But the question of armor to put on these ships was under investigation by the Naval Committee, and all we could do in this body as to the reduction that should be had was to put it off and forbid any contract being let out for armor plate until an investigation was had by the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy made that investigation. It is here. It is full and complete. The Naval Committee has had this matter under consideration during the whole year; we have paid more attention to it than any and all else before us; and notwithstanding our ignorance (and I confess we are still ignorant), we have learned enough to know that these two companies, instead of competing with each other in the manufacture of armor, are to-day in collusion and have formed a trust; that they fix the price absolutely, without any regard to justice, without any regard to the liberal manner in which the Government has treated them in the past, without any regard to the fact that the price they have received, amounting to about $15,000,000 for plates they have already manufactured, has paid them back fourfold for the expenditure they paid out, and that they have had large dividends on account of the investment besides.

Mr. Herbert comes forward and makes a report based on the best information he can obtain as to the construction and cost of armor in Europe, and then he takes up the reports of the Carnegie Company and the Bethlehem Company. He went to the auditor's office at Pittsburg to find out the profits they had returned for taxation. He analyzed every bit of the information he obtained, and here are his conclusions:

The Secretary takes as the cost of labor and material in double-forged, harveyized, nickel-steel armor the sum of	$196.00
He assumes that the plant costing $1,500,000 would need $150,000 per year for maintaining it, or $50 per ton upon 3,000 tons of armor, and adds to the price	50.00
Making	246.00
Or in round numbers	$250.00
He then adds for profit 50 per cent, or	125.00
Making	375.00
And then adds for nickel to be furnished hereafter by the contractors	20.00
Making	395.00
Or in round numbers	400.00

And that is the way the $400 figures have been reached. We have constructed these armor factories, we have given them to these people, we are asked to give them 50 per cent profit upon the reasonable cost of the manufacture, to give $10 extra as a bonus on guesswork, and reach $400 as the basis of the Naval Committee.

I will say here that the reason why there is some ambiguity or a little latitude in the report of the committee as being somewhere between $300 and $400 was in order that the Naval Committee might come in here like a band of brethren upon a united report without any minority battle to be fought.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], who has been largely instrumental in getting up this investigation, whose ability nobody questions, is here asking us to go back to $300 as a fair price, and here are his conclusions as to why that is enough.

After the Secretary's report was received, the committee engaged in considering the question whether it would not be a sufficiently liberal allowance to take the careful estimate of the Secretary's experts as to the cost of labor and material; to allow for maintenance of the plant only three-fifths of the sum per ton named by the Secretary, and to add only 33⅓ per cent for profits on work where the plant has been in fact paid for and is maintained by the Government. A statement thus revised would be as follows:

Cost of labor and material per ton	$168.00
Add for reforging	12.00
	180.00
Add for maintenance of plant	30.00
	210.00
Thirty-three and one-third per cent profit	70.00
	280.00
Add for nickel	20.00
Making the price for armor	300.00

Now, Mr. President, the proposition here is to limit this price to $300 or have the Government go into the manufacture of armor on its own account rather than submit to further imposition. Those who are accustomed to hold up their hands in horror at the idea of the Government going into business, who see the specter of the subtreasury or the Government ownership of railroads in everything brought in here to take the trusts by the throat and cause them to relinquish their grasp upon the throats of the people, say, "Oh, no; we can not have the Government do anything on its own hook except to sit down here as the agent and tool of these corporations and trusts, wring from the people their hard earnings in taxes, and turn them over to these robbers." That is the business we are engaged in. That is what we are here for, and that is why all of this discussion is being raised here as to the Government not going into business and buying or erecting a plant of its own for the purpose of making armor. How else are we to do under the law which requires us not to purchase abroad one bolt or one scintilla of material which goes into these ships, which limits us to home manufacture? How are we to break the grasp of this trust?

The theory advanced in this body as we heard it discussed here in regard to the monopolies in the District of Columbia in the matter of electric lighting and gas is that Congress can regulate monopolies here, hold them down and make them put their prices at whatever we please; that we can control monopolies. I say here that the evidence is overwhelming in this electric-light business and everything else, that instead of our controlling monopolies, monopolies have the Senate in their breeches pockets.

Mr. President, I grow so indignant when I trace the history of this iniquitous business that I am apt to say harsh words, but God knows I believe every utterance I have made here is true. I would hate to believe or even to insinuate that these people have their paid agents in this Chamber. I would hate to suppose or suspect——

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HAWLEY. Does the Senator dare to say that, or even dare to insinuate it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. I dare say that as far as I can see and understand the situation here I can explain it upon no other ground except that there must be men here who are the agents of these trusts.

Mr. HAWLEY. I say that is a disgraceful slander, unworthy of any gentleman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina will proceed.

Mr. CULLOM. And in order.

Mr. TILLMAN. I might say that none but the galled jade winces.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator applies that to me, I have a very sufficient answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut must address the Chair and be recognized before he can interrupt a Senator on the floor.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg pardon of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator addresses any language of that kind to me, I have a sufficient answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator must not proceed to speak until he is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. HAWLEY. I accept the rebuke.

Mr. TILLMAN. I said I would feel ashamed to even insinuate that there were men here who are so lost to their duties to the men who sent them here and to the States they represent as to be guilty of this, but I am bound to put two and two together. I am compelled, as an honest man, to speak what I believe to be true, and so help me God, unless this be true, then I can not explain it upon any other hypothesis.

Mr. President, to go on with the question as to the Government going into business, who conducts this vast and complex machine of handling the mails, a business ramifying into the remotest corners of this country, covering every State and county and hamlet, a monopoly created by the Government and made self-sustaining almost in spite of the facts brought out here and notorious to everybody that everything else has gone down in the last twenty years except the compensation of these corporations for transporting the mails? The cost of manufacturing steel rails is one-half what it was fifteen years ago, when these contracts were begun, or ten years ago. Everything now, almost, is reduced by reason of the shrinkage in the volume of money; yet the armor-plate trust, created by the money of the Government, acknowledged by the Secretary of the Navy to be a trust, is to have its hands thrust deep into the coffers of the Treasury, into the pockets of the people, and when I get up here and try to expose their iniquities and proclaim my belief that there is dishonesty in it—fraud, peculation—I am twitted. I do not want to say anything harsh. God knows I have got enough vitriol in me now, and I could let out a heap of it. I will try to go on with the question.

On what do I base these charges? Here is the conclusion of the Secretary of the Navy, as to his belief that there is a trust in the manufacture of armor, which I will ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as indicated.

The Secretary read as follows:

During the debate in the Senate upon the armor question at the last session of Congress, one question discussed was whether there was an understanding or agreement among armor manufacturers throughout the world to keep up prices. This was one of the questions I inquired about upon my recent trip to England and France. If there be any such understanding it is of course impossible to prove it, unless some one of those to whom the secret has been confided should betray his trust. My impression is that there is and has been for some time at the least a friendly understanding among armor contractors both in Europe and America as to the prices to be charged for armor. This impression I find prevails abroad, certainly among some of the persons who have inquired into the subject.

Without undertaking in any manner to justify such combinations, there are reasons that would naturally induce armor contractors to agree among themselves as to the prices to be charged to their own government, and also with armor makers abroad as to the prices at which armor is to be furnished to countries which do not manufacture it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Here we have the representative of the Government in the control of the Navy Department, the man charged last winter by this Congress with the duty of investigating this question, and who has done it fully and thoroughly, proclaiming his belief in a combination, and yet he has acted so liberally that after arriving at such a conclusion he allows them 50 per cent profit in order to make the price $400.

What other business in this country, except that of those conducted by trusts and monopolies, now earns 50 per cent, or 30 per cent, or 20 per cent, or 10 per cent? Why are these millionaires to be given 50 per cent profit after we have created the factories and presented them to them? Why, I ask, unless, as I said, it be because they have their "friends" in this Chamber?

Mr. President, if the statement were made, the proof produced that the Treasury was to be looted to the amount of two or three million dollars in a transaction, and there was no doubt about it, and men got up here and said, "We can not help it; we must let this go on; we can not have the Government go into competition in business; we have got a monopoly here, created by ourselves, two corporations in combination; they have the Government down; they have their hands in our pockets, and we can not help it," what other conclusion can be reached but that we are sharing in the booty? Let me ask why we can not help it? We can help it if Senators will rise to a sense of their duty, will consider that the country is looking at us, and we are already considered a body disgraced by reason of our lack of ability to do business according to the dictates of Wall street. We do not hurry up enough. We do not obey orders. The touch of the electric button between Wall street and the Senate has been broken somehow in the last year or two on the financial issue; and the newspapers are turned loose on us like a pack of sleuthhounds to abuse and slander and misrepresent the Senate. If the Senate does this thing in the broad light of day, in the face of the facts produced by its own committee and by our Secretary of the Navy, how can we escape the condemnation of honest men as being the paid agents of these corporations?

But there is another phase of this armor business that is even blacker than this. In 1894 a big complaint was made through the newspapers, a furore created as to frauds in armor plate. The charges were that the Carnegies were not complying with their contract even at the high price we were paying them, $650 a ton; that they were putting off on us spongy material, rotten material, untempered material, as armor plate at that price. The Naval Committee at the other end of the Capitol got a resolution through that body instructing its committee to investigate these questions. They sent for the manufacturers themselves. They did not go out in the highways and byways and look up this informer or that spy, and men who had been turned off by the company; but they sent for the superintendent and the manager of the Carnegie Works and the others connected with the manufacture of those plates and asked them questions, took their own admissions, brought in no other testimony except that which Carnegie's men themselves made; and what did they report? Here are the charges made against the company, which were admitted by the agents of the company who appeared as witnesses before the committee. I want the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, gentlemen, those of you who do not feel so thin-skinned, who know you are honest, who feel that you are the agents only of the people of the States which you represent, please listen.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE CHARGES AGAINST THE COMPANY.

[Congressional Record, August 23, 1894, page 8638.]

First. The plates did not receive the uniform treatment required by the specifications of the contracts. In many cases the treatment was irregular, and in other cases it was practically inefficient. The specifications of the contract of February 28, 1893, required that each plate should be annealed, oil tempered, and again annealed, the last process being an annealing one.

Second. False reports of the treatment of the plates were systematically made by the Government inspectors. This was in violation of paragraph 95 of the circular concerning armor-plate appurtenances, dated January 16, 1893, which was made a part of the contract. Paragraph 95 says:

"The contractor shall state for each article in writing the exact treatment it has received."

The specifications of the contract of November 20, 1890, paragraph 164, says:

"A written statement of work and contractor's tests to be commenced and in progress each day must be furnished to the chief inspector."

Third. No bolts received the double treatment provided for in the specifications of either contract. A report of a double treatment, however, was made to the Government inspectors.

Fourth. Specimens taken from the plates both before and after treatment to ascertain the tensile strength of each plate were stretched without the knowledge of the Government inspectors, so as to increase their apparent tensile strength when actually tested.

Fifth. False specimens taken from other plates were substituted for the specimens selected by the Government inspectors.

Sixth. The testing machine was repeatedly manipulated by order of the superintendent of the armor-plate mill so as to increase the apparent tensile strength of the specimens. These specimens were juggled in measurement so as to increase their apparent ductility.

Seventh. Various specimens selected by the Government inspectors were re-treated without their knowledge before they were submitted to test.

Eighth. Plates selected by the Government inspectors for ballistic test were re-treated with the intention of improving their ballistic resistance, without the knowledge of the Government inspectors. In one case, at least, the conclusion is almost irresistible that the bottom of another plate was substituted for the top half of plate A 619 after it had been selected by the Government and while awaiting shipment to Indian Head. Upon this ballistic test a group of plates containing 348 tons, valued at about $180,000, were to be accepted or rejected. In three cases, at least, the plates selected by the Government inspectors were re-treated in this manner without their knowledge. These ballistic plates represented 779 tons of armor, valued at over $410,000. The groups represented by these three plates had all been submitted for premium of $30 per ton if they passed a more severe test than required for acceptance.

Ninth. In violation of the specifications of the contract, pipes or shrinking cavities, erroneously called blowholes, in the plates were plugged by the contractors and the defects concealed from the Government inspectors. These cavities, in some cases, diminished the resistance and value of the plate.

Tenth. The inspector's stamp was either duplicated or stolen, and used without the knowledge of the Government inspectors.

Eleventh. The Government inspector in inspecting bolts was deceived by means of false templets or gauges.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, those were the charges, and the testimony is there to show that every word of them was admitted and confessed before a committee of the House of Representatives, and that House, without a division—because even the Republicans over there dared not face their constituents for reelection and fight the investigation—passed a resolution to have certain plates taken off the vessels of the Navy and have them put through the necessary test to show the frauds and prove them. Mr. Carnegie was fined by the Secretary of the Navy and, by some hokus-pokus, this glorious President of ours, who, God be thanked, goes out of power in two days from now, remitted that fine. The thieves were caught; they confessed that they had robbed the Government; the House of Representatives sent to you a resolution to have certain plates tested upon your new Navy to prove the frauds which had been practiced upon the Government.

That resolution came over here and went to sleep and died without action, and Mr. Carnegie sports his steam yacht and floats back to Scotland to his game preserve, and writes gold-bug literature to tell the American people how they ought to behave themselves. He can come to Congress and come to the President, and get such recognition as he has had. Why should he not sport steam yachts and live in palaces? Why not? He can conduct private business; yes; oh, yes; but we can not. We can not compete with him, because there is too much red tape here, too much eight-hour law, too much this, too much that, too much t'other created here by political influences to stop the wheels of an honest Administration and to rob the people and make millionaires at the expense of the paupers, who are growing more and more numerous every day. Then, when I get up here and bring these facts to the attention of the Senate and ask the Senators if they do not propose to convict themselves in the eyes of the people of being in collusion with these men, of being only their greedy and paid agents, a Senator gets up here with his thin skin and undertakes to twit me with being insulting and slanderous!

Why was not that resolution passed here and those plates taken off? Why? Why? Here is a list of the ships of our new Navy—our boasted new Navy, the one we love so, and that we pet so. This is only a partial list of the ships the plates on which were confessed to have been plugged up, or not tempered, or some other thing which would weaken them and make them worthless, and not according to contract.

Four on the Monterey; 6 on the Monadnock; 8 on the New York; 4 on the Amphitrite; 3 on the Terror; 3 on the Oregon; 3 on the Olympia; 6 on the Indiana; 4 on the Massachusetts, and so on.

You were asked to cooperate with the House and to have those plates taken off and tested before the Government paid for them, and you would not do it. Why did you not do it? [A pause.] Do not everybody answer at once [laughter], especially you people who think I am slandering the Senate. Why did you not do it?

If we get into a war with Spain or anybody else and those ships of ours go out to meet an honestly constructed vessel of equal strength, a shot from one of those vessels plunging through one of these spongy plates which have been plugged up would send our American vessel with 600 or 800 men to the bottom of the sea by the frauds perpetrated by these pets of the Senate. Then what will your responsibility be?

Now, are you ready to continue these monopolists in their grab game of looting the Treasury at will? You can only help it by authorizing the construction of a plant which will make armor for the Government in case these monopolists will not submit to a decent price. Our committee tells you that $300 will allow them 33 per cent profit, while the Secretary of the Navy, in order to reach $400, has to give them 50 per cent profit and $10 a ton bonus.

Why should you not reduce the price to $300 and say, "Now, you robber rascals, if you do not come here and take this work at a reasonable price, we will make it ourselves, even if it costs $500 or $800 a ton." We would at least have then the satisfaction that the money that is spent would go to the common laborers and mechanics, the "men in blouses," who are going into the ditch with my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], or, I believe, he is to go into the ditch with them. [Laughter.] Now, my friend, if you do not vote to fix the price at $300, we will know that you do not mean to go with them.

The eight-hour law and the red tape in connection with Government administration in conducting its own affairs is such that it costs the Government more. But let us distribute the benefit among the masses and not concentrate it upon these two pets, the Carnegie Company and the people at Bethlehem, who have had a rich, rich, rich reward for their "patriotism" ten years ago in going into the manufacture of armor so that Americans could have a navy constructed by Americans out of American material. You are face to face with it, gentlemen; you can not dodge it. That is the situation.

This committee comes here and says that these frauds were perpetrated, and they proved it by the admissions of Carnegie, and you did nothing about it, and would not even investigate. Carnegie was fined, but the fine was remitted. The two plants were in collusion, and the Secretary of the Navy said so before the committee, and I as an humble member of that committee directed all the inquiries I put to them to bring out the fact that they to-day are practically one corporation. They did not deny it. That is the situation. You can not help yourselves from taking whatever they offer, unless you do now allow the Government to make its own plant. I would not say buy any plant, because there are only two for sale—they are the only two in the country—and we open the doors to buy what we paid for to these people, and we were asked to give them two dollars for every one the plant cost.

They have got it; they have got the title; and now you say "We will buy it." I would rather build a new one. Any honest man who resents robbery and rascality and stealing would rather build a new one than let these thieves have their own way. I would sooner see them become useless if the Government enters into the manufacture. That is my position. I am not afraid to get up here and say what I think and what I believe when you give me facts like these to base my belief on. Nobody from Connecticut or anywhere else is going to terrorize me. I am not thin skinned. I am not afraid of being accused of stealing if I did vote for the subsidy for the Southern mail last night. You men who have been here so long, who are so friendly, so loving and kind in your consideration toward the great wealthy combinations—you are the men who have to face the alternative of voting for a decent reduction in the price of armor and giving us a way out by allowing us to construct a plant if these people will not come down to a decent rate; you have got to vote one way or the other.

You have voted for these people in the past without regard to public opinion, and I dare say you will vote that way to-night. The old guard never surrenders. But there is a young man in the Senate from West Virginia, a weakling, a suckling, like myself, who feels his inability here to get in touch with the business of the Senate, and sits here and sees things ground out; and you get up and quarrel like schoolboys or like geese over some little pitiable $10,000 or $5,000 or $3,000 proposition, and you slide through these millions like greased lightning [laughter]; you do not even discuss them; you do not even ventilate them. Here is one that the Naval Committee brings to your attention. We prove these charges; we prove not only that they are robbing the Government, but that they are practicing fraud upon the Government in the manufacture of armor, and they have not been punished for it. Will you stop it, or will you not? Will you allow the Government to go into the business of manufacturing armor if the Government must pay these people twice what the armor is worth?

I went down to Bethlehem. I followed that thing through from the ore at the beginning to the finished plate at the end. I saw how many men were at work; I saw the machinery; I saw the entire output and how it was handled; and I do not believe it costs $200 a ton to make it. I am ready to take an oath to that, and others of the committee think so, too.

But the Naval Committee tries to be harmonious. We come here with what we think is a reasonable proposition, a liberal proposition, to give these people $300 a ton, and it is left for the Senate to decide now whether we shall reduce the price to $300 or will allow the Government a way out by giving it an opportunity to make its own armor if it can not buy it at that price.

Mr. President, I have only to say in conclusion that I would be glad if somebody would ask some question about this, for I have probably forgotten some points about it.

Mr. STEWART. I would ask the Senator the cost of the same kind of armor in other countries?

Mr. TILLMAN. We found out that all the armor manufacturers in the world are in the same combination that these two American concerns are—the Creusot people in France, the German manufacturers, and the English are all together, each robbing their own Government all in a pile. So that if you go abroad, you will only get on the other prong of the fork. You do not want to go abroad. I would rather pay the American workmen $10 a day for six hours' work, and let this money be distributed among the masses, than allow it to go into the pockets of the combination here. Let us do the Government business through Government agencies, and then these combinations against the Government will be in vain.

(To Mr. QUAY, who had risen.) Now I am ready for the Senator, who is the blouse Senator. [Laughter]. I am afraid he is not with the workingman. I know how he is going to vote.

Mr. QUAY. There is no difficulty about the way I am going to cast my vote on this question; but I merely desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether I understood him to say that this amendment, proposing to limit the cost to $300, comes from the Naval Committee and is offered by the authority of that committee?

Mr. TILLMAN. It comes in this way. The Senator from New Hampshire and all of the committee, except four, were in favor of fixing the limit at $300, but out of consideration for the other members of the committee, and with a desire, as we thought, to be reasonable and to get some action—mind you, we have got to run the gantlet of the House, and everybody knows how the trusts are fortified in that end of the Capitol at this time, with the gag law in full force and effect, with every man manacled and unable to obtain the eye of the Speaker or get a chance to say a word, unless he crawl around on his belly like a worm—for a free American Representative in Congress has got to crawl around like a whipped cur to obtain recognition. You can not do anything over there; and unless the Senate rises to its duty and protects the people, then the steal goes on. The majority of the committee are in favor of $300 a ton.

Mr. QUAY. But they did not direct this amendment to be offered on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. We did not direct it.

Mr. QUAY. That is all I want to know.

Mr. TILLMAN. We did not direct it, because we knew that we had to pass the gantlet of the great moguls of the Appropriations Committee, and we proposed to come in here, where we would have a better chance, and ask you gentlemen to give us some consideration. Let the Naval Committee take charge of the Navy, instead of you gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations managing it, because we do know more about it than you do, although you are all-wise and have been here long enough to have wisdom die with you whenever you go out of here. [Laughter.]

Mr. QUAY. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to lay upon the table the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire reducing the price to be paid for armor from $400 to $300 per ton.

Mr. HALE. The Chair has just stated the amendment which I was about to ask should be stated.

Mr. TILLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is not in the Senate; and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], whom I do not see in the Senate, and therefore I withhold my vote. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WILSON (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. QUAY (after having voted in the affirmative). I did not observe when I voted that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] was out of his seat. I desire to withdraw my vote, being paired with him.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I inquire if the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has not voted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is absent, and I think he has a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If my colleague were present, I understand he would vote "nay."

Mr. BURROWS. I have such an understanding with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] with whom I am paired that I think I am justified in voting; and I vote "nay."

Mr. BATE. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. HARRIS] is detained from the Senate by sickness, and that he is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 36, not voting 42; as follows:

YEAS—12.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Hale,	Murphy,
Allison,	Gibson,	Hawley,	Squire,
Brice,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Wetmore.

NAYS—36.

Allen,	Carter,	Gray,	Platt,
Bacon,	Chandler,	Hill,	Proctor,
Baker,	Chilton,	Kenney,	Shoup,
Bate,	Clark,	Lindsay,	Smith,
Berry,	Daniel,	Lodge,	Stewart,
Brown,	Dubois,	Mills,	Teller,
Burrows,	Faulkner,	Peffer,	Thurston,
Butler,	Frye,	Perkins,	Tillman,
Cannon,	Gallinger,	Pettigrew,	White.

NOT VOTING—42.

Blackburn,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Wis.	Sherman,
Blanchard,	Harris,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Caffery,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Vest,
Call,	Irby,	Nelson,	Vilas,
Cameron,	Jones, Ark.	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jones, Nev.	Pasco,	Walthall,
Davis,	Kyle,	Pritchard,	Warren,
Elkins,	McBride,	Pugh,	Wilson,
Gear,	Mantle,	Quay,	Wolcott.
George,	Martin,	Roach,
Gordon,	Mitchell, Oreg.	Sewell,

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. Only a word in relation to this matter, in behalf of the Committee on Naval Affairs, in answer to my friend from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS].

The Committee on Naval Affairs had this question before them for weeks. They gave it thoughtful and careful inquiry; they heard testimony of those who were engaged in manufacturing armor plate; they had before them the exhaustive, comprehensive, and accurate report of the Secretary of the Navy, a most valuable contribution of information in relation to this subject-matter, and after discussing it for days, and after patiently listening to the testimony and endeavoring to analyze it, we agreed upon an amendment, or the recommendation which my friend from West Virginia characterizes as unheard of, full of incongruities, and not at all worthy of that committee. That report was that a fair price for armor plate would be somewhere between three and four hundred dollars per ton.

I want to say to my friend from West Virginia that when he was Secretary of War, where he so faithfully discharged the duties of that high position, there were thousands of estimates made for doing work which were submitted to him and which had his approval at a high estimate, which, upon advertising for bids, was offered to be done for 20, 30, and 40 per cent less than the estimates made by the corps of Government engineers. I have in mind an instance which came under my observation during his administration, where it was estimated by the Corps of Engineers that the work would cost 15 cents a cubic yard, and later a contract was let for 8 cents a cubic yard for doing the work, and my distinguished friend approved that very proposition.

So your committee believed in making this recommendation that the matter should be left discretionary to the good judgment of the Secretary of the Navy. The amendment simply limits the maximum amount for which he may let a contract for the manufacture of armor plate, and I say to my friend that as business men, with prejudices against none, biased in favor of no one, we endeavored to give the Senate the result of our investigations, which appears in the report, and to that we brought the experience of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], who for four years discharged so ably the duties of the high position of Secretary of the Navy, and I believe, Mr. President, that his report, combined with that of Secretary Herbert, is a most valuable contribution to the information upon this subject.

We have hardly a law upon our statute book to-day which, in a measure, is not one of compromise. One suggests one proposition and another another proposition, and so we argue and reason together, and out of it is finally crystallized a law which has for its object that which is intended by a majority of Congress. So, in that spirit, Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment, that instead of fixing the price at $300 per ton we fix the maximum limit at $350 per ton. I believe if my friend the Senator from New Hampshire will accept the amendment, it may possibly carry, and it will be a solution of this problem, so to speak.

While I admit that the price may be high, while there may be a large margin of profit, we should take into consideration the fact that the plant which is built for the manufacture of armor plate is a special plant, with a special class of machinery for this special purpose, that there is no other customer for the armor plate than the Government, and that we shall want in the next four years, say, only 9,000 tons, while the capacity of the two plants is quadruple that amount. He should take into consideration all those things in fixing the maximum limit at which we will permit the Secretary of the Navy to contract. I therefore suggest to my friend that he accept my amendment making the price $350 per ton instead of $300.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests to the Senator from California that the committee amendment is one amendment, the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is another, and, of course, an amendment in the third degree is not in order. The amendment will be in order after the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is disposed of.

Mr. WHITE. Will the Chair be kind enough to state the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to reduce the amount from $400 to $300.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wish to make a suggestion. I believe it to be impossible for any member of the Senate to solve the question what should be the price of armor plate. There is no expert upon this floor, and there is no one here to-night, nor has there been during the entire progress of this debate, who has been able to submit any facts or figures justifying a final determination of the subject.

There is one thing, however, which must be obvious, and that is that the Government of the United States has been paying more money than it ought to have paid for armor. We have had many statements about the condition of our Navy. We have certainly made much progress, but there is certainly great room for improvement. A year ago when we were preparing to construct torpedo boats which could successfully compete with those of foreign countries I suggested that we ought to manufacture one in the great canyon of the Colorado, because I felt that there a torpedo boat would be safe. Admiral Walker, one of our most distinguished officers, a gentleman in whom we have the greatest confidence, testified only last year before the Coast Defense Committee of the Senate that in the event of a war between this Republic and England or France or a similarly equipped power, our Navy would have no other refuge than escape upon mudbanks. Otherwise it would be captured or destroyed. That is the situation we must confront.

Here in this debate we are treated to a discussion of the value of armor plate. We are now met with a situation involving financial deficiencies. We can not meet the great armaments of Europe, and we might as well content ourselves with a solution of matters pertaining to immediate conditions rather than to expend money upon situations which are absolutely irrelevant to the matters regarding which we all consider it necessary that we should legislate.

I wish to refer Senators to Senate Document No. 152, regarding the condition of our torpedo-boat armament. I do not believe that it is necessary to spend any more time in attempting to solve matters regarding our present armament, but that it would be better to adhere to the suggestions made by the committee rather than to engage in disputations regarding subjects concerning which we have no information.

Mr. HALE. I hope we may have a vote now. The last expression of the Senate was very significant on the general subject; I do not think it worth while to antagonize that, and I hope we may have a vote either upon the $300 proposition, if that is maintained, or the $350 proposition, so that the conferees may be instructed by the Senate. It is a very late hour, and I desire very much that we shall get through with the bill to-night.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is immaterial to me whether we first vote on the larger sum, $350, or on the three-hundred-dollar proposition. If Senators prefer it, a vote can be taken upon the three-hundred-and-fifty-dollar proposition. I can not, however, but insist that $300 is an ample sum as the maximum for the price of armor. The question is a simple one after all. It grows out of the fact that there is no such thing as competition in armor either in this country or in Europe. If it were not for that fact, we should simply fix a maximum, and the proposals offered after competition in open market would settle the question what we ought to pay. But there can be no competition. The only two concerns which can compete with each other have admittedly entered into combination. Now, what shall we do? Simply fix, according to our best judgment, upon such information as we can get, a maximum sum, and if the Secretary of the Navy can not make contracts at or below that sum, then no contracts can be made.

Mr. President, with the price given to Russia by one of these companies at $240, it seems to me $300 is enough, but after all, the judgment of Senators will be influenced somewhat by the question, what is the quantity of armor that is to be contracted for?

Mr. SQUIRE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not at this moment. A year ago the House of Representatives sent a proposition for four battle ships over to us. We reduced it to three. We have authorized the hulls of the ships to be built. We delayed the contracting for the armor. The bill comes over to us from the House this year without provision for any battle ship in it, and we have, it must be admitted, no knowledge as to whether this Government will go on and build any more battle ships after these three. Therefore every Senator must decide for himself what is a fair maximum price for the armor for these three ships and vote accordingly. For my part, I adhere to the figures given in my amendment, but I am entirely willing that a vote shall be taken upon the three-hundred-and-fifty-dollar amendment, if that is desired by the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator, for the time being, withdraw his amendment for $300, and let us take a vote on the $350 proposition, which is the natural and parliamentary process—on the highest sum first.

Mr. BERRY. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not withdraw his amendment, and that we shall have a vote on the $300 proposition. That is the pending question, and I think we ought to have a vote on it according to the parliamentary usage.

Mr. CHANDLER. What is the parliamentary rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless otherwise directed by the Senate, the Chair would hold upon a proposition of this character that the vote should be taken upon the lowest amount, $300.

Mr. HALE. That is the first amendment, undoubtedly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the amendment first in order, unless the Senate otherwise directs.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from New Hampshire can withdraw the amendment, and let the other one be voted on.

Mr. SQUIRE. I wish to direct a question to the Senator from New Hampshire, who seems to be very well informed on this subject. He has stated that a foreign government made a contract, I think I understood him to say, for $240 a ton, and I would ask the Senator if he is not advised of the fact that since the period at which the Government of Russia—if that is the one to which he refers—made the contract at $240, that Government has made a contract with the same firm at a much higher price?

Mr. CHANDLER. I will answer the question by saying yes; but that is not all of the answer. After the American manufacturers went abroad and took this contract, they forced themselves into the European combine, and with all the armor manufacturers of the world in one combine, there is no such thing as competition in armor anywhere on the face of the broad earth.

Mr. SQUIRE. Does the Senator mean to insist that the combine was effected before this subsequent contract?

Mr. CHANDLER. After it, in my belief.

Mr. HALE. After that contract?

Mr. SQUIRE. It was after the last contract was effected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not understand that to be true.

Mr. SQUIRE. I understand it is, and that if there is any combine it was subsequent to the contract.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am inclined to think now the Senator is right.

Mr. SQUIRE. I think I am correct. Therefore I do not think it is right for the Senate to assume that price of $240 should be the criterion.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. I desire to say just a word.

Mr. HALE. I wish to have a vote, but I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. I have no desire to detain the Senate, but there is one fact which I believe should be stated before the vote is taken, in order that Senators may approach the determination of the question not as a matter of guesswork, but upon a substantial basis. The question as to whether or not $300 is a proper limit, or $350 or $400, is, upon an examination of the testimony and of the reports which have been made by the Secretary of the Navy and by the Naval Affairs Committee, dependent upon what is considered to be a proper profit upon a reasonably ascertained expense. In other words, the investigations which have been made show with reasonable certainty—with as much certainty as we can ascertain it without the examination of the books—that the cost of labor and material in the construction of the armor plate is about $200 per ton.

Now, the way in which this difference as to the amount to be paid arises is that there is a difference in the minds of Senators as to how much profit should be allowed upon that. In the case of the Secretary of the Navy, he arrives at the figures in this way: Assuming $200 as the cost of labor and material, he adds $50 per ton as the cost of maintenance, and then assumes that by reason of the peculiar circumstances of the case the parties should have 50 per cent profit upon the total expenditure. In other words, we have $250, and 50 per cent added to that brings it up to nearly $400. That is the way the Secretary of the Navy gets at it.

The Senator from New Hampshire, on the contrary, says there ought not to be 50 per cent profit, and he reduces it to 33 per cent, and also by reducing the amount allowed for maintenance he brings the price down to $300. Others, by allowances between these two extremes, reach the sum of $350. So it is not a matter of ignorance on the part of the committee; it is not a matter of guesswork, as was intimated and suggested, and even charged, by the Senator from West Virginia, but it is a question of difference in different minds as to the amount of profit which should be allowed upon an expenditure about which there is no very great difference between any of the parties.

Mr. STEWART. May I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. In regard to the maintenance, does it require $50 to maintain the plant while 1 ton of armor plate is being manufactured?

Mr. BACON. I am not now going into that question.

Mr. STEWART. Is that the estimate of the cost?

Mr. BACON. Fifty dollars is allowed for maintenance of the plant, in order to keep it in the same condition, so that by the time it has run its period of life the amount thus paid will have kept it in a condition of efficiency.

I did not rise to detain the Senate with a discussion of who is right and who is wrong, but I thought it proper that the Senate should have clearly before it this fact, that is conceded—I will not say conceded, but almost conceded—that the amount of the cost of labor and material is about $200, and the increase over and above that is the question of what profit should be allowed.

Mr. SQUIRE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Washington will allow me to finish my statement, I will yield to a question later. Believing as I do that 50 per cent profit is too much; believing that 33 per cent is ample——

Mr. TILLMAN. Thirty-three and a third per cent is too much.

Mr. BACON. Concede it, if you believe that it is too much, but there are peculiar circumstances. Here is a plant which is valuable only for this purpose. Here is a plant which can be used for no other purpose, and which must remain partially idle if we do not give it work up to its full capacity.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will not get me into a discussion as to whether it is right or wrong. I did not rise for that purpose.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to ask the Senator——

Mr. BACON. I do not want to detain the Senate by going into that question.

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator refuse to yield?

Mr. BACON. Yes; because I did not rise to discuss the question. It has been sufficiently discussed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I wish to ask——

Mr. BACON. I decline to yield for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield to anyone.

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir; to anyone. I simply rose for the purpose of calling one single fact to the attention of the Senate and not for the purpose of discussing the merits of the case or the details of it in any particular. This fact is well known to members of the committee.

It is well known, I have no doubt, to other Senators who have investigated it; but by reason of the remarks made by the Senator from West Virginia it might have appeared that the arrival at these various amounts was a mere matter of caprice or guesswork, and I thought it was due to the Senate and due to the Committee on Naval Affairs that there should be presented the basis upon which this conclusion and the various conclusions have been reached, in order that each Senator, when he comes to vote upon the question as to whether he will favor $300 or $350 or $400, may have an intelligent basis upon which to rest his vote.

Mr. SQUIRE. It is right on this point that I desire to get information a little more accurately, and I do not desire to detain the Senate.

As one who has been engaged for some years in practical manufacturing, it so happens that I am familiar with the fact that manufacturers are accustomed to charge up to cost a certain percentage upon the aggregate of labor and capital. If the labor and capital entering into the cost of armor plate amounts to $200 a ton, my desire is to know whether any estimate has been made for what are called the miscellaneous or running expenses, which are just as much a part of cost as any part of it. It is customary with large manufacturers to charge from 20 to 40 per cent upon the aggregate cost of labor and material for what are called running expenses. Now, if you figure it at 25 per cent upon $200 as the aggregate cost of labor and materials, it would be $50 a ton, which would be just as much a part of the cost as the labor and materials. Therefore the aggregate cost would be $250. When you come to estimate your profit, you would have to estimate it upon $250 rather than upon $200.

I wish to state, in conclusion, that I believe there is a great deal of humbug upon this red-flag business, the whole business of an outcry against manufacturers in reference to Government work. I do not believe these people are making the money that is charged home to them. I believe it is all humbug; it is nonsense, and it is simply shaking this red flag here and trying to drive people to vote in a certain way, as has been done to-night. It is not right; it is not decent; it is not proper.

I believe in giving men manufacturing for the Government just as fair a chance as any other class of men. They have gone into this business decently, honestly, and even upon importunity. Let us give them a fair chance. I have no interest in the world in this matter, but I want to see fair play. I think we should stimulate this work rather than to discourage and disparage it or make it disreputable; and you are making it disreputable by this discussion here for the purpose to-night. I am very sorry that these words were uttered here to-night from my friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I think in his enthusiasm, in his desire to do what he believes to be just, he has pursued this matter too far. I think he has done injustice to the Senate and injustice to the manufacturers of this country. I believe they should have a fair price.

I do not believe in giving them an extraordinary profit or anything of the kind, but I believe it to be true that the manufacturers engaged in manufacturing war material for this country during and since the war have, as a rule, gone down into ruin. They have not profited by it permanently. I know of no concern that has been engaged in the business of manufacturing war material that has survived until to-day except the Colt Company, and that company did it out of profits made by investments in other directions.

As a rule, these companies have perished simply because of their desire to build up great plants and benefit the Government in time of great emergency. I believe that fact should be taken into consideration, and that in future operations of the Government we should endeavor to stimulate instead of to discourage the work on the part of private companies.

Mr. HALE. After the eloquent and convincing speech of the Senator from Washington, which has settled this question, let us have a vote.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will allow the Senator to have a vote in three minutes, but I wish to say another word.

Mr. HALE. I am afraid the Senator will not stick to his three minutes. I will watch him.

Mr. TILLMAN. If I do not get under somebody's skin again, I pledge you I will do it.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator, after the vote so overwhelmingly in his favor, ought to be content to have a vote now. However, I will watch him and see that he does not go beyond three minutes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Look at the clock.

Mr. HALE. I will.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I want to make a few points in regard to wear and tear or cost of maintenance of these plants. They are as massive structures in the way of manufacturing buildings as any I have ever seen. They are nothing but stone, brick, iron, and steel; and materials of that kind do not wear out easily. Therefore the wear and tear is more than provided for, amply, doubly provided for, in the estimate of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The next is why should we give these people 33⅓ per cent profit on a plant which the Government has paid for? We have paid every dollar and doubly paid every dollar of the cost of these manufacturing plants. None of us can make 33⅓ per cent, in our business at least. We poor devils down South are glad to get 3 or 4 or 5 per cent, and lots of us are not getting any per cent. Why do these millionaires ask and why do you desire to give them such exorbitant profits? What is the hurry here? You have two vessels under contract. You say that the Treasury is bankrupt. You know the country is bankrupt, or almost on the verge of it. You will have to increase taxation in spite of yourselves, and the next Congress is to be here in two weeks to do it. Are we going to continue the construction of ships, when, as the Senator from California has pointed out, we have not a single harbor fortified so that our ships can retire to a place of safety, and get away from England's or France's or Germany's navy? They would be at the mercy of any foreign country with which we might get into war, except it might be Spain or Italy or Turkey, or some third-rate power.

With that fact staring you in the face and no necessity for hurry, why can you not let the new Secretary of the Navy, the man who is to come in with the representative of progress and prosperity, act? Why not give him a chance and see what he can do? Why should you not let there be a contrast as between the so-called Democratic Administration and bona fide Republican Administration.

Mr. GRAY. Time!

Mr. TILLMAN. The three minutes are up. Let us give the Government a chance, too. The Senator from Washington wants us to give these poor, poverty-stricken manufacturers—Carnegie and the Bethlehem Company—a chance. Let us give the United States a chance, or rather let us give the poverty-stricken taxpayers a chance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, to insert three hundred in place of four hundred dollars.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand the committee amendment on page 50 is disposed of, and not the one on page 51.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not the one on page 51.

Mr. HALE. The amendment on page 51 is the next amendment, and it is now in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment on page 51.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to inquire whether it was the understanding or agreement that we are to dispose of the committee amendments before any others are offered?

Mr. HALE. That was the agreement.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I want to say, in this connection, that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to reduce the amount for armor plate from $3,210,000 to $2,407,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment would be in order.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will do so, for the reason that the reduction from $400 to $300 a ton necessitates this reduction in the appropriation. The committee of the House knew just how many tons of plate it would take for these three battle ships, and they multiplied it by $400 a ton.

Mr. HALE. I think we might as well take a vote on that amendment now, because it is connected with the last amendment, and it naturally follows.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I move, therefore, that the words "three million two hundred and ten thousand dollars" be stricken out and the words "two million four hundred and seven thousand five hundred dollars" be inserted in their place.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 51, which has been read twice.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it is worth the while, so far as I am concerned, to insist upon the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I hope the Senator will not insist upon it.

Mr. HALE. So far as I am concerned, I am willing that it shall be withdrawn.

Mr. NELSON. No; let us have a vote upon it.

Mr. HALE. If the Senate desires to vote upon it, I can not help it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 51, which has twice been read.

Mr. HALE. Let us have a vote. The amendment has been read.

Mr. NELSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GORMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. STEWART. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. GORMAN. It is to buy a plant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment on page 51 has been read twice. The Chair will have it read again if the Senator insists upon it.

Mr. PALMER. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are called for upon agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Did the Chair intimate that the ayes had it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not intimate anything about it.

Mr. HAWLEY and Mr. HALE. Let the vote be put viva voce again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. GORMAN. I call for a division.

Mr. QUAY and Mr. HAWLEY called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BACON. I simply desire to suggest that we can afford to let this stand. We are going to have an extra session in two weeks, and we will find out if this provision is necessary. I think with the disposition of the subject that has been made we can very well afford to rest with what has been accomplished to-night.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust that will be done, and that this provision will not be inserted.

Mr. PALMER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. LINDSAY. If we abandon this amendment, I do not think we can accomplish anything to-night.

Mr. BACON. Oh, yes.

Mr. LINDSAY. We put ourselves at the mercy of this combine by enabling them to refuse to furnish armor.

Mr. GORMAN. Suppose they do? We can wait a year.

Mr. LINDSAY. If the theory be true that there can be no competition, this is a case in which the Government ought to manufacture its own armor plate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now, unless Senators wish to debate it, is, How shall this question be decided? The question has been put. The Chair has intimated that he believes the ayes have it. If that be questioned——

Mr. GORMAN. We do question it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course Senators have a right to call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays have been called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and Mr. ALDRICH responded to his name.

Mr. BACON. It does not cut off debate because the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY and others. The roll call has commenced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had already decided the question. Then the yeas and nays were called for, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and called one name, and he will now proceed.

The Secretary resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. TILLMAN. I think there is confusion in the minds of Senators as to what we are voting on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to Senators that they look at the bill on page 51. It has been twice read. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN. The amendment which provides for the purchase of an armor plant in the event that the Secretary of the Navy can not buy armor at $300 a ton?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is precisely it. The Secretary will proceed with the roll call.

The Secretary resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD].

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] who has not voted. I therefore withhold my vote. I should vote "nay" if I had an opportunity.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I ask that this announcement may apply to all the remaining votes taken to-night.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. NELSON (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. NELSON. Then I withdraw my vote. I am paired with him.

Mr. HALE. I hope Senators, as this is not at all a party question, will vote in order to make a quorum, unless they feel constrained by their pairs.

Mr. NELSON. Then I will let my vote stand, upon those considerations.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], and withhold my vote.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I transfer the pair that I have with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. PRITCHARD] to my colleague, the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], and will vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GORDON. I am paired with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

Mr. QUAY. Following the suggestion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], I will take the responsibility of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. PALMER. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL. To make a quorum, I will vote. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allen,	Chandler,	Lodge,	Stewart,
Berry,	Daniel,	Mills,	Thurston,
Blanchard,	Dubois,	Nelson,	Tillman,
Brown,	Gallinger,	Peffer,	Warren,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Maine to the committee's amendment on page 50, striking out lines 18 and 20:

And provided further, That no portion of this armor shall be purchased until it has all been contracted for.

That amendment has not yet been agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Let that be agreed to now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is agreed to, without objection.

Mr. GORMAN. I move to strike out the further proviso beginning in line 20, page 50, down to the end of the page. Let it be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, on page 50, beginning in line 20 with the word "And," the following:

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to contract with either or all of the builders of the hulls and machinery of those vessels, or with any one or more bidders, for the furnishing of the entire amount of said armor, if he shall deem it for the best interest of the Government.

Mr. GORMAN. Striking out this provision leaves the law stand precisely as it has been since the beginning of the construction of the new Navy, letting contracts be made separately for armor and for vessels. It is my impression that under this provision we may nullify all the Senate has done to-night.

Mr. HALE. I hope the proviso will not be stricken out. It gives no additional discretion, but it does give the Secretary an opportunity to make a contract for the entire ship.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me one minute? Will he consent to an amendment in the nature of limiting the price?

Mr. HALE. The price is already limited in what we have done before. That is not changed. There is no discretion given. But if you strike out the proviso, you forbid the Secretary to make, if he chooses, a contract with one man for the whole ship and oblige him to fight it out with the contractors for armor. That is the object of the proviso. The Naval Committee is in favor of that. It gives the opportunity to make a contract for the whole ship, and then let the contractor for the whole ship fight it out with the armor men and keep them down. The Secretary of the Navy at one time determined upon this policy. He was importuned by the armor contractors and changed his policy, and the committee has put it on, in order that, if the Secretary believes it to be right, he may make a complete contract and then let the armor men fight it out with the contractor.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have examined it and I am satisfied you are correct. It does not allow him to pay more than $300 per ton.

Mr. HALE. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. SMITH. I should like to agree with the Senator from Maine on that proposition, but on reading it I can not see any clause whereby we are prevented from paying any sum of money for armor plate.

Mr. HALE. Then the Senator may put in, if he chooses, "by the Secretary of the Navy, subject to the conditions hereinbefore prescribed." But that is not needed.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator's proposition is not possible, and he is practically annulling by it just what the Senate has already done.

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator that the Senate has taken a great step in advance and the Senator has been in favor of it. If the Senator thinks and believes that this proviso ought to go out, I will make no further point. I tell him, however, that, in the end, he is fighting against his own proposition.

Mr. SMITH. I would rather have it go out.

Mr. HALE. All right.

Mr. SMITH. I agree with the Senator from West Virginia that I would rather not have any ships built than have them built under the present conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proviso is a part of the original House bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. GORMAN. I move to strike it out.

Mr. HALE. Of course the Senator from Maryland has moved to strike it out. He does not want the Secretary to have any discretion to contract for the whole vessel.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Maine ought not to make that statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa has the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely wished to make one suggestion respecting this proviso. We have been told in the debate to-night that there are but two factories where armor can be made, and we have had a broad proposition here for the Government to build a factory of its own. If the proviso has any value, it is of value to enlarge the range of competition.

Mr. HALE. Of course it is.

Mr. ALLISON. I had supposed for one that it was a healthy proviso in the view that if there is a combination among the producers of armor in this country and in foreign countries whereby they can adjust the price, we provide here for some other people who can bid for this work.

Mr. SMITH. What I ask is why you should have other people to bid for ships. You have only the Government to bid for armor, and that is the price the armor-plate men would give the shipbuilders. You have no right to make the price less than they now give the Government. So I can not see where there is anything to be gained by the argument of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I have understood in this debate, although I have not mingled in it, as one reason why we should establish on the part of the United States a factory for the construction of armor, that the hulls and machinery of these vessels have already been contracted for, and that we must rush in pell mell here and build a new factory in order to get armor to put upon these hulls and attach to this machinery. This proviso applies only to the vessels which have been already contracted for so far as the hulls and machinery are concerned. Now, supposing it should turn out that one of the contractors for the hulls of these vessels is willing to contract for this armor, and the two monopolies that we have heard so much about here are not willing to contract, do we not then enable a third or a fourth bidder to come in and contract for this armor?

Mr. HALE. That is exactly the proposition of the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit, therefore, to the Senator from Maryland that we are putting a healthful proviso in here to enlarge the number of people who can bid.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ALLISON. And although confessedly there is a profit of $100 or $150 a ton, we have been told here to-night that nobody will or can bid for that except those two concerns.

Mr. SMITH. I hope the Senator from Iowa will answer me this question.

Mr. ALLISON. If I can, I will.

Mr. SMITH. I ask, if there are but two armor-plate factories in this country—and that they have both entered into a combination, and that they have a monopoly nobody denies—how can you get more than two armor-plate bids if there are not more than two places in the country where that armor is made? That is what I want to know?

Mr. ALLISON. That statement has been made here, but it is just possible that somebody else may have machinery to manufacture the armor.

I will ask my friend from New Jersey what possible harm can result from this proviso, when we have limited the price to $300 a ton, which, according to some of the arguments we have listened to to-night, will give a profit upon the armor. If that be true, will not somebody have enterprise and genius enough in the course of six or eight months to attach to his present plant something which will enable him to build a portion of the armor required, and in that way we should partially get rid of the tremendous monopoly of which we have heard so much to-night.

Mr. SQUIRE. I have a suggestion to make, which I think will be acceptable.

Mr. SMITH. I supposed I had the floor, but I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. SQUIRE. I think the suggestion will be acceptable to the Senator from New Jersey as well as to the chairman of the committee. I propose to insert after the word "armor," in line 24, the words "at a rate not to exceed $300 per ton." Would not that be acceptable to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. ALLISON. That would cover the whole question.

Mr. SMITH. I do not want any ambiguity whatever about this matter. I want to know that we are going to pay so much for the armor, and no more. I am not willing that the manufacturers of armor shall sell the armor to the builders of our vessels at a less price than they sell to us. It seems to me it is just frittering away our rights and doing no good, so far as our Government is concerned.

Mr. STEWART. I wish to make a remark, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. In case it is provided that only $300 a ton shall be paid, suppose when the builders of a vessel go to the armor-plate companies and find that they have got to pay $400 a ton, their bid for the construction of the vessel would be on that basis, thus destroying the effect of the act that has been passed, because they will find out what they can get the armor plate for before they do the work, and the bids of every one of them will be upon the basis of $400 a ton. That is the way they must necessarily do. That will destroy the limitation put upon it.

Mr. SMITH. That is precisely so. That is my argument.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will my friend from New Jersey allow me to ask him, or will the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. I would rather the Senator would ask the question of the Senator from New Jersey, although I am perfectly willing to answer it if I can.

Mr. TILLMAN. I will ask the Senator this question: The Senate has just refused to pass the amendment suggested by the Committee on Appropriations, to allow the purchase, leasing, or building of an armor plant, and it has limited the price of armor to $300 a ton. Now, there are only two armor manufactories in the country. If you take from the Secretary of the Navy the power given in this bottom line that you are now trying to strike out, then you leave us only one way to complete those two vessels under contract, whereas, if you leave that in, the Secretary can have the influence of a private firm or person on another private firm or company to get decent treatment, instead of the Government being at the mercy of a monopoly.

Mr. HALE. That is it exactly.

Mr. TILLMAN. And give him a chance to contract with the same men who have contracted for the hulls to furnish the armor, and if these grand seigniors, who have grown so fat, will not come down in their prices somebody else can go into the business of making armor, and thereby the Government will get the advantage of competition, and we can make another fellow so fat that he will not give the Government any consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. The question the Senator from South Carolina asked me was a better statement of my argument than I could have made myself.

Mr. TILLMAN. That is a great compliment, coming from the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH. It is getting rather late to discuss this question at any length, Mr. President, but it seems to me that it is very plain that there is nothing to be gained by giving the Secretary any such authority. We have but two armor-plate factories in the country, and we are told that there is just as much competition among the shipbuilders as amongst the armor-plate manufacturers. I know nothing about that myself; but if that be true, what is to prevent them from paying $500 for every ton of armor plate and adding that to the price at which they are going to build a vessel for. It does seem to me that that is a good business proposition. To my mind, this is simply one way of undoing what we have done. You say in one place to the Secretary of the Navy, "You can not buy armor plate at more than $300 per ton," and then you say in another place that he can practically do as he pleases.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator would be right if, by any possibility, it could be inferred that in contracting under this last clause, the Secretary could pay more than $300 a ton; but by no possibility can that construction be given to this clause. If there is any such possibility, then the limitation ought to be added.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say "at a price not exceeding $300 per ton."

Mr. SMITH. I will accept that.

Mr. HALE. Let those words be put in after the word "armor." The language of the bill is:

That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to contract with either or all of the builders of the hulls and machinery of those vessels, or with any one or more bidders, for the furnishing of the entire amount of said armor.

Then insert, after the word "armor," the words "at a cost not exceeding the aforesaid $300 per ton."

Mr. HAWLEY. I want to make a suggestion there. What do we care what a shipbuilder pays for his armor, if he furnishes a ship at a certain rate? It is his private contract.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Secretary of the Navy is doing this.

Mr. SMITH. I suppose if he had to pay $700 a ton for armor it would cost the Government more to buy the ship than if the armor cost but $300 a ton. That is the way it looks to my mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "armor," in line 24 on page 51, it is proposed to insert, "at a cost not exceeding the aforesaid $300 per ton."

Mr. HALE. That is right.

Mr. THURSTON. I do not wish to detain the Senate, Mr. President, and I should not speak on this amendment except for the fact that I endeavored to say a word before the last vote was taken.

I wish to make the prediction now that the striking out of the amendment on page 51 has undone all the beneficial effects of the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER]. In my judgment the striking out of the amendment on page 51 has emasculated the whole provision. It leaves the country at the mercy of the armor-plate manufacturers, and, in my judgment, with that provision stricken out, the armor-plate manufacturers of this country will refuse to contract at a rate of $300 per ton.

Mr. HALE. And all the more because it is fixed at $300.

Mr. THURSTON. And all the more because it is fixed at $300; and we shall simply be met at the next session of Congress with a report that we are unable to buy the armor for our present vessels at the rate of $300 per ton; and that will be used at the next session of Congress with all the power and force behind it, the armor-plate combination, to compel Congress to raise the price.

Mr. ALLISON. Or build a factory.

Mr. THURSTON. Or build a factory.

In my judgment, the only power in this bill to compel a contract at the price of $300 or less was the alternative provision to build a factory and make the armor ourselves if they do not come to our terms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after line 25, on page 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, after line 25, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to purchase the right to manufacture and use the boat-detaching device invented by L. J. M. Boyd, of Annapolis, Md., patented under letters patent No. 374929, of December 20, 1887, and to pay for the past use of said device by the Navy Department, $25,000.

Mr. SMITH. I ask whether that amendment was before the Committee on Naval Affairs and was reported favorably by that committee?

Mr. GORMAN. No; it was not.

Mr. SMITH. It seems to me rather a singular procedure that a matter of this kind should come up in Committee of the Whole without ever having been before the Committee on Naval Affairs. Is it customary that such amendments as this should come from the Appropriations Committee? I hope the amendment will be laid over, unless there is some good reason why it should be passed to-night. I am sure, as a member of the Naval Committee, that the proposition has never been before us, and it is a matter of which the members of that committee should have some knowledge.

Mr. CHANDLER. Unless the Senator from Maryland can show something to indicate that the amendment is in order, I shall make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I frankly stated that the amendment had not been before the Naval Committee, as my friend from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who is a member of that committee, probably knows. I offered the amendment. It is not a new matter, but it is one which four years ago was directed to be investigated by the Navy Department, and was investigated by the Department and reported upon by it. The Senator can make the point of order if he desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. NELSON. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 6, on page 52.

The SECRETARY. After line 6, on page 52, it is proposed to insert:

That the President of the United States be authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint the leader of the United States Marine Band as a first lieutenant of marines not in line of promotion, with rank, pay, and emoluments of officers of that class.

Mr. NELSON. The amendment which I have offered is really Senate bill 3368. It has been favorably reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy. I ask to have the report of the committee and the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, both of which are very short, read.

Mr. HALE. I think the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. NELSON. I have the floor at present. The point of order can not take me off my feet.

Mr. HALE. No, it can not.

Mr. NELSON. I ask to have the report read as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the report as a part of the remarks of the Senator from Minnesota.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. CAMERON February 19, 1897.

Mr. HALE. I will withdraw the point of order if the Senator will withdraw the request to have the report read.

Mr. NELSON. I will withdraw the request for the reading.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I renew the point of order.

Mr. NELSON. Then I insist upon the reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the report will be proceeded with.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3368) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint and confer the rank of first lieutenant of marines upon the leader of the United States

Marine Band, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to make the following report:

The committee recommend the passage of the bill for the reasons set forth in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, as follows:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT,
"Washington, January 29, 1897.

"SIR: The Department has carefully considered Senate bill 3368, entitled 'A bill to authorize the President of the United States to appoint and confer the rank of first lieutenant of marines upon the leader of the United States Marine Band,' and respectfully returns the same with the recommendation that the rank conferred be that of second lieutenant, instead of first lieutenant. The band is a part of and attached to the Marine Corps. It is a military organization, and it is proper that its leader should not only have military authority, but also a rank that would entitle him to respect and consideration, and such pay as will be sufficient at all times to secure the services of a first-class musician and leader.

"Professor Fanciulli is such a musician. His services are very desirable, and it is feared that the Department will lose him unless this bill, or some other, increasing his compensation, be passed. The increased pay which this bill carries is desirable, but even with such increase he would not be receiving as much as he could probably command elsewhere. The rank proposed to be conferred by the bill, which in itself is small, would nevertheless add dignity to his place and tend to give him that increased control over the musicians under him which is so essential to efficiency.

"The former leader of the band, Professor Sousa, left it because he could do far better elsewhere. The Department was very fortunate in securing the services of the present incumbent of the place, but it can not always expect to be as successful as in this instance, and it is very desirable that an official who is as competent and reliable as Professor Fanciulli should be retained.

"This band, by reason of its location and the peculiar duties it is called upon to perform at the capital of the country, has become, and it is hoped will always be looked upon as par excellence, the national band. In other countries, as in Italy, Austria, and Germany, where music is most highly esteemed, the leaders of Government bands are commissioned officers, and some of these band leaders not only enjoy rank, but receive, even in those countries where wages are very much lower than here, far greater compensation than does the leader of the Marine Band.

"I desire to recommend most earnestly the enactment of this bill with the amendment suggested into a law. It carries but little money and I feel that it will tend greatly to promote the continued efficiency and excellence of this organization, to which our musical people now look with constantly increasing pride and admiration.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully,
"H. A. HERBERT, Secretary.

"Hon. J. D. CAMERON,
"Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
"United States Senate, Washington, D. C."

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say just a word. I will not take up the time of the Senate. I sincerely hope the Senator from Louisiana will withdraw his point of order and that we may have a vote upon the amendment. The leader of the band is an expert musician, a very skillful man. He has simply the rank of a private. This simply aims to put him in a position where he can have military control of the band and gives him a fair salary. His office is not to be in the line of promotion. He is always to be a second lieutenant. I trust the amendment will be allowed to stand in favor of good discipline and good music right here at the nation's capital.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, there is a point in favor of the amendment, and that is that the leader of the band is in command of 25 or 30 regularly enlisted men in the service. They can be made soldiers very easily at any time. They can throw away their musical instruments and fight.

Mr. NELSON. The whole band is composed of enlisted men, I might say, and as the Senator from Connecticut says, there are 25 or 30 men in the band.

Mr. SQUIRE. Is not this establishing a bad precedent?

Mr. NELSON. The amendment is not subject to the point of order. It stands in the position of an amendment recommended by a committee, the bill having been reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs and being on the Calendar and in order.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is very clear that the amendment is subject to the point of order, and to a presiding officer with the skill of the present occupant of the chair no argument to show that is necessary.

It also sets a very bad precedent upon an appropriation bill to be creating additional offices. Hardly an appropriation bill passes Congress but that it adds a number of United States officials. It is already known throughout the country that Federal officials constitute a large army, and this way of increasing their number upon appropriation bills should not be tolerated by the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to make a single suggestion. It does not increase the number a single man. They are all enlisted men now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is very much in favor of the proposition of the Senator from Minnesota in the shape of a bill, but the amendment is not in order upon the appropriation bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the provision on page 48, for torpedo boats. It seems to be contemplated that the Secretary of the Navy can get three torpedo boats for $800,000. I know the Senator has put it "not more than three torpedo boats," but it is not possible to get a torpedo boat of sufficient size and speed for one-third of $800,000, and I put that fact upon record as my opinion. I should much prefer to have the Senate put it at two rather than to get three torpedo boats in the bill with an implication that the Secretary of the Navy ought to get those three torpedo boats for $800,000. It is suggesting to the Secretary that he shall build that class of torpedo boats of which he can build three for $800,000.

Mr. HALE. Hardly. I put that in advisedly, in order to leave it to the Secretary of the Navy. If he thinks $800,000 can be better expended on two boats, he can do it. If he thinks $800,000 can be better expended on three, he can do that. I prefer to leave it to him.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator whether the Secretary would feel at liberty to expend the $800,000 upon two torpedo boats instead of three as the language now stands?

Mr. HALE. He would. We had just such a provision last year, in which we left the limit in the appropriation and left the number to the Secretary.

Mr. SQUIRE. I suggest that it would be wise on the subject of torpedo boats to amend the amendment, and I call the attention of the Senate especially to this point, by inserting the words that at least one of the torpedo boats shall be built on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. HALE. As there may be but two torpedo boats, the committee did not think it was worth while to do that. They are small matters.

Mr. SQUIRE. They are very important matters, I beg to assure the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. He can do that in his own discretion. There is not enough in it to put in that provision.

Mr. SQUIRE. It is well known that the American Navy is sadly deficient in torpedo boats. If there is one element of deficiency in our Navy as at present constituted, it is in regard to torpedo boats.

It is a fact well known to those who have studied the question at all that we are practically without torpedo boats unless some boat has been recently completed, and we have at present an arrangement for building three, I believe.

Mr. HALE. We have twenty-one or twenty-two already started.

Mr. SQUIRE. You have only three practically. I beg to suggest to the Senator that one of these should be built on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. HALE. I do not think on a small matter of this kind such a provision should be inserted. When we come to build large ships we always do that, but on these little craft it is hardly worth while to put on such a provision.

Mr. SQUIRE. The people of my State are deeply interested in the building of a torpedo boat on Puget Sound, which is nearly completed, and the constructors of that vessel have been highly commended for the efficiency of their work, so far as it has progressed. They ought to have a chance to bid.

Mr. HALE. They will have the same chance that everybody else will have. It is safe to leave that to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SQUIRE. I think it ought to be recognized in the bill. Why not recognize it in the bill? We have always recognized it as to ships of war.

Mr. HALE. They are very large matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington make a motion?

Mr. SQUIRE. After the word "party," in line 21, I move to insert the words "on either the Atlantic or the Pacific Coast."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "party," in line 21, it is proposed to insert "on either the Atlantic or the Pacific Coast;" so as to read:

And not more than two of said torpedo boats shall be built in one yard or by one contracting party on either the Atlantic or the Pacific Coast

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to offer an amendment. On page 35, in line 14, after the word "librarian," I move to strike out "$1,400" and insert "$1,800."

This was recommended by the Board of Visitors at the last meeting, in June. This gentleman is a very competent officer. He has rendered faithful service for many years, and, in my judgment, he is entitled to the increase of salary.

Mr. HALE. The amendment proposes an increase of salary. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the international monetary conference bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 2, 1897, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 1, 1897.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to suggest that the Clerk read a portion of the Journal as corrected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The call of committees was proceeded with.
The Speaker stated that when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called, Mr. PATTERSON had desired to be recognized; and directed, by the consent of the House, that this committee be again called.

The SPEAKER. It was done by consent of the House, and the Chair desires that fact to appear. Without objection, the Journal as read, with this correction, will be approved.

Mr. BRUMM. What committee was that?

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It was intended to be called again, but by some accident it was not.

There was no objection, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2232) to vacate Sugar Loaf reservoir site, in Colorado, and to restore the lands contained in the same to entry; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 10122) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia," passed August 3, 1894;

A bill (H. R. 10290) for the relief of Joseph P. Patton;

A bill (H. R. 4310) for the relief of Mathias Pederson;

A bill (H. R. 9976) to punish the impersonation of inspectors of the health and other departments of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 610) for the relief of John F. McRae;

A bill (H. R. 8443) to amend section 4878 of the Revised Statutes, relating to burials in national cemeteries;

A bill (H. R. 5183) granting an increase of pension to Wesley A. Pletcher;

A bill (H. R. 5597) for the relief of Charles Deal; and

A bill (H. R. 9184) for the relief of Thomas W. Scott, late United States marshal.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. 9101) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Montgomery Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River near the city of Montgomery, Ala.," approved March 1, 1893;

A bill (H. R. 10289) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898; and

A bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (S. R. 209) regulating the distribution of public documents; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7469) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River to the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Accounts to present the following privileged report.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the gentleman to withhold that a moment, and let me make a motion touching a general appropriation bill.

Mr. TRACEY. I withhold it.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, and that the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10292) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to suspend the rules, to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and ask for a committee of conference.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of getting an explanation, I demand a second.

Mr. CANNON. Let it be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is proceeding upon the supposition that the House does not demand the reading of the amendments.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the amendments.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I do not desire to delay the bill at all, but as to whether there is to be a disagreement or not, I think the House ought to know something about the Senate amendments.

Mr. CANNON. I think my colleague had better let it go; there will be an opportunity to discuss any controverted matters on the first conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] demands a second.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.. The Clerk will read the Senate amendments.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the amendments.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Pending that request, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from the gentleman in charge of the bill how many points of disagreement there are; and I would like to know in a general way what they are. There may be some of those amendments that we may want to agree to.

Mr. CANNON. I would state——

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of order. We can not hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken. Gentlemen will take their seats and cease conversation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I will state in reply to my colleague that there seems to be 192 Senate amendments to this appropriation bill. A number of them are formal; to some of them, in my judgment, there is no objection. There are those to which I think there is much objection. Under ordinary conditions I would, instead of making this motion, after the bill should be printed and the Senate amendments numbered, which has not yet been done, move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the Senate amendments, and give one, two, three, or four days, as the case might be, according to the pleasure of the Committee of the Whole, for the consideration of these amendments. But this is the 1st day of March. At noon on the 4th day, as the gentleman is aware, this Congress expires. There is to follow this the general deficiency bill, the naval bill, not yet acted on by the Senate, and the Post-Office bill, which has just come over. The result is that it will be impossible, if these bills are to be passed at all, to pursue the course that I have just indicated. Therefore I do not see any way to dispose of these bills except in the first instance to nonconcur in all the Senate amendments, let the bill go to conference, and when the conference committee reports, if the report does not suit the House, it can be rejected. But let me say to my friend, I think I know the Senate amendments about which there will be a contest in the House; and if I shall have any influence with the House conferees, and I believe the House conferees will substantially agree as to the proper policy, the amendments about which there would be a real contest would be reported without an agreement, so that upon that report, with all matters eliminated by the report of agreement, they would come up for the adoption of the House if it sees proper to adopt them. We can then have the printed bill, with the amendments properly numbered, and then there will be the real debate and the real consideration, and the House may disagree to or agree to them, as the case may be.

Mr. SAYERS. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I heartily concur with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], who has charge of this bill. If the House desires to facilitate the passage of a proper sundry civil appropriation bill, and that this bill should not fail, then I believe that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois ought to prevail, and that the House ought to send this bill immediately into conference, and I sincerely trust that the House, and especially members upon this side, will sustain the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to put it into conference.

Mr. MEREDITH. We do not know what the amendments are.

Mr. SAYERS. As stated by the gentleman in charge of the bill, an opportunity will be given to vote upon all important amendments about which there can be any dispute.

Mr. PEARSON. Separately?

Mr. SAYERS. Separately; and I want to say to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MEREDITH] that if the House refuses to adopt the motion of the gentleman from Illinois and this bill is thrown into Committee of the Whole, the probability is that it will never reach the President.

Mr. MEREDITH. I do not desire anything of that kind, but my idea is that there are some of these amendments that the House may desire to adopt, and if this bill goes to a conference and those amendments should be knocked out, then the House, in my judgment, would not have an opportunity to vote upon them.

Mr. SAYERS. After this explanation, Mr. Speaker, the House can, of course, do as it pleases.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, in demanding a second to the motion made by my colleague [Mr. CANNON], I had no desire to delay this bill going to conference. My desire was simply to take this occasion to emphasize the bad practice that is indulged in by the Appropriations Committee in waiting until the closing hours of the session to bring in, and ask the House to dispose of, in this hurried manner, bills that carry $50,000,000. I appreciate all that my colleague has said about the importance of having this bill become a law, but here are 192 amendments, according to his statement, that have been made by the Senate, and he asks this House to disagree to all those amendments without considering one of them, or having one of them read, and without the House knowing anything about their contents or their merits. If this bill had been brought in at an earlier day in the session, and had been properly considered, many of these questions that cause so much trouble in conference could be settled in the House. Gentlemen will remember that during last session, on one of these bills, the House, after repeated conferences, was required practically to take the bill out of the hands of the House conferees and adopt the Senate amendments, one by one, in order to get the bill disposed of. Now, as I say, I do not propose to antagonize the motion made by my colleague, but I do think this is a vicious practice that has grown up here in the House.

Mr. LACEY. Is it not true that every member has had laid upon his desk this morning all of these amendments and has had full opportunity to read them and to know just what is involved in the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]?

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. No, sir; there is not one of these amendments that has been laid upon the desk of any member.

Mr. LACEY. They are all in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, fully reported; every one of them.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Well, the gentleman knows or ought to know, for he has served here long enough to know, that members have not had an opportunity, with the other duties devolved upon them in connection with committee work, to look these amendments over. That is all I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, and I do not, as I said before, wish to antagonize the motion of my colleague that this bill be sent to a conference.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a word in explanation of my motion and by way of reply to my colleague [Mr. HOPKINS]. This is the short session of Congress. Members of the House understand that when these great supply bills, originating with many committees of the House, are considered at the short session, necessarily the three months' time of the session (with two weeks vacation in the three months) must have passed before all the bills can be disposed of, and that they could not be passed at all in that time unless the various committees reporting them had the greatest familiarity with their contents and had prepared them with great care. Now, what is the fact? Two weeks ago to-day this bill passed the House and went to the Senate. It is not parliamentary for me to criticise the coordinate branch of Congress, and I would not if I could. Suffice it to say that it was almost midnight last night before this bill passed the Senate, with these 192 amendments. Now, it is for the House to choose. Measuring my words, I say that if this bill is to pass at all at this session, it must pass by the proceeding I have proposed, with, later on, the opportunity to have a contest in the House, item by item, upon important amendments, where there is a real difference between the two Houses.

Now, sir, respectfully and courteously, let me say that I do not receive in a meek and lowly spirit the reprimand and discipline that my honorable colleague [Mr. HOPKINS] seeks to give me touching former conduct of this bill, especially when he is pleased to make the statement that at the last session of Congress this bill was taken from the committee——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I did not say this bill; I said one of these appropriation bills.

Mr. CANNON. Well, this is the bill that carried the items, and the gentleman said that the House concurred in the Senate amendments over the objections of the committee. Yes, I will say to the gentleman, the House did concur in the end with many Senate amendments, the Senate insisting. The House concurred after full discussion and three or four conferences. When there was plenty of time, your conferees, being the same then as they will be on this bill, reported matters back to the House time and again, and the House performed its function touching this important matter. And I am glad of it, because it is the duty of this House, touching matters of real difference, to settle them for itself and not have them settled surreptitiously by a committee of conference. So that my friend and colleague, if he had thought of the merits surrounding that contest, would not have sought to discipline me or my committee upon that matter.

Now, if there are no further remarks to be made——

Mr. PEARSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] whether the Senate amendments increase the appropriations as made by the House. Is there an increase or a net reduction?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I think there is a very considerable increase.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, my remarks were not directed personally to the gentleman in charge of this bill. Where they touched upon the manner in which these bills have been brought into the House they were directed against the committee, not against any individual members. And the criticism that I made respecting the bills of this class in the last session of the House might be very properly applied to this. There is a bill [holding up a copy of the sundry civil appropriation bill] which, when it passed the House, carried over $50,000,000. Yet it was brought in at so late a day that the gentleman in charge of the bill made an appeal to members of this House that it should be passed under a suspension of the rules, and members who were clamoring to have it considered section by section, so that they might be able to offer and discuss amendments, were deprived of that opportunity under the plea that owing to the lateness of the day when this bill was brought in, it was important, if it were to become a law, that it be passed under a suspension of the rules.

Now, I am protesting against that practice, not criticising my colleagues here. I insist that these great bills which appropriate millions of the people's money, as this bill does, should be brought in here at an hour and a day early enough to permit each individual member to express himself upon the several appropriations as they are proposed. The gentleman knows as well as I that no individual member has had any opportunity upon this bill to exercise the free rights of a member on this floor regarding any of the appropriations in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Speaker, a word in conclusion. The gentleman now shifts his attack from me personally to the committee over which I have the honor to preside.

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I deny that statement. I made no personal attack. The gentleman can not put me in that position.

Mr. CANNON. Very well; then I will say no more about that. The gentleman then makes his attack upon the committee over which I have the honor to preside. In reply to that attack, I say to him, I do not accept it for my committee. That committee has been constant in work from the time this session began up to the present, touching these bills. It was impossible to prepare them at an earlier day. I will not speak of the laxity of work, if there has been laxity, elsewhere. But here is the condition: 192 amendments; three days and a few hours until the close of this Congress.

The gentleman complains that the bill was passed under a suspension of the rules. His complaint is against the House. It took two-thirds of this House to pass the bill. It takes two-thirds of this House to-day to concur in these amendments; and I am trying to address myself to the common sense and judgment of two-thirds of the members when I ask them to adopt the motion which I make to suspend the rules and send this bill to a committee of conference. The gentleman does not seem to antagonize that position; he seems to accept it in the present condition; but he comes with an "if" and a "but" and a "wherefore" and a "notwithstanding"——

Mr. HOPKINS of Illinois. I accept the situation under the emergency you present.

Mr. CANNON. Some one has said that a child can ask more questions in a minute than a sage can answer in time and eternity. [Laughter.] It is easy to criticise. My honorable colleague knows about the short session. He understands about the methods of legislation. He has been here for many, many years; and I only want to say to him, courteously and respectfully, that while his remarks and mine will both adorn the RECORD [laughter], the situation is as I have stated it, and I now ask a vote.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading of the amendments? The Chair hears none.

The question being taken, the motion to suspend the rules, so as to nonconcur with the Senate amendments and ask for a committee of conference, was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. CANNON, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, and Mr. SAYERS.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUD. I move that the House nonconcur in the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 10289, the Post-Office appropriation bill, and ask for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendments.

Mr. LOUD. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. LOUD that the House nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask a conference, it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. LOUD, Mr. SMITH of Illinois, and Mr. KYLE as conferees on the part of the House.

PAY OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker, I now present a report from the Committee on Accounts, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the session employees heretofore authorized by resolution reported by the Committee on Accounts and adopted by the House, to be paid from the contingent fund of the House, be paid for the same number of days as is authorized by the legislative appropriation bill approved May 28, 1896, for the session employees authorized by that act.

Mr. TRACEY. I ask that the report of the committee accompanying the resolution be read.

The report was read, as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred House resolution No. 553, for the payment of such session employees of the House as have been heretofore authorized by resolutions reported by this committee and adopted by the House, as other session employees are paid, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to report: That the session employees mentioned in the resolution were employed because the public service required additional clerical and other force to that provided for in the legislative appropriation bill approved May 28, 1896. That such additional clerical employees were required to and did perform the same services as have been performed by the session clerks provided for in the appropriation bill as aforesaid. Your committee therefore are unable to see any reason why the session employees authorized by resolution of the House and paid from the contingent fund should not be paid for the same number of days as is provided in the legislative appropriation bill for the session employees therein specified. By reason of these facts your committee report the resolution favorably and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand this to be a privileged resolution. I wish to examine it for a moment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman raise the point of order that it is not a privileged report?

Mr. DOCKERY. I see that it provides for the payment out of the contingent fund. I find I was in error.

Mr. TRACEY. There is a report also, Mr. Speaker, giving the names of the employees affected by this resolution and their assignment, which I ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Employees who are employed by the session and paid from contingent fund:
Herman Schriener, assistant clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs, at $6 per day.
Joseph E. Hall, assistant clerk to the Committee on Naval Affairs, at $6 per day.
J. P. Burrows, assistant clerk to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, at $6 per day.
W. T. Sullivan, assistant clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, at $6 per day.
Bessie M. Ridenour, assistant clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, at $6 per day.
John A. Miller, assistant clerk to the Committee on Claims, at $6 per day.
L. E. Bridgeman, messenger in the post-office, at $100 per month.
Joseph Hammon, laborer in post-office, at $60 per month.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COX. Before the gentleman proceeds, will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TRACEY. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Are not the employees whose names are provided in this special appropriation already in the employ and pay of the Government?

Mr. TRACEY. They are.

Mr. COX. And this means additional pay over and above the salaries now given to them by the Government?

Mr. TRACEY. I will explain that to the gentleman in a moment. These eight persons whose names have been mentioned here were employed by a resolution of the House, and were employed because their services were necessary. Six of them are clerks to committees. They have been performing precisely the same services as similar session employees which are provided for in the legislative appropriation bill. In that bill it is provided that all of the session employees of the House shall receive pay for one hundred and twenty-one days. That has been the uniform custom of the House.

Now, these session employees, under a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury—these men employed by a resolution of the House itself—have been cut off with only eighty-nine days. Since they have been performing exactly the same services as those employees provided for in the legislative bill, the Committee on Accounts can not see any reason, and I can not see any reason, why they should not receive the same compensation. This resolution, therefore, simply provides that these eight employees—six of them committee clerks—shall receive the same pay, that is, pay for one hundred and twenty-one days, provided for the other session employees under the legislative appropriation bill. That is all this bill does.

Mr. LOUD. Why were they cut down to eighty-nine days?

Mr. TRACEY. By a ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. LOUD. That is—and let us be frank about it—because they were not authorized by law; that there was no legislation for their employment.

Mr. TRACEY. That is correct.

Mr. LOUD. Now, the gentleman says they were performing this work?

Mr. TRACEY. They were.

Mr. LOUD. One of them is a clerk to the Committee on Claims, is he not?

Mr. TRACEY. I think not.

Mr. BRUMM. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. LOUD. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims what time did that committee organize?

Mr. BRUMM. I can not answer that exactly from memory now, but I do know that he was employed there before he was formally appointed.

Mr. LOUD. I only ask that because I know that the Committee on Claims were not prepared to do business for some considerable time after this House organized.

Mr. BRUMM. Perhaps a couple of weeks.

Mr. TRACEY. With reference to the assistant clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs, I personally know about him, and he is one of the most efficient, one of the most industrious, and one of the most capable employees about the House.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Working often nights and Sundays.

Mr. TRACEY. Yes; working often nights and Sundays, and there is no reason in the world that I can see why he should not receive the same pay as a session employee, who does no more work, but who happens to be named in the legislative bill.

Mr. LOUD. With all due respect to the gentleman, I should like to say that there are very few committees in this House for which one gentleman can not perform the clerical work. I believe the Post-Office Committee has as much clerical work as the Military Committee, from my knowledge of affairs in this House.

Mr. TRACEY. We have a very large amount of work.

Mr. LOUD. Yet, let me say, the clerk of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads can perform the clerical work of that committee and of the chairman, and he is not worked to death, either. This, mind, is a proposition—and the House might just as well understand it—to give a few gentlemen pay for a period during which they perform no service for the Government. I believe they will come under the amendment to the sundry civil bill, to give a month's extra pay to employees at the end of this session.

Mr. BRUMM. Does the gentleman mean to say a month's extra pay over and above this?

Mr. LOUD. Why certainly, they having been on the roll at a certain date, they will be entitled to a month's extra pay just the same as the rest.

Mr. BRUMM. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof. The gentleman is anticipating.

Mr. LOUD. Oh, I am anticipating a certainty.

Mr. HULICK. The only reason, as I understand, why the gentleman [Mr. TRACEY] asks for this appropriation is because other employees before this time received this additional amount. That is the only reason, is it not?

Mr. TRACEY. The only reason on earth why I ask for the passage of this resolution is because I believe in the spirit of fairness and justice.

Mr. HULICK. The question that occurs to me is that the House should consider whether this is due to these employees. Do they deserve it? It is not a question whether it was given to other employees and therefore should be given to these.

Mr. TRACEY. The House has already determined that nineteen of its session employees shall be paid for one hundred and twenty-one day's services in this session.

Mr. HULICK. But the question that presents itself is, Was that a right and proper thing to do?

Mr. TRACEY. Why, the House has determined that it is right, and that question is settled.

Mr. HULICK. But we are not determining that now. We are only determining the question as to what we shall do in the present case.

Mr. WASHINGTON. That has already been determined, and is the law.

Mr. TRACEY. The House having been right in its determination to pay the nineteen employees for one hundred and twenty-one days, it can not but be right in doing the same for these eight other session employees.

Mr. HULICK. Now, another question. Will they receive the additional extra pay for one month, if that item comes over in the appropriation bill, as has been stated by the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD]?

Mr. TRACEY. Certainly not. They get simply what this resolution provides.

Mr. LOUD. Let me say that I am anticipating a certainty, just as sure as the sun will rise to-morrow, and the gentleman well knows it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Do I understand from the gentleman from California that there is a provision which embraces these employees among those who are to receive an extra month's pay?

Mr. LOUD. Why, the gentleman, if he had read the RECORD, would find that such an amendment has been included in the sundry civil bill in the Senate, and the gentleman has had experience enough to know that the Senate never allows an appropriation bill to pass without taking care of its employees.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, is not the real purpose of the committee to give an extra month's pay to these men as is given to the others?

Mr. TRACEY. That is the purpose.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then, if the Senate amendment is adopted, and I have no doubt it will be——

Mr. LOUD. The gentleman knows it will be.

Mr. MCMILLIN. As the gentleman from California says, it will be, it gives these employees two month's extra pay. It gives them this certain; and if the other is adopted, does not the gentleman think they will get another? Does not the gentleman think it would be well to hold this up to see what will be the fate of that Senate amendment?

Mr. TRACEY. Let me state, in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee, that I think the gentleman from California is mistaken in stating that there is any amendment pending in the Senate for the payment of these House session employees.

Mr. LOUD. It takes in all the employees.

Mr. TRACEY. There is no such amendment pending in the Senate.

Mr. HULICK. It has already passed.

Mr. TRACEY. These session employees were not included in the bill. The Comptroller of the Treasury does not include these employees who are employed by resolution of the House.

Mr. LOUD. Why not?

Mr. TRACEY. Because he says it does not, and he is the law.

Mr. LOUD. That amendment says every employee on the roll on the 1st of February.

Mr. TRACEY. But the Comptroller holds that that does not include employees employed under resolution of the House, and has so decided, and this is introduced on that distinct understanding.

Mr. MILNES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TRACEY. Certainly.

Mr. MILNES. The proposition is to give these special employees an extra month's pay. Now, if this House has an extra session, or an extra session of Congress is called to meet on the 15th of this month, the House will be paying two sets of men for the same duty performed during that month.

Mr. TRACEY. I do not so understand. This is not paying these men for duty they are to perform hereafter. It is paying them in accordance with what the House determines to be right—that these session employees shall be paid an extra month for extra services that they have performed, not what they are going to do.

Mr. MILNES. They are to be paid for services that they have not performed.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TRACEY. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. I have the provision before me, which has already been incorporated on the sundry civil bill. This is the provision. Gentlemen can see whether it embraces these employees or not:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of February, 1897, including the Capitol police, the Official Reporters of the Senate and of the House, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, for extra services during the Fifty-fourth Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available.

That is the provision. I think the gentleman will see, as they are session employees, that they are embraced in the provision of the resolution. I submit to him whether on consideration he will not put that interpretation upon it himself?

Mr. COX. If my colleague will allow me, these special employees that you are speaking of—does any member of this House know what extra duty has been imposed upon them? They accepted the positions and were willing to perform the duty when they accepted it.

Mr. TRACEY. I desire to say, in reply to the paragraph read by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], just what I have heretofore said. The disbursing clerk of the House has communicated with the Comptroller of the Treasury in regard to that very matter, and he holds that the language read by the gentleman from Tennessee and in the bill only includes the session employees provided for in the appropriation bills, and not those employed or appointed by resolution of the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. Do I understand the Comptroller has interpreted this before it became a law?

Mr. TRACEY. He interpreted that before it became a law, because of the fact that this has been the uniform practice in the past.

Mr. BRUMM. That is the interpretation of the Comptroller of the provision.

Mr. McMILLIN. This is unquestionably for employees:

To pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of February, 1897, etc.

Mr. TRACEY. These are not borne on the session roll.

Mr. McMILLIN (continuing):

Including the Capitol police, the official reporters of the Senate and of the House, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, for extra services during the Fifty-fourth Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. TRACEY. I think the gentleman would see in a minute, if he would just reflect, that these session employees are not borne on the roll referred to there. They are paid out of the contingent fund of the House; the other session employees are paid out of an appropriation bill by an appropriation for that purpose. These men are not borne on the session rolls referred to in that law at all, and hence the Comptroller is right in holding that they do not come in under that provision. There is no question about it, and if these men are to be paid at all, it will have to be by a resolution of this kind, because those men are paid out of the contingent fund and not out of an appropriation bill.

Mr. WASHINGTON. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. TRACEY. Certainly.

Mr. WASHINGTON. I think that perhaps since the gentleman first made his statement the House may have lost sight of the fact that all the session employees borne upon the regular roll are by law paid at the short session for one hundred and twenty-one days; that is to say, for one month beyond the termination of the session. Now, by resolution of the House there are eight gentlemen in whom I have not the slightest interest except the desire to see justice done, who have been employed by authority of the House to do exactly the same kind of work that is done by the session employees who get paid for one hundred and twenty-one days, but, under a ruling of the Comptroller, these eight men, being appointed by resolution, can be paid for only eighty-seven days, thirty-four days less than the others; and it seems to me it is only just and fair to pay all the employees who do the same kind of work for the same number of days, and let us deal with the question of the month's extra pay by itself hereafter.

Mr. BRUMM. Especially as it is following the precedents heretofore set for years.

Mr. LACEY. Let me ask the gentleman in charge of this resolution a question. A number of these employees, the House will remember, were not employed until after the Christmas holidays. Under this resolution they will now get pay not only for the full session, but they will have one month added to their three months' pay if the resolution passes in this form. Am I right about that?

Mr. TRACEY. Certainly not; because their pay did not begin until they were employed.

Mr. LACEY. But this resolution says that they shall receive the same pay as provided in the act of 1896, and the act of 1896 gives the session employees three months' pay and one month's extra pay. In this way, by indirection, these men whom we did not put on the rolls until after the Christmas holidays will get the same pay that they would have received if they had been put on the rolls on the first day of the session, and, in addition thereto, one month's extra pay. That is the effect of the resolution in the form in which it is submitted to the House.

Mr. TRACEY. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. LACEY. I have just read the resolution, and I think there can be no question but that that will be the effect of it. If that is not the purpose in view, then the resolution ought to be rewritten, so that these employees should not, under any circumstances, receive more than one month's additional pay over and above what they would receive but for the passage of this resolution.

Mr. BRUMM. I think that is a fair amendment.

Mr. TRACEY. I have no objection to that amendment, because that was the intention.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I observe that this resolution does not make any provision at all for an extra month's salary for the clerks to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates. I will ask the gentleman if it does?

Mr. TRACEY. No.

Mr. HARTMAN. I want to ask the gentleman why it is that there is any discrimination made against them. Is there any class of employees of the Senate or of the House that performs any more satisfactory or efficient work than the clerks to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates? Now, I ask the gentleman if he will accept an amendment to include them? I want to ask him if, in his opinion, it would not be entirely just and equitable that such an amendment should be adopted to this resolution?

Mr. TRACEY. I could not accept that amendment.

Mr. HARTMAN. Upon what basis does the gentleman refuse to accept it?

Mr. TRACEY. Because this is an entirely different matter?

Mr. HARTMAN. Why is it different? Are not those clerks the employees of the various Senators, Members, and Delegates who constitute the House of Representatives and the Senate?

Mr. BRUMM. They are employed by the year, while these clerks are not.

Mr. HARTMAN. I understand; but I beg the gentleman's pardon, this resolution particularly says "employees borne upon the annual rolls of the House." Now, these clerks are annual employees. We are authorized to employ them annually. You provide for an extra month's compensation for every employee at both ends of the Capitol with the exception of the clerks to Members, Senators, and Delegates, and I repeat that there is no class of employees at either end who perform any more satisfactory or efficient service, and if we are going to be generous, let us be fair and just at the same time.

Mr. BRUMM. Let me suggest that the employees of the House have to stay here at least a couple of weeks to perfect their work, and they stay here at their own expense, while the individual clerks of Senators and Members go home and have practically nothing to do.

Mr. HARTMAN. My clerk does not go home.

Mr. BRUMM. Then that is because you have not your clerk living at home.

Mr. HARTMAN. No; it is because he stays here and performs his duty, as he ought to do.

Mr. BRUMM. I will go with the gentleman if he thinks it is right and the House thinks it is right to raise the salaries of those clerks if they are not high enough, but they ought not to come in on this resolution.

FORFEITED OPIUM.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McEWAN, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment the bill (H. R. 10203) to amend section 40 of "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, so as to authorize the sale of forfeited domestic smoking opium to the highest bidder; also that the Senate requested a conference with the House of Representatives on said amendment, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MORRILL, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. PLATT.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is desirable that the bill just received from the Senate go into conference immediately. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senate be nonconcurred in and the request of the Senate for a conference agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill just received from the Senate will be taken up.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the Senate will be read.

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask that the reading of the amendment be omitted. As the bill passed the House, it authorized the sale of opium when seized. The Senate has amended the bill so as to authorize the destruction of the opium. That is the only change.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ordered the reading of the amendment for the information of the House.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 7 strike out all after "and," down to and including "forfeiture," in 12, and insert "shall be destroyed."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] moves that the House nonconcur in the amendment of the Senate and agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. PAYNE, Mr. EVANS, and Mr. MCMILLIN as conferees on the part of the House.

PAY OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES.

Mr. TRACEY. In response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], I propose to amend this resolution as follows:

Strike out the words "the same number of days as is authorized by the legislative appropriation bill, approved May 28, 1896, for the session employees authorized by that act" and insert "one month extra for extra services performed, as are other session employees provided for in the legislative appropriation bill."

Now, if there is no further discussion desired, I will ask the previous question.

Mr. HARTMAN. Before the gentleman does that, I want to offer an amendment to this resolution, adding thereto one month's extra salary to the clerks of Senators, Representatives, and Delegates.

Mr. BRUMM. I object. Let that matter be brought in as a separate resolution.

Mr. TRACEY. That proposition can come in separately.

Mr. BRUMM. Why weigh this resolution down with that question?

Mr. HARTMAN. I am in favor of this resolution; and even if my amendment be defeated, I shall vote for the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. TRACEY] asks for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. I now ask that the proposition as proposed to be amended be read.

Mr. TRACEY. Let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. TRACEY.

Mr. HARTMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARTMAN. Is the amendment which I offered pending, or was it cut off by the ordering of the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The previous question had been moved before the gentleman presented his amendment.

Mr. HARTMAN. I understood the gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. TRACEY. Not to offer an amendment.

Mr. HARTMAN. Very well.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. TRACEY was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was adopted; there being on a division—ayes 58, noes 39.

PRINTING REPORTS OF DIRECTOR OF THE MINT.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to suspend the rules so as to adopt the resolution embraced in the report of the Committee on Printing which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration House joint resolution No. 258, providing for the printing of additional copies of the report of the Director of the Mint for 1896, of the report of the Production of Precious Metals for 1895, and of the Coinage Laws of the United States, report the following substitute, and recommend that the same be agreed to.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound in cloth 10,000 copies of the report of the Director of the Mint for 1896; 5,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint; 3,000 for the House of Representatives, and 2,000 for the Senate.

There shall also be printed and bound 3,000 copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the Production of Precious Metals for the year 1895, for the use of the Director of the Mint.

There shall also be printed and bound 5,000 copies of the Coinage Laws of the United States; 2,000 for the Director of the Mint, 2,000 for the House of Representatives, and 1,000 for the Senate.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of the work under this resolution as follows:

Ten thousand copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint for 1896, at $3,500.

Three thousand copies of the Report of the Director of the Mint on the Production of Precious Metals for 1895, at $1,200.

Five thousand copies of Coinage Laws of the United States, at $2,000.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, if there be no demand for a second on the motion to suspend the rules, I call for a vote.

The question being taken, the rules were suspended, and the resolution reported by Mr. PERKINS was adopted, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

INTERSTATE NATIONAL BANK, KANSAS CITY.

Mr. VAN HORN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (S. 3680) to provide for the removal of the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City from Kansas City, Kans., to Kansas City, Mo., was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City, located in Kansas City, county of Wyandotte, and State of Kansas, is hereby authorized to change its location to the city of Kansas City, county of Jackson and State of Missouri, by complying with the following provisions: Whenever the stockholders representing three-fourths of the capital stock of said bank, at a meeting called for that purpose, determine to make such change, the president and cashier shall execute a certificate under the corporate seal of the bank expressing such determination, and shall cause the same to be recorded in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and thereupon such change of location shall be effected, and the operations of discount and deposit and other business of said bank shall be carried on in the city of Kansas City, county of Jackson and State of Missouri.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as in any manner to release the said bank from any liability or effect in any action or proceeding in law in which the said bank may be a party or interested. And when such change shall have been determined upon, as aforesaid, notice thereof, and of such change, shall be published in two newspapers of general circulation in the city of Kansas City, Kans., not less than four weeks.

SEC. 3. That all the debts, demands, liabilities, rights, privileges, and powers, of the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City, now located in Kansas City, in the county of Wyandotte and State of Kansas, shall devolve upon the Interstate National Bank of Kansas City, of the city of Kansas City, county of Jackson and State of Missouri, whenever such change of location is effected.

Mr. VAN HORN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. CALDERHEAD) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred Senate bill 3680, respectfully report the same back to the House, with the recommendation that it concur in the Senate bill.

The bank referred to is located at the Kansas City stock yards, and has a capital of $1,000,000 and a surplus of $140,000, and transacts the banking for the cattle business there.

The bank is in a building situated on the State line, one part of the building being in the State of Kansas and the other part in the State of Missouri. It is desired to move the bank from the northwest corner of the building, which is in the State of Kansas, to the southeast corner of it, which is over the line in the State of Missouri. Under the general statute a national bank may move within the State where it is located a distance of not over 30 miles, with the consent of the Comptroller, but may not move farther than that, nor from one State to another.

It is because this removal is across the State line that it requires the sanction of a special act.

The committee are of opinion that the bill protects all the legal rights and obligations of all the parties interested in it, and therefore unanimously recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. LOUD. Which way is it proposed to move this bank—into Kansas or out of it?

Mr. VAN HORN. Out of it.

Mr. LOUD. Well, I think that is right. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I understand that this bill has been recommended by the Comptroller of the Currency and is satisfactory to all parties interested.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, there is one point about this bill that I want to have clearly understood. The line of demarcation, it seems, runs through the House of this banking corporation; and the only object of the bill, as I understand it, is to transfer the bank from one State to another.

Mr. VAN HORN. From one room to another.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the same building.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is all right.

Mr. COX. But I want the point clearly reserved that no liability or jurisdiction shall be disturbed by the passage of the bill.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is amply provided for in the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. It seems to be fully met in the provisions of the bill as read.

Mr. VAN HORN. And it meets the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. VAN HORN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MRS. WELTHA POST LEGGETT.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2194) granting a pension to Mrs. Weltha Post Leggett.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MILNES, Mr. DALZELL, Mr. TALBERT and others demanded the reading of the report.

The report was read at length.

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. Before consent is given, I wish to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why is this bill taken up by a sort of undue preference out of its order and brought in for consideration at this time? I understand that it has not been considered at a Friday night session. There are unquestionably a number of pension bills so considered that should be brought before the House for its action if any are to be considered.

But, of course, Mr. Speaker, the power lies with the majority to determine the matter, although I think that gentlemen on the other side of the House ought to object to any unfair preference in the case of any pension bills. Let us consider them fairly and in due and proper order. But it lies with gentlemen on the other side to object to such preference if they think it improper.

Mr. TALBERT. I would like to ask if this is not the grant of a new pension?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. She is not receiving any pension now, I will state to the gentleman.

Mr. TALBERT. And why has she not applied through the regular channels?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I will answer the gentleman by saying that in view of the very exceptional services rendered by her distinguished husband—and I think I may say without exaggeration that of the volunteer officers none except General Logan won a worthier or higher record than he—that in view of these exceptional services it seems to be only a proper mark of consideration to this widow for Congress to grant this pension directly, as it has done in many other cases.

Mr. TALBERT. But why did she not go to the Pension Bureau and get her bill through there? I suppose the object is to get $50 per month, whereas she would get but $30 from the Department under the general law. That seems to have been the uniform practice here.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. The gentleman will observe from the reading of the report——

Mr. MILNES. Mr. Speaker, I have utterly failed to get recognition for the pension of a private soldier on this floor, a man who fought in the ranks and suffered injury there, and therefore I object.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon his objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

LIFE-SAVING MEDAL TO DANIEL E. LYNN.

Mr. SNOVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 100, granting a life-saving medal to Daniel E. Lynn, of Port Huron, Mich.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to bestow upon Daniel E. Lynn, of the city of Port Huron, Mich., a gold life-saving medal in recognition of his heroic services in the attempt to rescue the crew of the schooner William Shupe on the 19th day of May, 1894.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BARTLETT of New York. I would ask for the reading of the report, reserving the right to object.

The report (by Mr. WANGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 100) granting a life-saving medal to Daniel E. Lynn, of Port Huron, Mich., respectfully report having carefully considered the measure, are of the opinion that it should pass without amendment for the reasons set forth in Senate Report No. 602.

This resolution is identical with House Resolution No. 223, heretofore favorably reported by the committee (House Report No. 2814), and we suggest that it be substituted for the same.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, and ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SNOVER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

THOMAS ROSBRUGH.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 459) for the relief of Thomas Rosbrugh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of the General Land Office be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to permit Thomas Rosbrugh, of St. Clair County, Mo., to enter 160 acres of public land, subject to entry under the homestead or settlement laws, not mineral, nor in the actual occupation of any settler, in lieu of the southeast quarter of section 24, in township 38, of range 27 west, in St. Clair County Mo., which land was entered by said Thomas Rosbrugh on December 21, 1869, under the homestead laws, said entry being reported to be without conflict by instruction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the date of January 22, 1870, the title to half of which land failed because of a prior disposition of the same, which did not then appear upon the records of the Land Office, and the entry of said Rosbrugh was canceled: Provided, however, That the said Thomas Rosbrugh shall not have made any other entry of land of the United States under the homestead laws: And provided further, That a final certificate and patent shall issue to the said Thomas Rosbrugh, or his legal heirs or representatives, upon such entry as he may make hereunder, without proof of residence or cultivation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DE ARMOND, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 8443) to amend section 4878 of the Revised Statutes relating to burials in national cemeteries;

A bill (H. R. 4310) for the relief of Mathis Pedersen;

A bill (H. R. 10122) to amend an act entitled "An act to prohibit the interment of bodies in Graceland Cemetery, in the District of Columbia," passed August 3, 1894;

A bill (H. R. 9976) to punish the impersonation of inspectors of the health and other departments of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. 5597) for the relief of Charles Deal;

A bill (H. R. 8582) to allow the bottling of distilled spirits in bond;

A bill (H. R. 7469) for the removal of snow and ice from the sidewalks, cross walks, and gutters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 5183) granting an increase of pension to Wesley A. Pletcher;

A bill (H. R. 9184) for the relief of Thomas W. Scott, late United States marshal;

A bill (H. R. 10290) for the relief of Joseph P. Patton;

A bill (H. R. 610) for the relief of John F. McRae;

A bill (H. R. 3623) to amend section 4 of an act entitled "An act to define the jurisdiction of the police court of the District of Columbia;"

A bill (S. 2232) to vacate Sugar Loaf reservoir site, in Colorado, and to restore the lands contained in the same to entry;

A bill (S. 3561) to grant a right of way through the Fort Spokane Military Reservation, in the State of Washington, to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company;

A bill (S. 1743) to establish an additional land office in the State of Montana; and

A bill (S. 3721) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge across the St. Lawrence River.

CHESTER B. SWEET.

Mr. BARHAM. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 927) for the relief of Chester B. Sweet, of California.

The bill was read.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, let us have the report on that bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

EDWARD C. SPOFFORD.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6730) granting a pension to Edward C. Spofford, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

ANNA G. VALK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7055) increasing the pension of Anna G. Valk, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The bill and the amendment of the Senate were read.

Mr. BLUE. Mr. Speaker, what is the rank of the officer whose widow is named in this bill?

The SPEAKER. The rank is that of surgeon.

Mr. LOUD. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

ALPHONZO O. DRAKE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7205) granting a pension to Alphonzo O. Drake, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that these bills have been considered in Committee of the Whole and have passed the House; that they have Senate amendments to them, and in that way become in order now.

The SPEAKER. They are House bills with Senate amendments, which are now returned to the House for its action.

LYDIA W. HOLLIDAY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 7422) granting a pension to Lydia W. Holliday, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The bill and the Senate amendment were read.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, what is the usual pension given to army nurses under the law?

Mr. CROWTHER. Twelve dollars a month.

Mr. LOUD. Then I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. PICKLER. Before that motion is put, I should like to ask what is the Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. It strikes qut "thirty" dollars and inserts "twenty" dollars.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope the gentleman will not move to refer the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. LOUD. I think that is the proper body to consider this matter.

Mr. PICKLER. I have no personal knowledge of this; but I understand that this woman is 93 years old, and that the case is a peculiar one. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion to refer to the committee, and let us vote on the motion to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. LOUD. I shall not withdraw the motion.

Mr. PICKLER. Then I hope it will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The question is on referring the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. PICKLER) there were—ayes 32, noes 56.

Mr. TALBERT. No quorum, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER (after having counted the House). One hundred and forty-two members are present, not a quorum. Under the rules of the House the yeas and nays will be considered as ordered, and at the same time there will be a call of the House. Those present and desiring to vote will answer "yea", or "nay" when their names are called, and those desiring to be recorded as present will announce that they are present. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. PICKLER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to inquire what is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is, Shall the bill be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 62, nays 191, answered "Present" 17, not voting 102; as follows:

So the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions was rejected.

Mr. BARRETT. I wish to vote.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARRETT. I desire to vote, or to be recorded as present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can be recorded as present.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to vote. I was in the Hall on the second roll call.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman listening when his name should have been called, and failed to hear it?

Mr. SWANSON. I can not say that I was listening. I desire to be recorded as present.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will record the gentleman as present.

Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky. I desire to be recorded as present. I voted "yea."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his vote, and will be recorded as present.

Mr. DINSMORE. Mr. Speaker, I am informed my name was called on the second roll call. I was present, and answered "present" on the first roll call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be recorded as present.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CANNON with Mr. SAYERS.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts with Mr. BOATNER.

Mr. KULP with Mr. SHAW.

Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts with Mr. SPARKMAN.

Mr. MCCLURE with Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. BARRETT with Mr. CATCHINGS.

For this day:

Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE with Mr. NEILL.

The following-named gentlemen answered "present" when their names were called: Mr. BARRETT, Mr. COOPER of Florida, Mr. COX, Mr. CHICKERING, Mr. DALZELL, Mr. DANFORD, Mr. DINSMORE, Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana, Mr. MCCALL of Massachusetts, Mr. MCCREARY of Kentucky, Mr. MCRAE, Mr. OWENS, Mr. PAYNE, Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. WILLIAM A. STONE, and Mr. SWANSON.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT ST. LOUIS.

Mr. MURPHY of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report on the bill H. R. 2698, and ask for its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman presents a privileged report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2698) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, from some suitable point between the north line of St. Clair County, Ill., and the southwest line of said county, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreements of the Senate and agree to the same and the Senate agree to the same.

E. J. MURPHY,
JOSIAH PATTERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

G. G. VEST,
S. B. ELKINS,
JOHN P. JONES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

In explanation of this report your conferees beg to submit the following statement:

That amendment numbered 1 permits those interested in the navigation of the Mississippi River to be heard as to the location of the bridge, before the board of United States engineers provided for in the bill, which reports to the Secretary of War.

Amendment numbered 2 provides that in no case shall the bridge be located within three-fourths of a mile of any other bridge on said river.

Amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, and 6 provide that said bridge, to be constructed, shall consist of but one span, if located below the Eads Bridge.

Amendment 7 is a grammatical correction.

Amendments 8, 9, 10, and 11 strike out words in the bill from which it might be inferred that said bridge might be owned and operated by individuals.

Amendment 12 is a grammatical correction.

Amendment 13 strikes out surplus words "in either event."

Amendment 14 strikes out section 11, which gave the right of eminent domain to the corporation chartered.

Amendment 15 strikes out section 12, which authorized the corporation chartered to borrow money.

Amendments 16 and 17 simply changes numbers of the sections so as to be, as amended, in numerical order.

E. J. MURPHY,
Conferee on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, if it is in order, I now move that the House concur in the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 7422) granting a pension to Lydia W. Holliday.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate amendment was concurred in.

HATTIE A. BATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 4903) entitled "An act for the relief of Hattie A. Bates," with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

The Senate amendment, inserting after "Bates" the words "dependent and helpless," was read.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, is that a conference report?

The SPEAKER. It is not a conference report; it is a House bill with a Senate amendment.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Speaker, as I understand that the Senate amendment merely inserts the words "dependent and helpless," I move that the House concur.

The motion was agreed to; and Senate amendment was concurred in.

CHARLOTTE WEIRER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 2689) granting a pension to Charlotte Weirer, with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ALABAMA RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 9101) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Montgomery Bridge Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River, near the city of Montgomery, Ala., approved March 1, 1893," with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

HARRIET WOODBURY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 1299, entitled "An act to pension Harriet Woodbury, of Windsor, Vt."

The beneficiary named in this bill was the wife of Aaron G. Firman at the time of his enlistment in 1863. He died October 2, 1864, and the beneficiary, as his widow, was pensioned in 1865, from the day of her soldier husband's death.

She continued to receive the pension allowed to her as such widow until July 14, 1869, when she married Samuel H. Woodbury. She was thereupon dropped from the pension roll pursuant to law, and in 1868 the minor son of the soldier was allowed a pension of $8 a month, commencing at the date of the remarriage of his mother. This pension was increased to $10 a month in 1873, from July 25, 1868, and was continued until 1880, when the minor child reached the age of 16 years.

On July 26, 1886, twenty years after the beneficiary ceased to be the widow of the soldier Aaron G. Firman, and became the wife of the civilian Samuel H. Woodbury, he died and she became his widow.

It is now proposed by this bill to pension her again as the widow of the deceased soldier, notwithstanding her voluntary abandonment of that relation to become the wife of another, more than thirty years ago.
